Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, November 23 — Born today, you are one of those highly articulate individuals who never leave any doubt as to what their feelings are, whether the subject at hand be people, places, things, situations, ideas, circumstances, or whatever. You believe first and foremost in honesty, in telling it precisely as you see it. At the same time, you are first to admit that the way you see it may not be the way it should be seen — whatever "it" may be in any given case — or the way it is seen by others. In other words, you are independent in your thought and quick to express what those thoughts are — at the same time that you allow others exactly the same privilege.

You possess some erratic tendencies, especially in your relationships with others, for you are somewhat inclined to be overly influenced by outside events, allowing your friendship for one person to another to vary in intensity accordingly. All of which creates within you keenly felt emotional upheavals, for while you may increase or decrease your feelings of attachment to another, you cannot lessen the degree of loyalty you feel. Thus you may at times go against your own intellectual wishes in favor of heartfelt desires.

You are much inclined toward leadership, finding it difficult at times to follow the directives of others. You sometimes wish for a more pliable nature than you have — but at the same time you are apt to look with scorn upon those who adapt too readily to changing situaiions and circumstances around them. You gain great security from the sameness of things, though you may hate to admit this.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A very busy day may keep you from socializing iwth coworkers, even though to do so could benefit you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Guard against accident early in the day. You would do well to take into your confidence one who has experience in your present involvement.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Prepearations for tomorrow make this a hectic time for you. Don't allow children to upset you unduly. Act as moderator at evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Another's aid may hurt rather than enhance your chances for success at this time. You would do well to act on your own volition.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Seek the counsel of one more qualified than you to attempt the work you are presently attempting. Success appears possible later in the day.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — General health conditions must be guarded at this time. Don't encourage any activity that leaves you open to illness.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Quarrels within the home may range over many apparent subjects; beneath it all, however, the topics are all the same. Solutions appear.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Social activities late in the day bring some relief from many hours of labor in the interest of family fun.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A favorable period for a family get-together may work a hazarrd on your relationships outside the home. Seek to lessen detrimental aspects.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take a central position where family argument is concerned. Don't be overly concerned by far-out-views of the very young.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — All manner of social activities are favored at this time. Make it a point to contact those who are alone; invite them to share family fun.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) — An unimportant move toward another in advance of an invitation to do so may cause you to lose out where important moves are concerned.

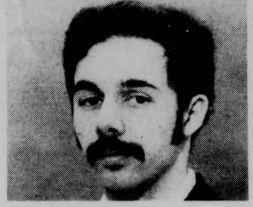
John Calabria silences the jokers

By SUSAN CANTWELL
Special to the Collegian



John Calabria

Their jokes are rampant when the mostly male audience applauds every afternoon in Boyden gymnasium when assistant coach John Calabria works out with the 12 members of the women's gymnastic team.

Twelve months a year, six days a week, the 5'7", 150 pound bachelor spends three hours a day lifting, guiding and catching the women.

"I teach the necessary skills to compose routines for the four women's events: the horse-vaulting, uneven parallel bars, balance beam, and the floor exercise," Calabria said. "I make certain practice runs smoothly and I make sure the apparatus is adjusted properly."

Before Sept. 1973, when Calabria became the women's assistant coach, he was the assistant coach for the UMass men's gymnastic team for a year.

"When I began teaching women's gymnastics at summer gym camps, I enjoyed it so much, I decided to seek a career in coaching women," he said.

His bright brown eyes twinkling, Calabria said, "Coach Virginia Evans asked me if I could work with the women's team since there was an available position — and here I am."

When asked which team he preferred instructing, men vs. women, he smiled, and jokingly said, "I refuse to answer on grounds that I have to go into the gym tomorrow and confront everyone. I want to remain friends." He then said, "Women have a much more emotional aspect which I must work with and work around which is often fatiguing."

"Women require a lot more spotting than men so I needed time to adjust to the coaching techniques required for them," Calabria said.

Contrary to what the jokes may suggest, Calabria's contact with the women is a professional one.

"When I'm in the gymnasium my main objective is to instruct them, which can't be achieved without their trust in me as an individual as well as a coach. I want each woman to achieve a fulfilling gymnastic experience."

His plan is to continue coaching "with the aspirations of becoming a head coach and eventually coach of a United States National Team."

With a Master's Degree in engineering in February of 1976 from the University of Mass., Calabria was graduated from UMass with a BS in zoology in 1972. As an undergraduate, he was a member of the men's gymnastic team for four years.

The Long Island, N.Y. native said, "I'm awaiting job interviews relating to my engineering major."

Scott leads new look Celts

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

Commentary

Who would have thought a few weeks before the basketball season began that the Boston Celtics would be starting Jim Ard at center, with Steve Kuberski and Sidney Wicks at forward? And who, indeed, would have thought that the usually spectacular, emotional, and unpredictable Charlie Scott would be one of the few stabilizing forces on the team?

Last season was Scott's first as a Celtic, and although they won the championship, Scott could not always be counted on to have a good game. He definitely helped the club, but rarely had what one could call a 'complete' game. As Scott was acclimating himself to his new teammates, he knew he had to shoot less, run his lane on the fast break, and play good defense. That was his biggest problem. Scott more often than not was in foul trouble, mostly early in games, and fouled out far too many times. And a lot of his fouls were foolish ones. This pattern continued into the playoffs, but he came through admirably in the three games that clinched each series Boston won.

This year is a whole different story. Charlie Scott has been the proverbial model of consistency, playing terrific defense, handing out many assists, and scoring about 20 points a game. He and fellow starting guard Jo Jo White have been the constants on the court for the Celtics thus far. The improvement in Scott is remarkable, and it is the key to the Boston attack right now, even though Charlie has had nagging injuries already.

Scott and White are naturally the ones to turn to now that Dave Cowens (who picked a hell of a time to skip town) is gone. The two form an outstanding backcourt and have much to do with the Celts' 4-2 record in Cowens' absence. If it is possible, Scott seems to have made White even better than he was before. They both now drive to the basket and shoot outside as well as anyone. But most importantly, they compliment each other and are a pleasure to watch.

It is clear if Boston is to win anything this year that Charlie Scott must continue to play the way he has. The picture changed drastically in the beginning. Paul Silas was traded for Curtis Rowe and Cowens suddenly left. They represent a lot of lost rebounds. After last season Don Nelson retired, and John Havlicek (now the all-time leader in games played) may not be capable of what he once was, so the Celts knew scoring would have to come from somewhere. The acquisition of stars Wicks and Rowe forced the cuts of Glenn McDonald and Jerome Anderson, two promising players who knew the Celtics' system. Wicks and Rowe are slowly getting accustomed to it, and everyone must adjust to Ard and Tom Boswell at center. The raw talent is certainly there, but a lack of playing together hurts.

Scott played nearly a perfect game in Boston's big win over Denver last week. He told reporters afterwards that, "With Dave (Cowens) we are a great team, and without him we have the potential to be great." Havlicek offered a more sober outlook. "We all have to play as hard as we can every night," he warned, "and when the games start piling up, that's an extremely difficult thing to do." Ard usually gives a pretty fair performance, but Boswell, who sometimes gives a nice little smile after scoring, must continue to get better with more playing time. As a duo they are not bad, but Detroit's Bob Lanier scored against them at will last Saturday night. In their first game sharing the pivot, they beat the Lakers and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. Ard (or is that Jim Ardul-Jabber?) even hit a couple of hook shots in that one. And tonight is an early season showdown with Philadelphia, who feature a fellow from these parts; a physician turned ballplayer, or something like that.

Charlie Scott

With Boswell and Ard at center, the Celts probably are not of championship calibre, but their fans can always hope. However, if it weren't for a new and improved Charlie Scott and a fluid Jo Jo White, they would have no right to hope for anything but making the playoffs.

Booters take stock— a dismal beginning, second half splurge

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

> When the One Great Scorer comes > to write against your name-
> He marks - not that you won or lost- > but how you played the game. — Grantland Rice.

Although the UMass soccer team's record was a disappointing 5-8-1, the players can take pride in the way they pulled themselves together at the end of the season and won their last three games, proving that they could indeed, play the game.

The booters reached a low point when they were defeated by WPI, 1-0. However, they went on to play Boston College to a 0-0 tie, defeated Springfield 2-1, and blanked both New Hampshire and Tufts — by scores of 2-0 and 3-0, respectively.

"I don't think we ever lost our enthusiasm as a team," said coach Russ Kidd, who was in his first year as soccer coach. "This was very heartening to me," he added.

Kidd had taken over the soccer program last year from Al Rufe, the UMass Financial Manager of Athletics. He is also the JV hockey coach at UMass.

"I had to go through a trial and error period," Kidd said. "I was hoping for better results earlier in the season, but the two overtime games (losses to Bridgeport and Maine) were tough. We played pretty good soccer at the beginning but then we kind of flattened out," he said.

Although the booters had won games against Keene State and Boston University, their record after the first 10 games was a dismal 2-8. The biggest problem seemed to be a lack of scoring punch.

"It was very discouraging for the defense not to have the offense score," Kidd said. "We lacked quickness on the front line and there's no substitution for that."

Kidd revamped the front line by moving fullback Mike Parsons to forward at the end of the season and the senior co-captain responded with two goals. Fullbacks Ed Niemiec and Larry Aronson, who will be the co-captains next year picked up the slack on defense. Other standouts on the team were Joel Mascolo, who had two goals and Bob McChesney, who lead the team in scoring with four goals and five assists.

There's a saying that the backbone of a team is its goalie and that was the case with Mark Hanks, who had a goals against average of 1.1 and was named MVP.

"As far as I'm concerned, Hanks was the best goalie in the Yankee Conference," Kidd said. "It's hard to find a guy with a better attitude than him."

Freshman Mark Vassington was named Most Improved Player on the team. "Vassington did a hell of a job for us," Kidd said. He along with Mike Shannon, Traek Elnabi, Pat Veal, Mark Vassolotti and Mark Abbott, will provide the nucleus for next year's club. The goaltending will be in good hands with Mark Hodgdon, who had a 2.2 goals average against average this year.

"I'm not looking to bring in a lot of new guys for next year," Kidd said. "But if I have a really good recruiting year, we'll be on our way."

The soccer program at UMass is in the same boat as sports like hockey and baseball, which are not allocated funds for scholarships. Kidd says his main priority is to find a junior college striker with real experience.

"Our program has as much potential as one like UConn's," Kidd commented. "You can find soccer players anywhere, but it helps if you go to the right well."

Kidd feels he benefited from his first season at the helm of a soccer club.

"I've got a clearer picture of what I want to do," he said. "I think I'm a lot wiser now and have settled a lot of things in my own mind. It was all a question of knowing what your players' capabilities are, which took me longer than I thought it would."

With a year's experience behind him, things should improve next year for Russ Kidd and the UMass soccer team.

Bowlers fare well after overcoming woes

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Four weeks ago, it appeared that the UMass men's and women's bowling teams would simply become a ghost of the past. Already hindered greatly by severe financial cuts to its programs, the bowlers received a deadly scare four days before their first tournament when the Program Council threatened to completely halt the bowling teams' funding

Outraged by the decision, members of the bowling teams, led by Karen James, appealed the decision and finally got some of their money back.

Undaunted by all these extracurricular happenings, the UMass men's and women's bowling teams have taken to the lanes recently and as usual have fared very well.

This past weekend the UMass bowlers traveled to Auburn, Mass. to participate in the Worcester Tournament, sponsored by Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

The women's bowling team entered the tourney in first place in the Tri-State Bowling League, a league comprised of eastern schools such as Cornell, University of Lowell, WPI, Central Connecticut, Army, and Coast Guard.

Karen James led the UMass women bowlers to a second place finish in the singles rolloff, as she averaged a 181, while Amanda Garcia and Beth Schneider also placed second this time in the doubles rolloff, behind the University of Lowell.

The men's team, which entered tournament play second in the Tri-State standings, placed third over the weekend behind first-place Bryant and second-place Lowell. The Minutemen finished merely 30 points behind Bryant.

Steve Mann placed first in all events with a total pinfall of 1195. The doubles team of Mann and Paul Stuteman combined for a 231 average, while Mike Bererd and Mitch Foreman placed second in doubles for the Minutemen.

Two weekends ago the bowlers participated in the qualifying round of the EIBC doubles. The Minutewomen made a strong showing as they captured first and second places.

Patty Melanson and Amanda Garcia finished first with a total pinfall of 2757, for an average of 172. James and Fran Friffen nailed down second spot with a total pinfall of 2728, averaging 70. The women's finals will be held Dec. 12 in Wilbraham, Mass.

The men weren't as successful as the women, although they did place fourth in the qualifying round. The doubles team of Paul Stutzman and Rich Rosenthal finished with a total pinfall of 2929, averaging 183 each string. The men's finals will be held Nov. 29 in New York City.

One of highlights of the qualifying tournament was the 245 turned in by UMass bowler Pam Dominico, which was high game for the women.

Rowers catch the 'frostbite'

Although it was not as cold as expected, the "Frostbite" Regatta kept true to its name as coach Doug Frost led the UMass women's crew team to the waters of the Schuykill River in Philadelphia, Pa. on a cold and windy day Saturday.

In the first women's four-oared race, the UMass team placed third in the late-starting race. The race began with a floating start due to a sudden change in the wind which caused the boats trouble in lining up together on the starting mark. It took five attempts at bringing the boats together before the judges were satisfied and the race finally began along its straight 1000 meter course.

The women — Faye Blumenthal as coxswain, Joanne Andrews as stroke, and Laura Love, Tricia Donovan, and Liz Angus — finished less than three seconds behind second place Ithaca College, with Vesper Boat Club taking first place.

In the second race which immediately followed, the UMass women came in second just behind Cornell. The boat with Leslie Bellows as coxswain, Maureen O'Brien as stroke, and Betty Howley, Sarah Piermarini and Susan Massey got off to a bad start, but with a hard push the rest of the way, the women finished a comfortable second.

The Frostbite Regatta was the final race of the fall as the team now concentrates on its winter conditioning and planning for the spring season beginning in March.

Quinn places 25th for national honors

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Mike Quinn became the first sophomore in UMass cross country history to attain "All-American" honors yesterday at the national cross country meet held at North Texas State in Denton, Texas.

Quinn from Dedham, Mass. finished 43rd overall and 25th among American born runners. The first 25 Americans, in the field of 250 runners, were deemed All Americans by the NCAA.

UMass senior John McGrail finished 106th and failed to qualify for the title.

Quinn becomes the fourth individual under the coaching of Ken O'Brien to achieve the honor. Other UMass runners to reach All-American rankings in previous years were Randy Thomas and Bill Gillen in 1974 and John McGrail in 1975.

Quinn, a physical education major who finished second in the JV New Englands last year, battled a two week case of the flu and stomach problems in finishing the race. In last week's IC4A race, Quinn, battered by the flu, finished 58th.

Quinn's time in the race was not available but according to assistant coach Arnie Morse, Quinn's clocking would be approximately around the 29 minute mark for six miles. Quinn, McGrail, and coach O'Brien were unavailable for comment as all three were flying back from Texas.

Quinn, during the cross country season won four out of the five dual meets, and finished first in the Yankee Conference championships.

The number one cross country team in the U.S. is the University of Texas at El Paso, finishing with 62 points. The top New England team was Providence which finished ninth.

Other teams finishing in the top 30 from the East in respective order were Rutgers, Georgetown, Villanova, Harvard, Navy, Princeton, and Dartmouth.

New England runners certainly made a mark with Providence's John Treacy leading the way with fifth place. Other New England runners finishing in the top 25 were Northeastern's Bruce Bicford and John Flora, 14th and 21st, respectively, and Bob Modge from the University of Lowell, 22nd. Other New England runners participating besides UMass's John McGrail were Providence's Mike O'Shea-39th, and Dan Dillon-180th.

Mike Quinn became the first sophomore in UMass cross country history to earn All American status yesterday as he placed 25th among Americans at the Nationals.

Minutemen football put to rest

"Friends, sports fans, and Minutemen,
Lend me your ears,
I come not to praise the UMass football team,
But to bury it."
— with apologies to Bill Shakespeare

And bury it in an unmarked grave. For the UMass football team played as if it were already in a permanently anesthetized state these past two weeks.

It is excusable to lose to New Hampshire and Boston College, I suppose. After all, those two teams are going to post-season play. UNH will be in that old tourist trap of Bozeman, Montana next Saturday to take on the home-town hope, Montana State, in the NCAA Division II playoffs. BC, meanwhile, has a chance to be selected for the Independence Bowl (The what?).

But really, why did the Minutemen have to look so putrid? Was it that they just came up against vastly superior forces, or did they finally display their closet offense, the one they wanted to but couldn't show against teams such as Maine, Boston University, and Toledo?

Oh well, the answer to those questions will probably remain unknown until time immemorial. You know, why dwell on enigmas. So let's go back and review the season, while it's still fresh out of the oven.

Yes, people, it is time once again for the annual Minutemen Distinguished (?) Achievement Awards. The winners of the following categories will be pleased to know that their reward is a Thanksgiving at home with the Detroit Lions on the tube and the turkey in their stomachs instead of staying on campus over the T-Day break and practicing on the cold and windy Gladchuk fields.

So, without further ado, bring up the fanfare and get set for THE 1976 UMASS CAST OF WINNERS:

Most surprising offensive player: Might as well start out with the good and work down from there. There is really no doubt who will take this trophy. Until he was injured in the Rutgers game, Kevin Cummings was THE man for the Minutemen. The junior tight end was the player most responsible for winning the Toledo and Rhode Island games. His clutch pass receiving led UMass and his absence undoubtedly hurt the team even more than expected. He didn't even figure that highly in Minutemen plans during the pre-season, so he had a pleasant influence on the squad.

Most valuable offensive player: Ditto the above. No contest.

Most surprising defensive player: All right, I'll stop pondering and give out two winners here. The co-champions joined the starting lineup midway through the season due to injuries, and both performed admirably. The two players are nose guard Phil Puopolo and rover John D'Amato. The sophomore duo replaced Steve Ciccolini and Steve Telander, respectively. Actually, they came into prominence during the Rutgers game, when Puopolo sacked quarterback Bert Kosup twice and D'Amato made 10 individual tackles. It's too bad that it took injuries to get them into the starting lineup, but it did give them a chance to show their ability.

Most valuable defensive player: Again a tough one to call, but the edge goes to safety Ron Harris. He intercepted three passes, hit hard all season long, and was a stabilizing influence in a defensive backfield racked by injuries. His willingness to hustle and ability to play with pain (witness the BC game) give this man a great deal of respect in my eyes. And, to top it all off, he set a career record for New England punt returning yardage this season. He did all that was asked of him, and then some.

(Sorry about that, Dennis Fenton and Peter McCarty. You each receive honorable mention.)

Most disappointing offensive player: Not really difficult here to come up with a name. Entering the 1976 season, Rich Jessamy was expected to be the UMass rushing star. The senior had good sophomore and junior years, but his last will definitely not go down as outstanding. He managed to break Paul Metallo's all-time UMass rushing record, but that was about his only noteworthy accomplishment all season. Take away his three big 70-yard gains (explosive though they were), and you have poor total yardage of under 300 yards and a mediocre average of yards gained per carry. The man who was expected to be the mainstay on offense turned out to do relatively nothing, albeit his lack of carries.

Most disappointing defensive player: I'm going to name an inanimate being here. In a word, injuries. Standouts: John Toner, Greg Sprout, Dave Croasdale, Todd Holt, John Van Buren, John Willis, Telander, Harris, and Ciccolini were all sidelined at one time or another this year. It's tough to perform well when you can't even hobble out onto the field. All things considered, the defense did an excellent job this season, considering the fact that it was usually playing hurt.

Now, switching trains of thought, a few miscellaneous questions and comments that don't fit anywhere else.

Enigmas: Why did Brian McNally run the quarterback keeper so often on third or fourth down and short? Whatever happened to the screen pass? Or, for that matter, the swing pass? Why did the team make so many mistakes, which showed dramatically on the penalty yardage sheet, in fumbles, and in interceptions? Why wasn't Mike Fallon inserted in the game sooner against UNH? Why was John Romboli's punting so inconsistent?

The two burning leftover questions: How did they ever come up with a 1,000 crowd count at the BU game? They must have been tallying arms and legs. And how were those halftime rugby players at Nickerson Field able to play in the wind and rain, let alone stand up?

Well, folks, that's about it for UMass football 1976. Have a happy Turkey Day, and keep the Patriots uppermost in your thoughts.

Icemen face Hawks; win streak on line

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

The 2-0 UMass hockey team will try to stop its two year losing streak to St. Anselm's when it battles the Hawks up in Manchester, N.H., tonight at 7:30 in St. A's season opener.

Last year the Minutemen, banged up by injuries, lost to the Hawks 5-3 before a home crowd at Orr rink. The year before that, UMass lost up in Manchester 4-2, but the Minutemen still own the series lead, 3-2.

Last year's St. Anselm's team was 16th in the division last year with a 11-12-0 record and 11-13-0 overall.

Last year's edition of the Hawks were picked to make the playoffs, but failed to do so under present second year coach Alan Davis. The preseason poll in the Boston Globe puts this year's squad in the sleeper category along with UMass.

Players who figured in last year's win were goalie Erik Anderson and wingers John Powers, Ed King, and George Gouin. The game-winner last year was notched by King off a pass from Gouin.

As this is the season opener for St. Anselms, coach Jack Canniff is not well acquainted with the Hawks. "They're pretty good," said the 10-year hockey mentor.

While he doesn't know too much about St. Anselm's, he does know of the condition of the Minutemen — hurting. "We have injuries due to sickness. They have some kind of sickness, nothing you can put your finger on. I can't tell how it will be," said Canniff. "John Peters is hurting but he'll play. A week's rest would help. Valicenti (Ron) hasn't even played yet."

The team played a checking game Saturday night and that's how they won. "We played a good physical game. We stood up well under it, especially playing away," Canniff said.

"But it would be great to sit down at Thanksgiving dinner 3-0," Canniff said.

Harris heads stars

AMHERST, Mass. [AP] — Champion New Hampshire captured six berths and Massachusetts safety Ron Harris captured top honors for the third consecutive year on the 1976 All-Yankee Conference football team.

Huskies fire Naviaux

STORRS, Conn. [UPI] — Larry Naviaux, head football coach at the University of Connecticut for the past four years, was fired yesterday.

The Huskies compiled a 2-9 record this past season, their third losing season in a row.

"This is a management decision. It is a difficult one to reach, but one we feel we are compelled to make at this time," said UConn athletic director John L. Toner.

Voters turn down Northampton reshaping plan

By STEVEN J. POLANSKY
Collegian Staff

More than 30 per cent of the registered voters in the city of Northampton last night voted to kill the TOPICS program.

TOPICS (Traffic Operation Program to Improve Capacity and Safety) would have been a city-redesigning program to reshape the face of Northampton.

With 5343 of the 16,200 legal voters casting their ballot in the referendum question, 4519 persons voted against with only 824 in favor of this program.

Northampton Mayor David W. Cramer said he was surprised at the voter turnout.

"I didn't think that this many people would come out to vote. We now know how the people feel towards this issue, and specifically what they don't want."

He said "The streets and sidewalks still need repair, but we're going to have to examine the budget to determine where the money can come from. There is a $2 million sewer project in the works and Smith College's budget is on the upswing."

This program was subjected to the referendum vote due to petition action undertaken by people opposed to TOPICS. The TOPICS program, a federal, state and city proposition, is being instituted in other cities and towns, with Greenfield being the closest neighbor to comply. The state would have subsidized the majority of the $1 million plus expense with the city picking up an estimated $100,000.

Robert M. Jordan, spokesperson for the group opposed to stop the passage of the TOPICS program, said, "The failure of this program is a positive thing. We want the responsibility to make our own decisions about our town." He added, "We think downtown merchants stand to profit without this rerouting operation. Progress is fine, but were sure that this (TOPICS) was not the type we needed."

TOPICS would have rerouted some streets, added walk and street lights and have created a new downtown Northampton, which would have been aimed more towards the pedestrian than the automobilist.

"Must of our business comes from foot traffic," said one downtown merchant. "I'm willing to walk about the town to get to a particular place, and I think most of our customers would be inclined to do the same."

Let UMass sleep now; because I'll be home

By LISA MELILLI

A raincoat and summer sweater lie on the bed as The Boston Globe hits the door. Nine o-clock and all the alarms ring and voices and slippers, bare feet shuffling toward the bathroom. The door swings back and forth, showers streaming, faucets flowing and shavers and blow dryers humming as I throw my last bit of laundry into the suitcase for mom to do.

It's the day before Thanksgiving; it's the last day of classes before the break.... and after the break you know it's finishing papers, books, studying for finals.

It's been awhile since home seen and the pants I never usually bother to iron get ironed, hair combed more carefully, the beard shaved: fluffs of hair fall into the sink, turn the faucet and its all gone with the thrush of cold water.

Does it really seem worth it to go to Wednesday classes? I know no one will be there. I haven't done the reading. I'm about two weeks behind in everything. Could sleep another hour.

And I pick up the Globe outside my door, check the headlines for the latest news, and horoscope, and comics. I know I shouldn't fret any longer. Coat goes on and its off to class.

"Have a nice Thanksgiving," a voice yells as I rush down the stairs.

"Yes," I answer without thinking but it is the thing to say.

And the campus seems dead already. Sunny day in the mid-40's which is better than it has been the past few days, yet it seems cold. UMass doesn't seem the same today. Everyone probably went home yesterday. Why didn't I?

Throw down the breakfast. Class. No one did show up after all. Rush home to pack a last few things before the ride comes. Knock on door — it's time to go.

I look back as I lock the door. I look back on the campus as I reach North Pleasant Street, look back at the towers as I reach Interstate 91. I can almost smell the turkey and mom's perfume and hear her voice and her hug and all the relatives as well. It will be a nice vacation, a nice break... and UMass can sleep for all I care.......

Good-bye!

The Collegian will not be published tomorrow and Friday in observance of the Thanksgiving holiday break. Publication will resume Monday.

The business and editorial offices of the Collegian will be closed all day today due to extensive construction in the Collegian's offices.

The Collegian staff wishes the entire UMass community a happy Thanksgiving.

Student reflects on summer internship

By PETER SWANSON
Collegian Staff

"I never let school get in the way of my education," an American philosopher once said.

Merrill Pellows can say the same. Last summer she worked at Project Place, one of Boston's most extensive social service and counseling centers. Pellows was hired for the job through the University Office of Internships, located in 409 Goodell.

The Office of Internships made it possible for Bellows, a psychology major, to earn credits while working at a job that complemented her academic program.

"I wanted to live in Boston for the summer anyway," Pellows said, "and get a job that would relate to my academic interests and career, instead of scooping ice cream."

Government, business and education are just three fields Pellows could have selected from the Office of Internships' file of participating agencies, which in the past have cooperated to give hundreds of students experience in the "real world."

When Pellows went to the office last spring, she brought with her a placement idea of her own. Citing her psychology background and experience as a volunteer for her hometown hotline, she said she wanted to work as a counselor for Boston's Project Place in the South end.

Satisfied with her competence and sense of dedication, the internship people helped Pellows fill out the necessary applications and find a faculty sponsor. "The placement and a sponsor are the two things needed for an internship," Pellows said.

From June through August, Pellows was a member of the staff at Project Place, an agency whose services include a 24-hour hotline, 24-hour free ambulance service, a temporary shelter for young runaways, drop-in counseling, and free legal services.

"Even though I was new when I went, I was treated as an equal," Pellows recalled.

At place, however, equal treatment meant equal dedication, so like much of the staff, Pellows did numerous jobs. In addition to working a shift on the hotline, she did administrative work and helped train volunteers.

However it was the hotline that helped Pellows further her counseling skills.

"I had a hotline shift every week," she said, "but a lot of times I did the overnight shift from midnight to nine in the morning because it was hard to schedule people for that shift."

Pellows explained that the overnight shift was more demanding because there were "fewer referrals, more suicides, drug overdoses, and calls from severely depressed people."

To be able to give directions for first aid over the phone, Pellows took a course offered by Place's ambulance team in first aid and cardio-pulmonary resusitation, for which she received a Red Cross certificate.

Pellows tells some sordid tales about her nights on the hotline switchboard but is quick to assure that these are exceptions to what she considered a generally congenial work experience.

Merrill Pellows

"One of the creepiest things happened at the end of an overnight shift," she recalled.

"I was working with a new volunteer, when an old drunk came in and started calling us names and spitting on the floor and the telephones," she said.

"He wasn't looking for help, but to annoy us. I had to get very nasty with him, but I got him to leave."

"Chronic callers were another problem," Pellows said. "They would monopolize the lines when they really had nothing to say. They'd make up stories to stay on the line."

Pellows described another kind of chronic call which she had to deal with. Hotlines provide obscene callers with a legal way to vent their frustrations.

"Occasionally we'd get calls, mostly from men," Pellows said, "and some more blatant than others. Usually they'd describe some sexual problems of theirs, or they'd ask you to say things to help them get off. When it was obvious what they were doing on the other end, I'd tell them it wasn't my job and hang up."

Hazards such as these create a feeling of community among the staff at Project Place, Pellows said. "When you're working in a crisis place, the support you get from others is very important, and the fact that you can rely on them and trust them makes a big difference," she said.

Pellows said her hotline experience was good exposure to the kinds of problems a social worker must face, while giving her the chance to help people that have no money or resources to get help elsewhere.

She said that sometimes she felt frustrated by the limitations of Boston's social services. Pellows recalled an instance when some junkies came to Place wanting a referral to a methadone program.

"Because drug programs in Boston are in such short supply, there is a waiting list. It's ridiculous to say to someone who wants treatment 'wait a month'. He'll just sit down and shoot up 'til then."

Pellows said workshops were the highlight of the training program that she helped present.

One such workshop was led by a group called Gender Identity Counseling, which specialized in helping persons who desired sex changes or had some kind of sexual identity problem. A growing number of hotline calls involving these problems had alerted Place's training coordinator to the need for the workshop.

Other training workshops include birth-control counseling, detoxification and overdose procedures, and emergency medical treatment.

When asked to evaluate the internship program Pellows said, "I'm biased but it's a good program. I didn't do an internship because I wanted to get away from school, but because it was a situation that offered what UMass can't."

Office of Internship's project coordinator, Joseph Sullivan said interested students have until the end of the semester to get together an internship of their own.

S. Amherst buses may run more often

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

The improvement of the bus service to South Amherst and Brittany Manor apartments is one possible result of a request for funding by the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA).

Robert J. Godding, head of Transit and Transportation for UMass, told the Commuter Collective yesterday the PVTA service here may receive a federal capitol grant for equipment and facilities to expand and improve public mass transit service in the Amherst area.

Of the equipment being requested, more than $2.5 million could go to expand the University-operated transit service, Godding said.

He said these funds would be used to purchase several new buses to replace the old ones.

The collective has allocated $20,000 for area transportation this year, funds which cover bus service for people in Outreach, those who use night service and service for rural area towns during the day.

In other action, the collective voted to buy two movie films for a total of $1875.

The films are "Puerto Rico" and "Blow for Blow."

A representative from Beta Chi fraternity asked the collective for $800 in order to run the annual "Spring Day" which will be held during the first April weekend when mild weather prevails. The money will be used to purchase 120 kegs, and was already allocated by the collective for "Spring Day," so it was decided to keep the $800 for that purpose.

"Peoples' Massachusetts History Calendars" will be sold by collective members next semester for $2.50. The historical calendars were done from a perspective of working people, native Americans, women and Third World people. The calendars were made by Mass. Peoples' Historical Project, a non-profit group in Amherst.

Sparks to challenge SW

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

Albert Sparks will file two complaints against Southwest Assembly (SWA) today, according to Student Attorney General Paul Yanowitch.

One will deal with the question of censorship and the other will challenge the constitutionality of SWA Bylaw 7, which says that any group desiring funding from SWA must conduct a seminar or discussion on racism awareness.

At the assembly meeting last night, it was announced that Debbie Love, president of Orchard Hill Area Government, would be representing SWA in the case, and Yanowitch will prosecute each case when they come up around Dec. 5.

In other action, it was announced that the first edition of the Southwest Newsletter will appear as a supplement to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Friday, Dec. 3.

Many stories ranging from straight news to creative writings are needed by organizers by Monday, and may be submitted to the SWA office upstairs in Hampden Student Center in Southwest, or to Joni Mersky in 1601 Washington Tower. For further information or questions, one may call her at 546-9147.

Treasurer Mark Gardner, who will be resigning at the end of this semester, said, elections for his replacement will be held next week at the SWA meeting at 7:30 Tuesday night. Anyone from Southwest may apply for this position, which pays $300.00 per semester.

It was resolved that SWA allocate $693.86 to supply the John Quincy Adams Tower-Southwest darkroom.

Workshops and three-credit colloqs are hoped to be set up on the 12th floor of JQA as soon as possible with tight security measures to discourage abuse and loss of the darkroom equipment.

No preference to JQA Middle residents will be given, but all who want to come and use the darkroom for their own purposes and not with a class will have to pay a fee.

Elevator ice cream sales high volume, low profit

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The world's only moving sundae takes to the elevators in Washington Tower every Wednesday night around 9:00.

The "Good Humor Elevator", operated by David Tursky and Jeff Congelosi, of the 16th floor, goes from floor to floor each week selling ice cream sundaes to the residents of the tower.

"The idea started one night when upper house had a 'Sundae Night'," says Tursky. "There was a lot of ice cream left over so we loaded it into the elevator and sold it."

These roommate partners in the ice cream trade have other similarities, too. They are both 19 and they are both business majors.

The operation has been underway for five to six weeks, according to Congelosi. "Every week we try to do something different. One week we had an election special featuring Jerry Ford and Jimmy Carter sundaes. The Ford sundae had marshmallow and the Carter one had nuts," he said.

"We also had 'Independent cones' for those who couldn't decide," added Tursky.

The sundaes usually cost about 50 cents. The most recent special, a brownie sundae, cost 60 cents, and the cones cost a quarter. The operation, which also supplies the bowls and spoons, is a non-profit service run for the dorm and for the fun. It started selling six gallons of ice cream but recently has had to expand to nine gallons of ice cream each week.

Residents of the tower love the service. "In Washington Tower, ice cream isn't just food, it's a way of life," said Ann Bolger, a resident of the 17th floor and a sundae fanatic.

Patricia Bujnicki, a counselor on the 22nd floor agreed. On the night of the election special she had a Ford sundae because as she said, "I don't like Carter." She also says many of the residents on her floor enjoy the sundaes and wait for the elevator to come on Wednesday nights.

Rob Gilbert, the head of residence of Washington Upper, also praised the 'Good Humor Elevator'.

"These people are folk heroes in the dorm," he said. "You couldn't have this service in a low-rise, but the unique vertical living arrangement of the towers makes it possible. It makes living here fun."

The ice cream is purchased by way of the Campus Center which delivers it every week. The preparations are made on the 19th floor and things are put right on the elevators.

"When we get on the elevator, our hot fudge is hot, our ice cream is cold and we are ready to go," said Congelosi.

"Sometimes we start at the top of the tower and work our way down, and sometimes we work our way up. We did it at random for a while and now we keep a list so we go to the floors that have given us the most business recently," said Tursky.

Both of the operators said they do it for the fun. "We get asked all sorts of questions," said Tursky. "And you should have seen some of the expressions on peoples' faces when we were first getting started."

The pair hope to continue the service next semester. As this semester progresses, they hope to add coffee and donuts for people studying for exams. Within the next couple of weeks they also will try to add a banana split to the menu.

One thing is for sure, they both agreed. "We got to be unique."

Duke says limit referenda expenditures

By GREGG WILSON

[HOLYOKE] — On a late afternoon swing thru Holyoke yesterday Governor Michael Dukakis said limitations should be imposed on the amounts of money which corporations should be allowed to spend on future state referenda issues. Speaking to a group celebrating the fifth anniversary of Channel 57 Dukakis said that the limitations would "be a logical extension of present laws governing the amounts of money which candidates can spend on their campaigns."

Speaking in reference to the $2.25 million which opponents of the Bottle Bill spent to defeat legislation banning the use of non-returnable containers in Massachusetts, Dukakis said that he will support the referenda expenditure restrictions when they come before the Legislature in 1977.

In an exclusive Collegian interview before his press conference at the Yankee Peddler Inn, Dukakis also said he sees "no prospects of anything more than present level funding for UMass in the next fiscal year." At a Board of Trustees meeting in Worcester earlier this month, State Secretary of Education, Paul Parks, introduced a motion which would keep the budget at its present $108 million level. The Trustees later approved a $16 million dollar increase of the present University budget to $128 million and sent it on to the State Legislature.

The austerity minded Dukakis who requested a 5 per cent cut in all state departments said that if President Robert Wood and the Board of Trustees continue to pass budgets which are in excess of his own recommendations that they are inviting cuts by "those who know less about the needs and priorities of the University." "The University can continue to provide quality education without an increase."

Dukakis stated that he thought Wood's proposed increase was unrealistic. "I don't think that we need hundreds of thousands of dollars spent on the president's office in Boston either," Dukakis said. President Wood is a sometimes mentioned Democratic primary opponent of Dukakis in 1978.

Dukakis, whom the polls show is more popular in Western Massachusetts than in metropolitan Boston, restated his support of home rule Blue Law legislation. The proposed legislation, which would allow cities and towns to repeal Sunday closings within their own jurisdiction, is popular in Massachusetts communities along the Connecticut and New Hampshire borders.

"provide students with an opportunity for Judaic expression."

This allegation has resulted in the impounding of the Resources funds by the SGA to be in effect until the charges are investigated. SGA will not name the accusers, which it does not have to do until the case is brought before the Student Judiciary.

The meeting, attended by 30 persons, was initially called to explain the allegations against Resources and to clarify the purpose that Resources serves in the UMass area.

Resources Vice-president Judith Gondelman explained that the "possible" cause of the allegations regarding misspent funds might have resulted from the funding of $100 by Resources sponsoring the appearance of Beate Klarsfeld on campus Nov. 2.

According to Gondelman, it is against the by-laws of the constitution to allocate over $25 in funding without approval by vote in a meeting of the general membership of the organization.

'Kiss Me Kate' has problems

By TYLA MICHELOVE
and JAMES F.B. SAWYER
Collegian Staff

"Kiss Me Kate" with music and lyrics by Cole Porter, was presented by the UMass Music Theatre Guild this past weekend in Bowker Auditorium. Under the direction of Jon Stephen Crane, the performance had its special moments, moments that brought the audience in contact with this excellent Broadway musical. However, these moments were not enough to sustain the entire play; it presented an ill-defined shadow of what it had the potential to be.

The first and major problem that beset this performance was the fact that very little could be heard over the pit orchestra. This was due in part to the fact that most of the voices were extremely watered-down. In terms of major roles, Deborah Stimson as Kate presented the most powerful vocal and at points, quite possibly saved the show from being totally inaudible.

On this score, the best musical sequence did not come until the second act, and did not involve the major characters. The solo vocals during the sequence entitled, "Too Darn Hot" seemed to have found their way onstage from some other musical. In the context of what seemed to be more of a high school production than a college undertaking, this scene stood out as an exhibition of semi-professional prowess. Unfortunately, the rest of the production did not live up to the standards set by this one particular scene.

The balance of the musical, with perhaps one other exception, rested almost exclusively on the shoulders of Deborah Stimson, in terms of acting as well as singing. Those involved in casting "Kiss Me Kate" apparently were more concerned with characters merely looking the parts that they were playing rather than their ability to do so.

Steven Young as Petruchio-Fred Graham actually did look quite the Shakespearean actor. But his voice betrayed him, perhaps too often. During even the heaviest scenes, Young's characters were handled a bit too lightly. The transition between the Shakespearean actor onstage and the man offstage was nonexistent, draining any possible color or life from a potentially colorful and vivacious character. He did not stand alone in this acting weakness.

It became more and more clear as the evening progressed that it was the acting, and not the direction, that was at fault for any dissatisfaction with the production as a whole.

A very imaginative set was utilized with great insight by Director Crane and company. The excellent choreography was the only constant in the entire performance. It wasn't so much the dancers as it was the dances themselves that made the cast sequences enjoyable. From opening number to finale, Cole Porter's energy was communicated most ably through the dance numbers involving the entire cast.

Conrad O. Bergschneider and Scotty Caulfield, as the two gunmen, very nearly walked off with everything, even before their duet, "Brush Up Your Shakespeare". The only two true actors in the production, Bergschneider and Caulfield seemed natural and therefore believable. As the "natural" in Shakespeare is the clown, so the gunmen in this play should have been. But in a production where so much talent was lacing among the other characters, the two "naturals" end up being the only serious performers.

"Brush Up Your Shakespeare," a bit designed to be a scene-stealer, ended up becoming a show-stealer because of this.

Also worthy of note were the performances of Deborah Claar as the bobbing pregnant woman, Cleveland W. Gardner as Baptista, and Susan Titus as a hustler. In any other production of this same musical, these players would have blended nicely. But in this case, they could not help but stand out.

The UMass Music Theatre Guild's "Kiss Me Kate" was a disappointment. The fault for this is shared by too many individuals to delineate. It is unfortunate that the efforts and talent of a few had to be wasted on what turned out to be such an unsatisfying theatre experience.

Music instruction available to all

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Instrument and voice instruction for non-music majors is open to anyone upon audition and availability of faculty time, according to Dr. Albert G. Huetteman, head of the UMass Athletic Dept., located in the Fine Arts Center.

"Beginning instruction can't be taken as a University course, but it can be taken as a class for a fee. Instructions may also be taken through the Division of Continuing Education for one credit hour," he said. This costs an additional fee of $15.

"What we offer is group lessons taken as a class. For example, six to 12 piano students may be in a class, or they can take it in a new concept called a quad — four students in a class. Students can still take the traditional one-to-one instruction, also," he said.

He said there were three categories of teachers giving music instruction in the Fine Arts Center.

"There are a few music faculty teachers, some graduate music majors and a couple of heavily-screened local professionals that are not affiliated with the University," he said.

Encouraging non-music majors, taking private instruction.

"The ensembles in the department are made up of 98 per cent non-majors. If it weren't for the non-majors, we might not have any ensembles at all," he said.

Private instruction will be offered next semester for composition, voice, piano, guitar, flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, trumpet, trombone, tuba, saxaphone, percussion, violin, viola, cello, and string base.

Huetteman advises students and others interested to watch for advertisements in January's Collegian for the time and place of instruction.

Huetteman denied a rumor that senior voice students are required to coach two undergraduates as part of their course load.

"Senior voice majors take music teaching pedagogy, which is teaching of music of voice. As part of the course, the student has to grab a few bodies out of the hall and demonstrate 'teaching' in front of their instructor. It's for the instructor to see how a student in the class teaches and works out a given problem," he said.

"Usually the students get their friends to help them with this," he said.

Carter sets jobless goal

WASHINGTON [AP] — President-elect Jimmy Carter said yesterday it is his goal to reduce unemployment by 1.5 per cent "and perhaps more" in his administration's first year.

He said he also set a goal of boosting the nation's rate of economic growth to 6 per cent in the first year of the Carter administration.

Carter told a news conference at the Capitol that Chairman Arthur Burns of the Federal Reserve Board told him at a meeting Monday that both goals strike him as "reasonable."

The jobless rate now stands at 7.9 per cent and the growth rate in the fall quarter was 3.8 per cent just below the level considered necessary to whittle down unemployment.

Carter pledged to take effective steps to rebuild a spirit of cooperation and good feeling between the White House and Congress.

He said jobs will be a major focus of the first months of his administration and that he expects before his Jan. 20 inauguration to have worked out with the Congress the outline of major unemployment reduction legislation.

In general, Democrats said they were pleased with Carter's attitude. Republicans said they were ready to be partners and would support Carter when they think he is right and oppose him when they think he is wrong.

Carter made his comments at the half-way point in a fast-paced day of conference with the Democratic and Republican leader of Congress. On Monday he had met with President Ford and top officials of the Ford administration.

Meanwhile, at the White House, President Ford worked on the federal budget for the fiscal year 1978. The budget must be submitted to Congress in January.

During his Washington visit yesterday, Carter:

—Promised to consult closely with the appropriate members of Congress on all major legislation.

—Promised the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to consult in advance on major foreign policy initiatives when they reach the stage of negotiations.

—Dramatized that pledge by giving each member of the committee his private telephone number in Plains, Ga., and promising to come to the phone when they call.

—Announced he is looking for a secretary of agriculture with on-the-farm experience who comes from the Midwest, the nation's largest agricultural area.

Carter said that while his process of picking his Cabinet will be slower than in past new administrations, he hopes to send "informal" nominations to the Congress before his inauguration to give the Senate a head start in the confirmation process.

Health department 'failed' on legionnaires' disease

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — The state health department was accused yesterday of failing to undertake "appropriate investigative measures" after it was notified of medical suspicions about the early stages of the 'Legionnaires' Disease' outbreak last summer.

The mysterious respiratory illness struck hard with brief but deadly impact, killing 29 persons and causing 151 others to become ill.

The accusation against the health department was leveled by Allegheny County Coroner Dr. Cyril H. Wecht at a congressional subcommittee hearing.

The hearing is looking for clues to the cause of the outbreak which exacted its toll mainly among delegates and guests at a state American Legion convention at the Bellevue Stratford hotel July 21-24.

The hotel, a grand old landmark, itself became a victim of the outbreak last Friday when it was forced to close because of declinding business stemming from publicity about the epidemic.

Subcommittee chairman Rep. John M. Murphy, D-NY, suggested that a federal contingency plan be adopted to cope with any similiar occurrence in the future.

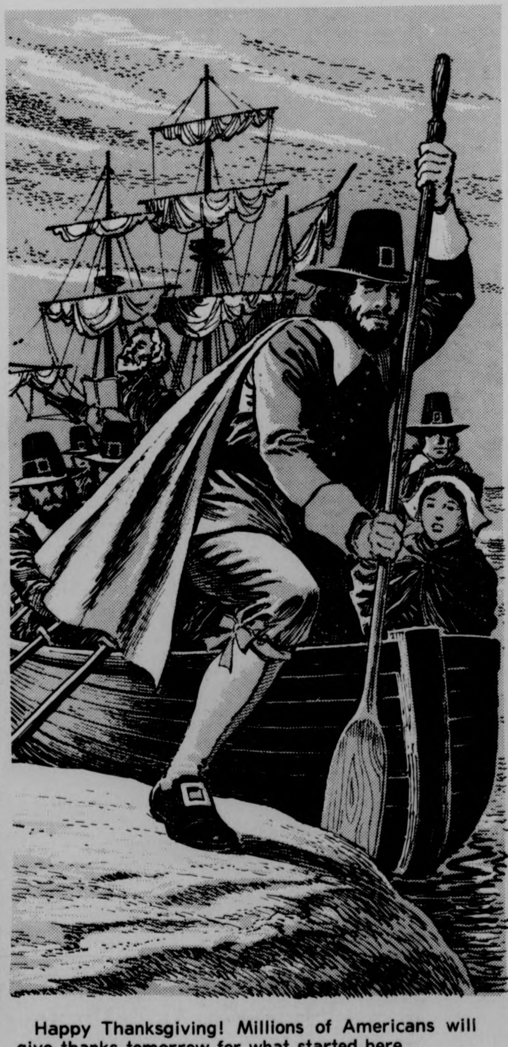
"The lack of coordination among the various agencies and officials has been an embarrassment and the prospects for any self-motivated improvement are slim," he said.

"After all the searching, investigating, theorizing and handwriting, we have no idea either what the epidemic was, or what to do if it happens again."

Members of the panel and several witnesses seemed to agree that the early investigation of the outbreak concerned theories that an infectious organism such as the swine flu virus was responsible rather than one involving a toxic source.

Senator Richard Schweiker, R-Pa., who sat with the panel in a liason role, said he felt in the event of a similar occurrence. an investigation should be aimed at both the infectious and toxic possibilities simultaneously.

That possibility of poison was offered by Dr. F. William Sunderman, director of the Institute for Clinical Science, Philadelphia.



Happy Thanksgiving! Millions of Americans will give thanks tomorrow for what started here.

Pot use high

WASHINGTON [AP] — A government survey released yesterday shows that American young people are using marijuana more often, but the overwhelming majority continues to frown on other drugs.

The survey of 17,000 high school seniors showed that nearly 53 per cent said they had tried marijuana at some point and one of five had used the drug at least 20 times during the preceding year.

Eight per cent said they had smoked marijuana almost daily during the month preceding the survey.

The poll of the 1976 graduating classes of 130 schools across the nation was conducted by the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research. The study was commissioned by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, which released the findings.

Dr. Robert L. DuPont, director of the national institute, told a news conference that the survey of high school seniors and two related studies "represent major advances in our knowledge" about drug abuse trends.

"The problem is not going away," he said. "On the other hand, we are not reporting any dramatic upturn either."

He said the studies show "an apparent stabilization in drug use and the attitudes toward drugs in general. There is a very strong strain of conservation attitudes in the American public toward drug use."

The Michigan researchers compared results of the 1976 poll with a similar survey of the 1975 graduating classes and found that the number who reported trying marijuana rose from 47 per cent to 52 per cent.

Ribicoff suggests Kissinger

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., said yesterday he expects to meet with Jimmy Carter to reinforce a suggestion that the president-elect consider appointing outgoing Secretary of State Henry Kissinger as a special envoy to the Middle East.

Ribicoff, who recently completed a Middle East tour with 11 other senators, said at a news conference that he spoke briefly with Carter about their findings.

Ribicoff, at a recent Jerusalem news conference, first raised the possibility of Kissinger staying on as a special envoy.

He said yesterday that all the Arab and Israeli leaders with whom the delegation talked agreed that the United States must play a guiding role in Middle East peace talks and indicated that Kissinger was best suited to continue the job.

"I feel very strongly that the best step that Carter made was to delegate Kissinger as special envoy," Ribicoff said. There is no other personality more knowledgeable and closely involved in Middle Eastern affairs than the secretary of state, he said.

Ribicoff said he had not talked to Kissinger about his suggestion. But he recalled that this summer while he and Kissinger were in Nairobi, they heard Carter had said he would not hesitate to use Kissinger for special duties.

"He (Kissinger) was rather intrigued," Ribicoff said.

Ribicoff said the impression he and the delegates got from Middle East leaders was that the conditions are right now for negotiating a peace settlement.

How, he was asked, would a new Carter-appointed Secretary of State feel if Kissinger continued in charge of Middle East negotiations?

Alcoa admits it made contributions

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — The Aluminum Company of America acknowledged yesterday it had made $166,000 in domestic political contributions between 1962 and 1970.

In a report to the Securities and Exchange Commission, Alcoa said the contributions were made from additional compensation paid to employes at plant locations.

In addition, Alcoa said employes received $97,000 to compensate them for increased personal income tax liability.

Alcoa said the political support program was approved or tacitly condoned by certain unnamed former and present corporate officials.

"In most cases those having knowledge of the program believed it was not illegal, but represented additional compensation paid to an employe who was expected to incur additional expenses in the performance of his responsibilities and that he would report and pay taxes on the added compensation," Alcoa said.

Alcoa said it had advised the Internal Revenue Service of the results of a company investigation that disclosed the contributions.

"While the precise federal tax effect of this disclosure is yet to be determined," the company said, "Alcoa believes the ultimate determination should have no material effect on its earnings, assets or financial position."

Work of local Black composers planned

Voices of New Africa House at FAC

On Monday, November 29 at 8:00 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, the Voices of New Africa House Choir will present its fifth annual Fall Concert.

A special feature of this concert will be the performance of a group of songs written or arranged especially for the Voices by four Black composers who are a part of the UMass community. The choir will sing Alleluia, a song of praise written by Dr. Frederick Tillis of the Umass Music Department; Lord Remember Me, an anthem using as its text the supplications of the two thieves nailed to the cross, composed by Dr. Floyd Williams of the UMass Math Department; Biblica Meditations on Peace by William Dargan, Music Director at Deerfield Academy; and Don't Ever Doubt It, a song by Sis. Semenya McCord from the musical Tomorrow Has Been Here and Gone, which she has written for the voices for performance in March, 1977.

The program will also include groups of gospel and soul songs in the fine tradition established by the Voices in past performances here.

Local Black Composers

Floyd L. Williams, a professor in the Mathematics Department at UMass, has had a long interest in music. In addition to being an accomplished jazz pianist and composer, he is an arranger and was bandleader in the 1960s. His main musical interest now is writing for Voices. He has written songs for the Lincoln University Choir (Mo.), Ms. Johnnella Butler of the Smith College Black Studies faculty, and for Archie Shepp. His music has been performed in various New England colleges and churches. The upcoming concert will be the first performance of his music by the Voices of New Africa House.

Semenya McCord, is well-known to the Five College area. For the past several years she has appeared as featured soloist with the Voices of New Africa House and with Sunlight n' Shade. Her songs have been performed locaaly by the Voices, Sunlight n' Shade, Reconstruction, the exciting new vocal quartet based at UMass and The Unity Ensemble. She was recently featured with her own song on Archie Shepp's album, "There's a Trumpet in My Soul." Another of her songs, "Song for Mozambique," was recorded by the Shepp Quartet at the Montreaux Jazz Festival in France in 1975. Several of her songs have been selected for future recordings by Mr. Shepp, Jean Carn, and Charles "Majid" Greenlee. Ms. McCord is presently working on a musical which will be presented by the Voices of New Afrpca House Choir in March, 1977.

William Dargan, a native of Georgia, is Director of Music at Deerfield Academy, just north of Amherst. He received musical training at Morehouse College (Atlanta), The American University (Wash., D.C.), the Aspen Music School (Colorado), and UMass. He has taught music at Morehouse College where he also directed the Jazz Laboratory Ensemble and was assistant director of the Marching Band. Mr. Dargan's instrumental compositions have been performed by the Atlantic Symphony, the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and at the Aspen Music Festival. Shorter works include "Days for Ophelia," "Main Street," "Transition," and "Biblical Meditations on Peace." Mr. Dargan also plays and teaches saxophone and clarinet.

Dr. Frederick C. Tillis should need no introduction to the University community. Since he joined the UMass faculty in 1970, he has been involved in both the writing and performance of music in the Black tradition. As director of the UMass Jazz Workshop, he initiated a series of regular performances by both large and small ensembles of student musicians. He has worked closely with Profs. Max Roach, Archie Shepp, and Horace. C. Boyer to maintain the presence of Black music in the UMass area. Dr. Tillis comes from a rich tradition of music, having taught at Wiley, Grambling, and Kentucky State Colleges. He has composed more than fifty instrumental and vocal works, which have been performed at UMass, Carnegie Hall, the National Gallery in Washington, D.C., and a number of colleges and universities. Dr. Tillis has recently created a program in Afro-American music in the Music Department.

Expressions of love don't come easy

By LU JUANE CROCKETT

If I smiled at you would you smile at me? If I asked you to walk beside me because I feel comforted in your presence, would you do it? If I needed fifteen minutes of your time to express my sorrow, would you be there to listen? I need you and you need me. People need each other to love, to care, to understand their needs.

As I venture to classes from day to day, I don't find too much of this anymore and it seems as though a smile, a friendly exchange of hello, has almost become obsolete amongst the Third World population here at UMass. Many times when I've attempted to speak to a new face with a cheery hello, my response has been a cold look, turned away eyes, or no response at all. Everyone seems to be in their own world, with their own friends, apathetic to the rest of the Third World community.

I found out that UMass can be a very frightening place with my friends and family so far away. No one had or took the time to listen when I was troubled, comfort me when I was confused, or encourage me when I lacked confidence. As individuals, we are always longing for someone to help us realize our best selves, to understand our hidden selves, to believe in us, and demand our best. But who really takes that time anymore? Who takes the time to sense the sorrow hidden deep in tearless eyes? Who suffers in silence to ease another's pain? Who rises up in the morning thinking only what to give, instead of what should be given to them? I can't think of very many, can you?

It saddens me to see such severe criticism and exclusion amongst my own people. What is this thing they call separatism, and how did it become so deeply manifested into our community? If someone with brown skin and black features doesn't happen to measure up to what your conception of what "being black" is about, is that any reason not to speak? Just because an individual is not as outspoken, stays to themself, and is perceived as "stuck up", are those justifiable reasons to alienate them. They're still human, wanting to be loved, needed and accepted, just like you.

Do you have any idea how it feels to be over 1000 miles from your home, family, and friends? Can you imagine the lonliness and alienation one experiences when your own people won't even smile, express little, if any, kind gestures, or who give you that irritated, disgusted look when you ask directions? Why is it necessary for brothers and sisters to always cut each other down? Hey... we're all we've got up here to survive. If we can't take the time to encourage and support each other, who will?

When you see someone who needs a helping hand, would it be so hard to reach out yours? When you pass a brother or sister who looks hurt and troubled, a smile of understanding can lift the burdens of the world off their shoulders. Expressions of love don't cost much, especially when it extends out to so many. Won't you spread yours around? There's someone out there who needs it.

Final vote tabs say no bottle bill recount

BOSTON (UPI) — Final vote tabulations by state officials yesterday ruled out a possible recount in November's narrow defeat of a controversial referendum question calling for a ban on no-return bottles nin Massachusetts.

Figures released by the state Board of Bank Examiners, which conducted the official tally, showed the bottle question lost 1,228,051 to 1,207,342. The 20,709-vote defeat was about 8,000 votes short of the margin needed to permit a recount. Under state law, a recount can be requested in contests where the two sides are separated by less than half of one per cent of the votes cast.

The Committee for a Massachusetts Bottle Bill, sponsors of the proposal, said it woul ask State Secretary Paul Guzzi to conduct a recount if possible.

A recount was opposed by the Committee to Protect Jobs and Use of Convenience Containers, which spent about $1.5 million to defeat the proposal.

The most crushing referendum defeat was suffered by supporters of a proposal to set up a state power authority. That question was defeated by a 6-1 margin.

A proposal to ban private ownership of handguns was voted down by a margin of more than 2-1.

Here are the results on the other binding questions:

—State equal grights amendment, 60 per cent yes, 40 per cent no;

—Graduated income tax, 27 per cent yes, 73 per cent no.

—Absentee voting for religious reasons, 55 per cent yes, 45 per cent no;

—Flat electric rates, 25 per cent yes, 75 per cent no.

Muskie speculates secretary post

AUGUSTA, Maine (UPI) — Associates of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Maine) said yesterday the senator has talked about the possibility of being named secretary of state, but an aide to the Maine Democrat said it was only "idle speculation."

Muskie was duck hunting in Maryland and could not be reached to comment on an exclusive story in the Boston Herald-American saying he appeared to be the front-runner among secretary of state candidates Jimmy Carter was considering.

Muskie press secretary Robert Rose said it was too early to speculate on the appointment.

But other associates of the senator's in Maine said the possibility Muskie would be named to that post or some other high position in the Carter administration had been talked about for several weeks.

The associates, who asked not to be named, said Muskie had discussed the possibility of them.

Ellison jurors deliberate

BOSTON (AP) — A jury deliberated five hours without reaching a verdict yesterday in the trial of former Boston School Committeeman Paul J. Ellison, accused of larceny in an alleged scheme to steal city payroll money.

Closing arguments by the defense and prosecution were made during the morning in Superior Court here and the Suffolk Court jury received the case by afternoon. The panel retired for the night at 5:45 p.m.

State contract signed

BOSTON (UPI) — Administration and union officials yesterday signed a one-year contract giving Massachusetts state employes $1 250 in pay raises and bonuses.

The contract is the first negotiated under a new public employe collective bargaining law. It was ratified Friday by a 8-1 margin.

An earlier contract offer was rejected by employes in June after a bitter three-day strike.

U.N. will ask for table of media control issue

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — A United Nations special committee yesterday tried to reach a compromise on a Soviet-inspired resolution that allegedly advocates state control of the mass media.

There was little hope the panel could reach an agreement and present it before the Tuesday night deadline to the general conference to the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, conference sources said.

The 25-nation committee probably will ask the general conference later this week to table the thorny issue until the next meeting of the conference in two years, the sources said.

The conference established the committee to handle all controversial issues, the most explosive being a Soviet resolution that western nations opposed as advocating goverment control of the news.

The resolution says, "States are responsible for the activities in the international sphere of all mass media under their jurisdiction."

Led by the United States, the West earlier had the issue shifted from the full conference to theispecial committee and delegates confidently predicted the issue was "dead" for the duration of the meeting.

Since then, the committee — which includes the United States and the Soviet Union — has tried to draw up a compromise draft but its efforts have thus far met with no success.

The special panel may nevertheless draft a short, very general statement on mass media, being careful to avoid all controversial issues and statements, conference sources said.

A second resolution on the media is expected to be approved by the full conference later this week, this time with overwhelming U.S. and West European support.

Asylum sought for 'associates'

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — The Rev. Paul D. Lindstrom, director of the Illinois-based "Remember the Pueblo Committee" asked the U.S. Embassy yesterday for political asylum in the United States for two Chinese Communist officials now in Mexico.

Both Chinese, identified by Lindstrom only as "associates" of ousted Chinese Vice Premier Chang Chun-chiao, have information on "several hundred" U.S. prisoners of war — captured in Laos and North Vietnam — who allegedly are being held in China, the Prospect Heights, Ill., minister said.

Accompanied by Dr. Philip E. Bennett, associate director of the committee, Lindstrom talked with a political affairs officer at the American Embassy yesterday morning.

Lindstrom and Bennett said they have had several meetings with the two Chinese over the past several years because of their efforts to track down U.S. Air Force 1st Lt. George Duncan MacDonald, shot down over Laos Dec. 21, 1972, and listed as missing by the Air Force.

Bennett and the minister said they got a phone call from the two Chinese several days ago asking them to fly here Sunday.

"These two associates of Chang Chun-chiao desire political asylum in the United States," Lindstrom said in a statement to UPI.

"Because Chang has been deposed by the new leadership in China, they cannot return to China. To do so would undoubtedly mean death for them, they believe.

Always as ourselves

Roles. A lot of what we are now is training for what we will be later. It sounds so simple and realistic, but we all have hopes of being better, of being this mystical thing called 'grown up'. Things we take casually now we will, most certainly, take casually later. Things that bother us will not magically stop bothering us.

There is a movie, Not a very good movie. It deals with this sort of thing vaguely. Just enough to make my point. The movie is "The Way We Were". If you don't know it — a quick plot-summary:

Female political activist (Barbara Streisand) is in college being political. She believes very strongly in the Communist cause and peace. She hates people who don't care, more than she hates people who disagree with her. One of those people, she thinks, is Robert Redford, who plays this All American - not-too-concerned-with-anything-but-a-good-time sort of guy.

After a period of time — graduation and the war and all, they fall in love. He writes a novel. It gets published and sold to Hollywood. They move there. Everything looks rosy until Barbara gets it into her head to protect the right of free speech and defend blacklisted Hollywood people. Robert Redford tries hard to support her, but his heart isn't really in it. She needs to be involved. He doesn't. They break up. Barbara, throughout, has never stopped being political. Robert has never understood this.

My point is this: Barbara set up her values in college and so did Robert Redford. We are doing the same thing here and it is very important, at least I think it is, that we recognize this now, while those thoughts are forming.

"Growing up" is not going to change us. It will merely open up new dimensions of what we already are. It is unfair to yourself to say things like 'it will be different', 'things will change', 'I won't always be this busy'. Because you are making yourself right before your very eyes.

If you are a sexist now, you best be aware of it, someone will call you on it. So analyze yourself and learn everything you can about yourself when you have such diverse resources around you. College is a resource merely as an environment for thought, let alone the varied sort of people you meet here and the situations you have to deal with here. If you bury yourself in parties and your friends now, it will be that way later when you might be in a position to change things.

Granted, we never know what is going to happen to us, what sort of information we are going to need later. But we will always be ourselves. We have the potential now to be what we will become. It is up to us now to realize this as fact and deal with it in a responsible manner. It's up to you, however, to define responsible for yourself.

It is not the responsibility of other people to shape you and tell you what to do with your potential. This is something that is imperative to come to terms with. No one else lives your life for you. No one else has to live with your mistakes. No one else revels in your triumphs like you do. So many people are selling their version of the truth as the be all and end all, and that is not fair to you or, really, when you come right down to it, to themselves. Living in a world of carbon copies is not what I'd call exciting. Advice is a wonderful thing, but should be taken in context of what you expect for yourself.

You should be the most important thing in your life. No one else. You can't give unless you have something to give and it helps to know exactly what that is. It helps to know it now. You've heard it before, I'm sure, but instead of dismissing it this time, sit down and think about it. Give yourself a little of your own time. You're worth it!

Don't cry when it's over

By JOYCE GREENWALD

"If killing one feels good, just think how good it'll feel to kill two." Films like Hearts and Minds and Attica make me wonder if it's possible to trust anyone in power in the United States. Delusion, trickery, out and out lies ... "Cons slash hostages throats." ... "Communism is disease — it's subversive." What is the phenomena which consistently produces a gullible public and deceptive politicians? Every administration that furthered U.S. involvement in Vietnam, from Truman through Nixon, was untruthful to the American public. With this atmosphere, our fighting men were thoroughly brainwashed as to the nature of the "enemy" — the Vietnamese were reduced to monsters, lacking human characteristics.

One could never know the grief of the Vietnamese — of having one's land systematically destroyed ... of having one's daughter killed while feeding pigs, and having the pigs live ... of a funeral, where a woman threw herself into a grave, after the casket of a loved one was covered with dirt ...

A prisoner of war, a man who's been imprisoned, and probably tortured, for five years — a man who's lived through a living hell. He's speaking and I wait for a condemnation, anger, bitterness ... but it doesn't come. Instead I hear him thanking the U.S. for giving him the support that enabled him to be strong — if he was asked to go back, he would ... anything for his country — the country that tricked him into believing that, once Vietnam "went", so would the rest of the world ... the country that tricked him into hating the Vietnamese, all of them, any of them ... feeling good after dropping destruction via airplanes on countless villages, inhabited by countless fears ... never seeing the results of his heroics — people burned beyond recognition, arms and legs torn from bodies ... but that's what he was there to do, and America is proud of him. After all, by killing these people we're saving the rest of the world from falling to Communism, that dreaded affliction that threatens to separate families and infiltrate your very own community.

Another Vietnam veteran, but this man is overcome with grief after realizing what his "coach" commanded him to do. His pain is evident, but he can't cry — a sound filled with hurt and desperation is heard, but no tears are seen ... and he damns his inability to cry ... but fighting men are tough, just like football players. A football game ... hysteria ... the chant of win, win begins to sound like kill, kill, and the coach urges the players to do anything to win. The players in the game are tough — they'll do what they're told to do, not for themselves, but for the team, the coach. They're hit, and they hurt ... but they won't cry ... football players don't do that, Vietnam veterans don't do that, men don't do that.

A jail in Upstate New York ... another battle — of prisoners, many victims of racism and inadequate legal defense, making a statement to Gov. Rockefeller to improve prison conditions. This statement was made by staging an "uprising" and taking hostages, and subsequently issuing a list of reasonable conditions to be met, or considered. The hostages were well care for, as many of the hostages, themselves, confirm. But the prisoners demands are not considered, and what began with a minimum of violence erupted into a full scale war.

Our fighting men, in the form of National Guardsmen, stormed Attica with clear conscience — after all, these men were there because they'd done something wrong. With thoughts of football chants and Uncle Sam, thousands of National Guardsmen, fully armed, murdered prisoners and hostages, and maimed and tortured other prisoners.

Prior to the onslaught the prisoners were humiliated by being made to crawl across the prison yard, face down in the mud, towards the National Guardsmen, who then stripped the prisoners in a weapon search.

When the entire situation was judged, it was the prisoners who were guilty and not one official. It was ironic, somehow, that every public official involved in the Attica incident, from Rockefeller down, looked and spoke the same. These men resembled the men who prolonged our involvement in Vietnam ... middle-aged men, family men, who speak of the great white way, and of America, land of the free, protector of the world ... men who, once upon a time, were football players, and were taught that, in order to win, one must kill and not cry when it was over.

More on porno referendum

To the Editor:

This is an open letter to the Southwest Assembly.

Assemblypersons:

Concerning your recent pornography referendum, "You can't fool all of the people even some of the time." Both pro and con can agree the whole referendum was a farce. I would like to point out a few things concerning this referendum. First of all its wording was misleading. More than one person made an unintentional mistake in their balloting.

The wording was also prejudicial. Just suppose the bottle bill had read "Shall non-returnable bottles not be banned because it could very well cause jobs and make certain items more expensive." The state attorney general would never allow such a question on the ballot because of its misleading nature and prejudicial comment.

Within the specifics of the vote itself there were many unaccountable irregularities. One is the vote was not publicized sufficiently. The vote was also held on a poor date, after a long weekend for many. Most importantly was the poor location of the vote. More people pass through the lobby of any tower during any one day than pass through Hampden D.C. Even if there had been a large turnout the one or two people handling the vote taking 15 seconds for registration purposes [a conservative estimate], they could process just 1440 votes in the 6 hour voting period, still 560 votes short of what was needed for quorum.

In concluding I would like to say that I personally voted no. I chose this course of action for many actions, a major reason being the tactics of the SWA. The SWA tactics were in poor taste and both pro and con towards the referendum can agree with me on this. As it stands now I believe a good portion of the UMass community, myself included, feel that this referendum was rigged from the start!

No for faculty union

To the Editor:

Three years ago I issued a statement on the eve of the University of Massachusetts collective bargaining election which read essentially as follows:

"A number of colleagues have asked me to state my views on the upcoming collective bargaining election. I shall be brief for we have all been inundated with a wave of position papers from both sides.

"I start with the ideal or model of a university which envisions it as an academic institution, a community of scholars and students. Faculty devote their primary attention to the ancient functions of teaching and seeking the truth, but are called upon occasionally to perform the necessary community chores on committees or through administrative appointments. There is no sharp line between the two groups for faculty move in and out of administration and goals of the two groups. We are all decision-makers and we are all officers of the University. I reject the proposed adversary relationship between faculty and administrators, for the industrial model of management vs. employees is inappropriate for an academic community which aspires to excellence. We should resist all attempts to establish this alien, non-academic relationship on the campus.

"It is my prediction that if we adopt collective bargaining several undesirable trends will set in. (I am glad to have this opportunity to make a written record of these forecasts so that I can taunt my colleagues in the years to come.)

"1. Power and decision-making will increasingly move to Boston.

"2. Instead of sitting down to talk with campus administrative colleagues about mutual educational concerns in a congenial atmosphere in which, as scholars, we strive to ascertain objective truth wherever it leads, under collective bargaining both faculty and administration will be represented by squads of lawyers. Academic concerns and needs will be determined far from the campus by non-academic types who have little first-hand experience with academic life and aspirations. Personally, I still have faith that we can accomplish what we want by working in concert with administrators who are faculty on temporary assignment as administrators. I call your attention to the remarkable history of this institution during the last decade — to the accomplishments which have been made through this symbiotic relationship between faculty and administration: the splendid new Library, the greatly enhanced library book acquisition appropriations, the dramatic salary increases, the Fine Arts Center, the support of the University Press, the Massachusetts Review, the computer, etc.

"3. We will be adding still another layer, and an expensive layer, of bureaucracy — the union Goliath.

"4. We will have less flexibility in all rules, arrangements, and procedures involving sabbaticals, merit increases, teaching loads, research assignments, and all the other aspects of academic life.

"For these and many other considerations, I ask all faculty colleagues who share with me the dream that one day a great state university will arise at Amherst — to vote NO on November 15 and 16."

I must in all candor admit that in the three intervening years my case has been made weaker by the dismal performance of the central administration. However, I still hope that there are enough faculty members with enough faith in the University to forgo the temptation to vote for collective bargaining as a kind of no confidence vote in 1 Washington Mall. Let's not bring further disaster to the University by a vote for collective bargaining — remember that no university of any quality has yet voted for unionization.

Look to God first

To the Editor:

It has been said that TM improves our minds and bodies. Maybe so.

But before we look to such techniques as TM for self-improvement, for help in our daily lives, we should look to God, who made the selves we are trying to improve.

At UMass we are constantly using our minds to accumulate knowledge which will, hopefully, help us. Our bodies carry our minds, and both take us where we want to go. We can live and function in ways many other people cannot.

Yet, in the midst of our daily business, we often forget how fortunate we are. There is, however, an even greater oversight, that of losing sight of the fact that we belong to God, Who made us.

How often do we acknowledge Him? He is often seemingly silent as our world goes on. But in that stillness our Creator's greatest desire is that we begin to look to Him for the fullness of life — its hope, peace, joy, and love. These gifts are not without anxieties and hardships, some which we bring on ourselves, some which come simply because we are human, and some which are sort of inflicted upon us.

God makes everything bearable, and all these hardships can be means to self-improvement. With so many "simple techniques" as TM around to alleviate the stress of this life, God's willingness to give us His own direct help can easily go unnoticed. Yet this help remains with us as real as the Lord Jesus who physically walked on this earth giving life back to dead bodies and minds, and loving the unloveable.

TM may not be designed as a religion, but neither are many of the other experiences upon which we place high expectations — eating, sex, etc. — but still these things gradually become as little gods, clouding the truth more and more. Why not try God — He made us, knows us, loves us, and alone can truly help us.

Sharp—art?

Not who, but Why was Willoughby Sharp? From where comes this emphasis on "conceptual art". The event that took place in the Student Union Gallery last week brought to mind the "happenings" of the late sixties, but something was different. I couldn't put my finger on what it was that made it different, I suppose it was the atmosphere.

Like many, I stood in line waiting to see the "show". How very pathetic and appalling it was when we finally got in. The show should have been classified as "entertainment", rather than "art".

Viva la entertainment. Hey, how about if next week we bring to the gallery a whole bunch of mongoloid children. That would be really funny, wouldn't it. Or, I know this really cool bum in Boston that would be more than happy to feign aesthetics for three days for $300.

Mr. Sharp said that seeing him was an experience that would be video-taped by our minds and not forgotten. Sadly true. I have him carded and filed in my grey matter under "F" for fool. Not the fool in the classic sense; but fool as in self-willed lack of reason.

His "art" in this day really spiraled downward to such an extent that we as viewing public will not only pay money, but delight in such display? I personally found nothing artistically complex or aesthetic in this display of banal madness.

It wasn't the show so much in itself that bothered me as the atmosphere surrounding it was so very contrived. The show was prefaced by extensive curiosity piqued advertising.

Somewhere in the back of my head I think I must have some sympathy for this poor man that was willing to have himself exploited to this extent. But I'm finding it very hard to evoke sympathy for a public that provides the demand for this kind of entertainment under the name of "art".

Maybe we were only subjected to a ruse. But I have a dreadful feeling that the sponsors, Mr. Sharp, the technicians, and a good portion of the viewing audience thought that this was a valid artistic expression.

If you really enjoyed Willoughby Sharp you aught to take a tour through Belchertown State Hospital. It's full of unpaid "artists".

Where the boys are

For too long nowHarvard has taken it on the chin. Last week's Combat Zone incident, in which two of its lads were stabbed, has served to confirm in many UMass minds previous suspicions about our Cambridge compatriot.

Many UMies take a dim, elitist view of Harvard and call it a diploma factory, a party school, a haven for spoiled brats. Such a close-minded attitude is unwarranted and untrue. They can't help being rich. They were born into it. Why are they to blame if their fathers are slum landlords, robber barons, or fat-necked oilmen? How else to assuage their terrific burden of guilt than to frequent the seediest part of Boston? Here they can be among the down and outs, hobnobbing it with society's wayward elements. It's the life they've missed out on.

Secretly, each Harvardian wants to strip off his pumpkin gabardine suit and slip on a pair of worn jeans and Mao tee shirt and mingle with — the people. They may get stabbed occasionally but at least they've experienced a slice of life (so to speak) they never had.

A Harvard man's reputation precedes him and it often bodes ill. "You can tell a Harvard man but you can't tell him much" advise the old-timers. Imagine, if you will, being saddled with this sobriquet. Thinking you to be a smarty-pants, others will shy away, intimidated by the assumed vastness of your knowledge. As a result Harvard men lead alienated, lonely lives. Little wonder that they cruise the streets of the Back Bay looking for companionship. Count your blessings, my friend.

No degree, of course, guarantees a job, but a UMass graduate can at least hold out some hope. Pity the poor Harvard grad! When good men like Henry Kissinger and Elliot Richardson will soon be on the bread line what hope has a less talented Harvard man? After all there are only so many ambassadorships and cabinet posts to be had.

Commiserate with the luckless Harvard man who is made to hear 340 years of Harvard practical jokes, and is then expected to live up to them! They must uphold the practical joking tradition by stealing opposing team's mascots, seeing how many hot dogs wide is Harvard Square, staging panty raids. They're such a funny lot! The plain-spoken truth is that Harvard men become practical joking bores if they aren't careful.

Thus, as we have seen, a Harvard man's situation is pretty grim. Why become a Harvard man at all? Well friend, there is one feature to the Harvard education that no other university in the United States can offer. This feature has shaped the destinies of Harvard men for over 300 years. It has molded careers, suffused hopes, and inspired propitiousness. What is this unique feature? It is simply the pronunciation of "a", as in father. The changing of this pronunciation from the broad "a" sound to any other could only usher in Harvard's downfall.

As an afterthought, I have it from a good authority that, contrary to popular belief, Harvard men do not, I repeat, do not have pink semen.

ATHENS: French oceanographer Jacques Cousteau holds up two statuettes dating from the 2nd century B.C., found in an ancient shipwreck beneath the Aegean Sea. In completing 13 months of underwater exploration in Greek waters, Cousteau said yesterday he was convinced that the continent of "Atlantis was never a reality", and added that the expedition was not a total loss since it uncovered thousands of ancient artifacts. Kissinger, Romulo make more progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Philippine Foreign Secretary Carlos P. Romulo met yesterday, and made further progress toward reaching a new agreement governing U.S. bases in the Philippines, State Department officials said.

Officials were unable to say whether they expect a new agreement before the administration of President-elect Jimmy Carter takes office in two months.

Negotiations on the future status of Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Naval Station and several smaller facilities have been bogged down over Philippine demands for sovereignty and U.S. insistence on continued operational control.

Romulo, who has been attending the United Nations General Assembly in New York since September, has had several negotiating sessions with Kissinger in recent weeks.

Meanwhile, Peter M. Cody, an economist and a career officer in the foreign assistance program, was sworn in yesterday as director of the U.S. aid program in the Philippines.

He succeeds Garnett A. Zimmerly, who was killed in an airplane crash last Sept. 13 while inspecting AID projects there.

Mexican 'national unity'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's president and future president called for national unity yesterday to get the country through its economic crisis. At the same time, 28,000 landowners started an anti-government strike.

President Luis Echeverria said the rumors of a coup and further devaluations of the peso must stop "for the good of Mexico," adding that they are undermining the country's moral and political structure.

President-elect Jose Lopez Portillo, who is scheduled to succeed Echeverria on Dec. 1. issued a statement calling for "calm and tranquility."

Landowners in Sinaloa State said they called their strike for fear that Echeverria might expropriate their farms and ranches as occurred Friday in the neighboring State of Sonora. The government took over 243,100 acres of land in Sonora and gave it to more than 8,000 poor familes.

"We strike because the authorities have closed to us the pathways of law and justice," said an advertisement published in Mexico City newspapers by the Sinaloa farmers.

The strike was considered largely symbolic since crops are already in for this season and planting has not begun for next season.

In Paris—

DeGaulle's 'favorite genius', author Malraux dead at 75

PARIS (UPI) — Andre Malraux, the intellectual man of action Charles De Gaulle once called "my favorite genius," died yesterday at 75 and was mourned by friends and enemies alike.

Malraux won world fame in three separate careers: as the author of such novels as "Man's Fate" and "Man's Hope," as a flier on the Republican side in the Spanish civil war and a French resistance leader in World War II and as de Gaulle's Minister of Culture.

Malraux died of chronic lung congestion in a hospital bed in the Paris suburb of Creteil, the town hall announced.

The French government ordered flags on all public monuments lowered to half-staff. President Valery Giscard d'Estaing sent his condolences.

Communist leaders, long Malraux's bitter adversaries, also expressed their sorrow.

The family said funeral services would be strictly private. But the government announced a public memorial ceremony would be held at a date and place to be announced later.

This same procedure was followed six years ago for the burial of President Charles de Gaulle.

Giscard, who was a fellow cabinet minister of Malraux's under de Gaulle, wrote to Malraux's only surviving off-spring, Florence, wife of filmmaker Alain Resnais, saying, "The loss you have suffered affects every Frenchman and Frenchwoman who has followed the dramatic life of Andre Malraux, marked by an exceptional closeness between literature and action."

Communist writer Louis Aragon commented, "Despite all the political and other divergences between us, he was one of the men I most esteemed of all I have met in my life."

Malraux, like many other intellectuals of the 1930s, flirted with communism but broke spectularly with the party following the signing of the Hitler-Stalin non-aggression pact in 1939.

"It was not I, but events, that changed," Malraux said at the time.

George Marchais, secretary-general of the French Communist Party, said yesterday, "His passing grieves us ... In his struggles he was frequently close to us and sometimes far away from us. But what remains is that he was always driven by a powerful idea — France, its place and its role in the world."

Malraux was the original "involved man" — the rare combination of intellectual and man of action typified by one of his few heroes, Col. T.E. Lawrence (Lawrence of Arabia).

The late President John Kennedy once remarked of Malraux, "I think he leaves us all far behind."

Ordered by de Gaulle to "restore the grandeur of France," Malraux had centuries of soot scrubbed from Paris facades, sent the Mona Lisa and Venus de Milo on tour overseas from the Louvre museum and opened cultural centers to breathe new life into dead French provincial towns.

Four decades after they were written his novels, "Man's Fate" and "Man's Hope", remain masterpieces.

Malraux was married twice.

His two sons, Gauthier and Vincent, were killed in a car accident in 1961.

Amherst seniors discover fossils

Two Amherst College seniors majoring in geology, Tom DeVries of Woodbury, Conn., and Trem Smith of St. Louis, Mo., discovered fossils last spring and summer which give further evidence that the New England coastal region may have been part of Western Europe and-or Northwest Africa about 400 million years ago.

DeVries and an English geologist, Dr. John Collinson of Keele University, were taken last May on a field trip to Conanicut (Jamestown) Island, Rhode Island, in Narragansett Bay, where they discovered fossils of trilobites — extinct marine anthropods somewhat similar to horseshoe crabs. Collinson was the guest of Prof. Edward S. Belt of the Amherst Geology Department.

Belt says that "the fossils were confirmed as trilobites by Dr. Allison R. Palmer of the State University of New York at Stony Brook; but without a specimen with a head (all segments found at first were only body segments), the precise age and correlation of the fossils remained obscure. During the summer, Trem Smith found the only fossil so far discovered that included a head."

Smith had been mapping Conanicut Island as his honors thesis at Amherst, while, simultaneously, working under a "Coal Grant." The grant work, a search for coal deposits which was carried out this summer under the auspices of the Weston Observatory, led Smith to the unexpected discovery of more fossils, including the first whole specimen.

Smith's finds lay in a box until the annual meeting of the New England Intercollegiate Geological Conference, Oct. 8 to 10, when Palmer was shown the specimen.

"He became very excited," says Belt, "proclaimed it Middle Cambrian in age (about 550 millions years old), and cited the nearest affinities in Braintree, Mass., Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, England, Brittany, Northwest Africa, and Northern Spain."

Belt said that a distinctly North American type of trilobite is "widely known from the rocks west of the Hudson River," but that Palmer says the Amherst finds are similar to the Northwest Africa and Southwest European types instead, indicating that southern Rhode Island was not part of the North American continental mass, or "plate"; that, rather, it belonged — with those parts of Europe and Africa — to the "Acado-Baltic" plate.

"The two plates are thought to have collided about 700 million years ago," Belt explained, "and when the present ATlantic Ocean opened up, pieces of Europe and Africa were left behind along the eastern edge of New England, Maritime Canada, and Newfoundland."

The work on Conanicut Island continues, and Smith tells of their more recent discovery of a "monster" fossil — a foot and a half long — a very unusual specimen, about 10 times the size of the previous discoveries in the area.

Beaver family's impact on environment studied

There is a family of beavers living in Lawrence Swamp and Hampshire College student Rob Moir is measuring their impact on the environment.

Moir plans to submit a report on the beavers to the Amherst Conservation Commission next spring. The report will dwell on topics such as the town's need and options for beaver management and the implications of each option.

He has seen only two beavers in the pond but there may be more. The animals feed on different kinds of swamp vegetation during the warm parts of the year but are now collecting food for the winter from trees in the flooded area. The beavers fell the trees, strip the branches and gnaw on the bark.

The beaver grazing appears to be within the confines of the town lands, but one South East Street farmer is worried about flooding which has occurred in one of his meadows.

The farmer, according to Moir, has lived on the land for many years and knows the seasonal patterns of flooding well. Therefore, he associates the recent inundation of his field with the beavers. Moir will attempt to determine if there is, in fact, a correlation.

Moir is concerned that the farmer's viewpoint be considered equally with any which might favor the beaver colony. Some farmers tend to be biased against the creatures; others import them to create watering ponds for agricultural uses.

Beavers are not always advantageous when they overpopulate an area. They can foul drinking water by stagnating it, for example. State officials used to remove and relocate beavers from overcrowded colonies, and UMass researchers have been studying beaver sterilization at Quabbin Reservoir as a control solution.

Moir intends to offer the town a strictly objective analysis of the benefits and detriments of the beavers in Lawrence Swamp. His work will also serve as his Hampshire College Division III advanced study project and it will be evaluated by a committee including Pete Westover of the town conservation department.

He expects to receive his bachelor's degree from the School of Natural Science at Hampshire in May. He hopes to teach environmental education at the elementary school level after graduating.

Civil Service Commission announces exam deadlines

Application deadlines for the 1977 Federal Summer Employment Examination have been announced by the U.S. Civil Service Commission (CSC).

The examination, which includes a written test, applies to most Federal summer jobs in clerical and administrative positions and to subprofessional jobs in engineering and the physical and biological sciences GS-1 through GS-4.

Applicants are urged to file early to receive maximum consideration for employment because opportunities for summer employment are extremely limited. Each year more than 100,000 candidates qualify through this examination for the approximately 10,000 summer jobs which are filled. About 8,000 of the jobs filled are clerical, and 2,000 are subprofessional.

Tests are scheduled locally by CSC area offices (in Boston, Mass., and Hartford, Conn.). Applicants who file with an area office by Dec. 19 will be tested in January. Those who file by January 13 will be tested in February. Applicants postmarked after Jan. 13 will not be accepted.

Applicants will be notified about two weeks in advance of when and where to report for the written test.

Candidates who took the test and qualified for summer employment in 1976 may renew their eligibility without retaking the written test by submitting an updating by Jan. 13.

Instructions for filing for the written test and for renewing eligibility, along with all necessary forms, are included in CSC Announcement No. 414, Summer Jobs.

The Announcement also contains information on how to apply for summer jobs for which the written test is not required. Generally, candidates for such jobs are rated on college study or job-related experience, and candidates apply directly to the hiring agency. Application deadlines for each agency are listed in the announcement.

Information on summer jobs as laborers; on jobs requiring trade skills; and on jobs under government-wide programs for student trainees, needy youth, and Federal interns also is included in the announcement.

The announcement, No. 414, which details Federal summer jobs opportunities nationwide, can be obtained from Congressman Conte's two district offices at 100 North Street, Pittsfield and 650 Dwight Street, Holyoke, as well as from his Washington Office, 239 Cannon House Office Building. The announcement may also be obtained from most college placement offices and from local Federal Job Information Centers.

The U.S. Postal Service is not participating in the 1977 summer employment program. Inquiries regarding summer employment with the Postal Service should be directed to the post office where employment is desired.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, November 24 — Born today, you are a decisive individual, capable of making up your mind honestly, and, for the most part, permanently, very nearly on the spur of the moment. Neither aggressive nor particularly passive, you manage to maintain a healthy balance between giver and receiver, between leading and following, between initiating and waiting for others to initiate. You are especially adept at leading while seeming to follow, or vice versa, during such times as would prove detrimental were you to openly lead. In addition, you know exactly when to act in certain ways; you have a knack for feeling out the mood of the moment.

You take great pleasure from social activities. On the other hand, you enjoy immensely any time you have alone for the furthering of your own interests in your own way. Travel, particularly during "off" seasons of the year, brings you not only the joy of new experiences but the healthy attitude that comes of having to adapt to ways other than your own ways for doing things. Somewhat spoiled within your own domestic circle, you try to make up for it by being especially adaptable outside that circle.

Although you enjoy activity, you welcome days that others would term dull. It may be that you are a trifle more introspective than is good for you -- but it is introspection and the self-understanding it brings you, as well as the understanding of your fellow human beings, that more or less insures you many successful personal relationships.

Record number of Americans enrolled in higher education

A record 17,059,000 Americans age 17 years or older were registered in adult education activities from May, 1974, to May, 1975, according to data released by Marie D. Eldridge, Administrator of HEW's National Center for Education Statistics (NCES).

Between 1969 and 1975, while the adult population grew 12.6 per cent, participation in adult education increased by 30.8 per cent. More adults said that they were participants in adult education (17,059,000) than were full-time students in college (11,078,000).

The NCES data indicate that among adult education participants:

— Over half (56.3 per cent) were between 17 and 34 years of age.

— Prior education level correlated with participation. Only 3.3 per cent of those with less than a high school diploma were involved, in contrast to 28.3 per cent of those with a bachelor's degree.

— Vietnam war veterans were well represented. Almost a fourth were registered in one or more adult education activities.

— Occupational training was the most popular area of study, attracting 42.8 per cent of all participants. The next largest area of interest was general education with 24.5 per cent of all participants.

— Two and four-year colleges were the most frequently used sponsors of adult education programs, followed by employers, public schools, community organizations, and government agencies.

The above figures were derived from a survey of adult education conducted every three years by the Bureau of the Census. Further information is available from the National Center for Education Statistics, 400 Maryland Avenue, S.W., Washington, D.C., 20202.

UMass soccer co-captains

CORRECTION — Larry Aronson (l) and Ed Niemiec (r) have been named the 1977 UMass soccer co-captains. Yesterday the Collegian mistakenly named Mike Parsons and Mark Hanks as co-captains.

Men's crew rallies; wins Frostbite regatta

The men's crew team travelled to Philadelphia this past weekend to participate in the Bicentennial Frostbite Regatta on the Schuylkill River. The crew entered the Silver "A" four with cox event against the likes of division one schools Princeton, MIT, BU, and Rutgers. Being a division two school, UMass was certainly an underdog in the race.

At the onset of the 1500-meter race, Princeton led for the first twenty strokes by about one seat over UMass with BU close behind. According to coxswaim Mark Lyle the crew moved ahead during the next ten strokes as it "lengthened out" to take a one seat lead over the Princeton crew.

UMass led the rest of the way although BU made a strong challenge with 700 meters to go. Sprinting at approximately 36 strokes per minute, the men held off the BU and Princeton sprints to win by slightly open water. The winning time was 5.21.6 while Princeton clocked 5.24.8 and BU another two seconds behind.

Coxed by senior Mark Lyle the boat consisted of sophomore stroke Rob Gardner, senior Mike Melvin at 3, junior Mike Partridge at 2, and senior Dick Dunne at bow. The crew will now be working indoors for the remainder of the semester in an effort to gain the necessary strength and endurance in preparation of the spring racing season.

In the field events, UMass will have a few outstanding performers of its own. Ken Adamson, one of the top long jumpers in NE will compete in his specialty. Brady Mayer will be in the triple jump along with freshman Bruce Parsons, who has jumped over 46 feet. The shot put will be contested by freshman record holder Ron Melkonian. The high jump will have Mayer and soph Bob Fitzgerald.

King will be interested in seeing how freshman Mark Dale performs in the 60, while veterans Rich Thompson and John Richards will be in the 600. Mark Healy, who was conference champ in the 600 as a freshman, will be moving up to the 1,000 for this meet.

Mayer and Parsons will be in the 60 high hurdles. A problem comes up in the mile relay, which King expects to be a strong point of the team. Joe Martens, probably the most versatile athlete on the team, has a pulled stomach muscle and will sit out the meet. In his absence, Richards, Thompson, Healy and either Doug Fraser or Rich Hoag will make up the squad. With the members of the cross country team resting after completion of their season, sub varsity runners will probably be used to fill in the distance events.

"That's right," said King. "We'll be throwing the subs into the mile and 4x880 relays, along with the distance medley relay."

The women will have a limited program, with just the mile and distance medley relay on the card. The mile relay team will have Kris Perron, Julie Lafreniere, Karlyn Shea and Sue Kibling. Two teams are entered in the distance medley. For one team, Lafreniere will run the 800, Shea the 440, Johara Chapman the three-quarter mile, and Debbie Farmer the mile.

believe where they are right now. We haven't given them anything — they've earned all they've gotten." The 6-foot-9 Kohlhaas won't start, but according to the coach "is pushing Donoghue right to the brink."

Leaman has often said that who starts a game is less important than who finishes it, and the 11th year coach intends to depend heavily on his bench.

"With the type of game and the style we'll be playing, running and pressing, I think we may use 10 players in the game. We'll need three regular guards, three regular forwards, and two centers."

West Virginia, which meets UMass again in early February in a league tilt, will be led by All-American candidate Tony Robertson, a 6-foot-5 senior guard. Robertson led West Virginia with a 17.9 scoring clip last year, and according to Leaman, "we'll definitely have to look out for him."

Three other starters return for West Virginia, with 6-foot-7 forward Russell Chapman, and guards Bob Huggins and Sid Bostick back. Leaman also noted sophomore center Junious Lewis (6-foot-11) as a "fine athlete, someone we'll have to respect." With junior Maurice Robinson (6-foot-7) also seeing him up front, UMass will give away some inches at one of the forward spots.

The opening game, featuring Syracuse and Harvard, tends to favor the Orangemen. Syracuse has won 20 or more games five of the past six years, have made the NCAA playoffs four consecutive seasons, and return four starters from last year's 20-9 squad. Led by senior guard Jim "Bugs" Williams and 6-foot-11 freshman Roosevelt Bouie, voted Player of the Year by the New York Sportswriters Association the past two years, Syracuse, on paper, has the advantage over the rebuilding Crimson. Former UMass player Rick Pitino holds an assistant coach position at Syracuse.

Harvard, meanwhile, lost 10 lettermen from an 8-18 unit, including its co-MVP's Brian Banks and Glenn Fine, both on leaves of absence. Tom "Satch" Sanders squad dropped its only game with UMass last year, 99-87 at Cambridge.

Equestrians sweep Hartford horse show

By SUE SCANLON

Two weeks off proved just the thing for an already outstanding UMass Equestrian Team; as it swept the UHartford Intercollegiate Horse Show this past Sunday. The team dominated the show from the very beginning. At the end of the day, they had claimed six blue ribbons and were the high point college champions of the show. The UMET is now second in the region for total team points with Colby-Sawyer College leading by only ten points.

"I feel confident that we can be the regional champions this year," coach Sarah Carlson stated. "Consistency in our riders abilities in the crux of our success." When asked about the possibilities of regaining their National Champion title, Carlson commented that it was still too early in the season to tell, though the thought has crossed my mind.

As it has been all season, freshman superstar, Whitney Buttrick, showed everyone how it's supposed to be done. For the fourth time in five shows, Buttrick claimed the high point rider award by winning both her classes. With barely half the season over, she has already qualified for the regional championships this spring.

At the UHartford show, Ms. Buttrick had only one of the many superb rides by UMass Team members. Among those winners were Sharon Scraggs, Sandy Most, Pam Johnson, Robin Ziegler, Sue Scanlon, Patty Zinkowski, and Linda Roberts.

The next show for the UMET will be at the University of New Hampshire. It will be its first intercollegiate horse show and they all are looking forward to it. The UNH show is the last horse show of the fall season. Showing will resume with a full spring schedule, beginning in March.

Harriers to UConn for Relays

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

What amounts to a time trial under actual meet conditions will await that men's and part of the women's indoor track teams when they travel to Storrs, Connecticut on Sunday to participate in the 2nd annual UConn Relays.

Since the meet is not a regularly contracted meet, UMass will not be sending a full squad, nor will the coaches be terribly concerned with the outcome.

"We're taking it as a meet to see where our kids are at," said assistant coach Gary King. "We won't be looking for an all out effort."

Although the UMass runners will be using it as a workout, the meet is official, and will boast some fine teams. The 10-18 team field will be drawn from New York, New Jersey and New England, according to King.

Seton Hall appears to have the classiest team, if King's information is accurate. The New Yorkers have two national class 60-yard dash men, who double in the 60-yard high hurdles, also in national class times. They also have a 7-3 high jumper, a 1:46 half-miler, and the defending IC4A mile relay champs in their camp.

Star BU gridder dies from adverse reaction

A first-string Boston University football player who was in the hospital to have his fractured leg reset, died yesterday after he had an adverse reaction to an anesthetic.

Another "Tony" A. Danckert, 19, of Clarksville, N.Y. was pronounced dead at Children's Hospital here at 2:18 p.m.

The starting sophomore linebacker, recognized by his coaches as one of the best players on the team, injured his left leg Saturday in a game at Louisville. BU lost 16-7.

He was brought to the hospital Sunday where he was given the simple anesthetic. School and hospital officials said they had not known that Danckert was one of a handful of people suffering from "malignant hypothermia."

"This was not an allergic reaction; it was a reaction to anesthesia based on something genetic — called malignant hyperthermia," said hospital spokeswoman Susan Stockman.

"His body temperature went up dramatically and his metabolism registered abnormally high.

"One out of 14,000 - 20,000 persons has this problem," she said. "Sixty per cent of people with this condition don't survive the initial reaction. He did survive and was fine until this Tuesday morning, 18 hours after the anesthesia.

"It's extremely rare that someone dies from a later reaction. There are only about five documented cases of this happening."

Ms. Stockman said Danckert had no recorded history of the hyperthermia and symptoms were not discovered until after the anesthesia was administered.

The 6-foot-3, 200-pound Danckert "was talking and was very lucid" on Monday but suffered the reaction early Tuesday.

By mid-morning his heart had stopped and he was being kept alive by machine, Ms. Stockman said. The 6-foot-2, 219 pound player, who made the first-string squad as a freshman and was voted second string All-Yankee Conference this past year, was a "superb" tackler and called all the defensive signals, John Simpson, BU Athletic Director noted.

"This just makes you realize how dear your life is," UMass offensive coach Bill Maxwell said. "It's a shocking and tragic thing.

"He was a very rugged and outstanding player against UMass, and I'm sure other coaches would say the same. I just remember him as an outstanding athlete, and someone who just went about his job in a quiet way," Maxwell said.

BU's Division of Physical Development Programs discontinued all activies for 48 hours in respect for Danckert.

Hawks hand skaters first loss

Manchester, N.H. — The St. Anselm's hockey team, spurred by two quick breakaway goals in the first period, outskated and outscored UMass 7-0 last night in Manchester, N.H.

The loss was the first in three games for UMass, while for the Hawks it was an opening win.

"Nothing went right for us tonight," UMass coach Jack Caniff said following the loss. "I hope we don't have another like this in a long time."

The Hawks jumped out to a 3-0 lead after the opening 20 minutes and breezed home from there. St. Anselm's capitalized on a pair of breakaways less than a minute apart to give the home team a quick advantage.

Henry Coito noticed the initial tally at 14:43, and Ricky Graham followed with a shot that beat Minuteman goalie Dana Redmond after defenseman Chris Lamby fell on the play.

Lamby was later ejected from the game in a penalty-filled second period when he became a little too vocal with the referee.

St. A's Joe O'Neil beat Redmond with 49 seconds left in the opening period with a tough-angle, off balance shot from Redmond's right to make it 3-0.

Redmond made seven saves in the period, while all eight of UMass' shots were stopped by Hawk goalie John Parisi.

St. Anselm's continued its onslaught in the second period as the Hawks upped the margin to 5-0 on goals by George Govin and Tom Cullen.

Govin tallied at 5:27 of the period after a scramble in front of the UMass goal. With Redmond down on his side after a save on Graham's shot, the puck rolled loose to the right side of the net where Govin was there to put it home.

Cullen scored just 23 seconds later with a 20-foot wrist shot on a 2-on-1 break.

Redmond, who made five saves in the period, exited in favor of senior Doug Janik at the 6:15 mark. Janik turned aside six St. A's shots in the period, while Parisi stopped all nine Minuteman shots.

The middle period saw 39 minutes in penalties handed out along with Lamby's Game Misconduct.

The consistent Hawks kept up their relentless attack and added two scores in the final period, a power play goal by Graham, and a tally by Bill Flaherty for the 7-0 win.

Parisi finished the game with 28 saves, while Janik had 13 in his stint, and Redmond 12.

Requiem of a pro football quarterback

To see an outstanding athlete perform while in the twilight of his or her star-studded career is indeed a very sad thing to witness sometimes. In the back of your mind you picture how great these athletes performed while in the prime of their careers, and then right before you, you see these once revered stars humiliated in their struggle to gain respectability.

Unable to perform the heroics that they were once capable of, the aging superstar athlete struggles and struggles to help his team win a game and often comes up empty-handed looking terrible in the process.

Your heart has to bleed a little for these people.

Such was the case last Sunday afternoon when the New England Patriots went up against the New York Jets in Shea Stadium, the home stomping grounds of the Jets.

The tide of history finally turned for the Pats in this game. Never before in the past decade had the Patriots traveled down to Shea Stadium as the favorites against the Jets. There was always one person who would always beat the Patriots in more ways than one, and that was Joe Namath.

But on this chilly November Sunday afternoon, Joe 'Willy' could do no right, and was just about booed out of the ballpark by the fans. The one-time toast of Broadway was now a bum.

Indeed, Namath did have a very poor passing day on Sunday, as he was intercepted six times while fumbling another time, but Broadway Joe hung in and took a brutal beating from the Patriots defense in trying to win the game for the hapless Jets.

Every time he came on or off the field, the New York faithful booed and jeered their one-time beloved hero. But what can these people expect? Don't they realize that Namath is lucky to be even walking? Don't they realize that he is playing behind one of the poorest offensive lines in all of pro football? Don't the fans realize that Namath's pass receivers can't even hold onto the ball once they catch it? What do they want from this poor guy, miracles?

All the fans remember is the Namath of old, who used to constantly burn defensive secondaries with long bombs to Don Maynard or George Sauer. They remember the games he passed for over 400 yards and broke several NFL passing records. Most of all the fans remember Namath for the brilliant performance he turned in during the 1969 Super Bowl victory over the Colts.

But those days are gone, and the talented players that teamed up with Namath in those days have all retired from the sport. The player who single-handedly turned the old AFL into a successful pro football league, is now teamed up with a lot of inexperienced rookies and second-rate players, and that has hindered his performances. But the fans still expect a lot from him.

But how do you think Namath must feel? He has gone the entire route, from an exciting rookie, to a Super Bowl hero, to a last-place bum, all in the matter of ten years.

Once the most respected and feared passer in all of football, Namath is now nothing more than an adequate NFL quarterback. No longer does he receive the emotionally stirring standing ovations he received from the crowd every time he walked on or off the field. No longer is Namath the toast of the Big Apple. No longer do youngsters idolize him.

It is indeed a very sad thing to see. Just think of what Broadway Joe could have been if he had played his final years with a competitive and respectable team instead of the floundering Jets. There is no telling how many more records he would have tumbled. But like the great pro that he is, Namath doesn't think of what could have been, he just thinks about winning the next game for the Jets.

Hoopsters tap-off season

By RON ARENA

The 1976-77 edition of the UMass basketball team will make its debut as the Minutemen take on West Virginia in the 3rd Annual Hall of Fame Tip-Off Tournament Friday night at the Springfield Civic Center. The 8:30 game will follow the 6:30 opener between Syracuse and Harvard, with the winners and losers meeting the following night for the championship and consolation games, respectively.

UMass, which captured the tournament last year with wins over Ohio University and Niagara, and West Virginia are both members of the new Eastern Collegiate Basketball League, but this will not be a league game. The two clubs have met twice in their history, with the Mountaineers nipping UMass in each outing, 63-62, and 89-85 in overtime.

The Minutemen are coming off a 21-6 season, marred only by two losses in the ECAC post season tournament, while West Virginia looks to better its 15-13 mark.

UMass coach Jack Leaman sees the tournament as a confidence-builder, saying, "A win in this tournament will give us a whole lot of confidence, and make our kids feel a whole lot better. We're in the position of selling to these kids the fact that they belong in the league they'll be playing in."

Leaman will go with a slightly revised starting lineup from the one he finished last season with, despite all five of those starters returning. Mark Donoghue, last year's MVP in the tourney, will once again start at center, while senior Jim Town, last year's New England Player-of-the-Year, will start at one forward position, and junior Derick Clainorne at one of the grounds. Sophomores Eric Williams (forward) and Brad Johnson (guard) have been given the nod at the other two starting roles, relegating junior forward Mike Pyatt, last year's top scorer, and backcourt man Alex Eldridge to a substitutes role.

"Our sophomores have been outstanding," Leaman said in regard to Williams, Johnson, and center Len Kohlhaas. "I really don't

AAUP charges administration

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

With the vote on whether to establish a collective bargaining unit for faculty only two days away, the Amherst Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) recently filed charges against the University for "improper campaign practices."

In the suit filed with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission AAUP charged that recent letters to faculty from President Robert C. Wood, Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, Amherst Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Paul L. Puryear, and Boston Dean Robert J. Stamer violate state law by making "coersive" statements and misrepresentation of state law.

In an attempt to convince faculty to vote "no agent," according to AAUP President Joseph S. Larson, professor of Forestry here, these administrators "made statements misrepresenting state laws to influence or coerce faculty rule."

"We don't mind administrators calling for a faculty vote for 'no agent'," Larson said last night. "What we do mind is that they are misrepresenting the law and threatening faculty."

According to a news release from the AAUP office, the letters in question imply that membership in a faculty union would be cumpulsory and that should collective bargaining be adopted the nature of faculty participation in university governance and personnel decisions would automatically be altered and possibly transferred to the President's office.

These statements, AAUP attorney Carolyn I. Polowy said, are contrary to state law since membership in a faculty union cannot be made obligatory under Massachusetts law. Furthermore, noted Polowy, during an election campaign and during the negotiation of a contract the administration cannot threaten to withdraw or change terms and conditions of employment for any faculty or staff member.

Larson said the AAUP would like to be on record for saying they regard the present faculty governance and personnel procedures as conditions of employment which have had prior sanction by the University Board of Trustees and regards any attempt to weaken the faculty role in either as a practice prohibited by the state collective bargaining statutes.

Larson and Boston AAUP chapter President Ruth Bennett said that erosion of effective faculty participation in University governance and a lack of effective communication with the administration are prime reasons why UMass faculty have sought to institute collective bargaining.

Larson continued, "It is a gross misrepresentation of both state law and the experience of collective bargaining at the University level for the administration to state that a contract will not deal with faculty governance or faculty voice in University affairs."

Wood, in his letter calling for a 'no agent' vote, said that a collective bargaining unit will not necessarily be able to negotiate on topics of importance to faculty.

Wood said that according to the New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission on the case of Rutgers University and AAUP, the Commission held that budgetary matter, quotas on tenure, the composition of committees to assist Board in decision making and class size, and action decisions on academic calendar were not held as mandatory subjects (subjects which must be negotiated) of bargaining at Ruters. Wood said the same would be true at UMass.

According to Larson, however, contracts for Massachusetts Community Colleges hosting a collective bargaining unit do include these as mandatory subjects. This precedent has become Massachusetts state law.

Wood said that "in those areas which are mandatory subjects for negotiation, the creation of a single bargaining unit for the two campuses would inevitably shift the focus for most actions from the present, governance-driven, campus-based model into the president's office," Wood said.

Wood also said there can only be one contract for the Boston and Amherst campuses.

Larson said this is technically correct, but that two-year contracts can be made separating the two campuses legitimately.

Wood said, "It is clear that should a majority of the bargaining unit choose to be represented by a union, the focus of personnel decisions, as well as the existing personnel policies, would be subject to reexamination."

Larson said that under Massachusetts collective bargaining, the employee cannot reexamine policies or change them. Larson said that in saying he can, Wood is threatening the faculty if they should vote for a union.

Bromery, in his letter to the faculty, calls attention to the fact that the legislature has failed to fund a single education contract for the past two years since the inception of the collective bargaining law.

"Further, the recent remarks of Secretary Parks at a Board of Trustees Executive Committee meeting clearly indicate that salary adjustments in higher education will be the same for all faculty and staff members regardless of whether or not they are represented by collective bargaining contracts," said Bromery.

Larson argues, however, that is is not an open and shut case. Larson said that when the freeze on merit salary increases began, Universities within the state could still bargain for these merit increases.

Larson said that Puryear's statements on whether collective bargaining enhances the role of university faculty in the governance process and whether collective bargaining increases salary and fringe benefits for faculty and staff do not pertain to UMass since he uses contracts in Florida as basis for these statements. Larson said the contracts Puryear talks about were made with the American Federation of Teacher which is part of the AFL-CIO, a group distinctly different from AAUP or NEA.

Puryear does say later on that "since department chairmen are included in the bargaining unit, it is very likely that many of their former duties will now be assumed by a new and expensive layer of associate deans who, among other things, will exercise the fiscal authority once held by the chairmen.

"Because of their status as union members, chairmen obviously cannot act on behalf of the University in matters of contract administration nor can they be held accountable for the exercise of management function. Whereas chairmen, prior to collective bargaining, were accountable to both the departmental faculty and the University administration, their prerogatives in the future are likely to be so limited that their usefulness in facilitating the mission of the faculty will be sharply circumscribed," said Puryear.

Larson said that according to Trustee Document, the role of department chairmen cannot be changed. Larson said also that the state Labor Relations Commission considered the role of chairmen when determining whether or not they should be included in the collective bargaining unit. Larson said this is merely a threat and that the administration is doing faculty an injustice by misrepresenting state law.

Puryear also said that "exclusive representation might mean that personal grievances cannot be settled without giving a union representative the right to be present whether the grievant wants the representation or not and that individuals may not negotiate their own salaries."

Larson said that according to Massachusetts law, the faculty member may have union representation, however, for Puryear to say that this is necessary is misleading.

"In presenting a grievance, the faculty member may select any person for representation such as independent counsel, chairmen, another faculty member, etc." Larson said.

Steamer had said in a letter to Boston faculty that membership in the union was compulsory.

"That's an issue we've dealt with before and thought we had finally made clear. No, membership in the union is not compulsory," Larson said.

The unfair labor practice charge, the third filed by AAUP against the University in the past year, will not delay the election of a bargaining agent on December 1 and 2, when 2000 faculty and staff on the Amherst an- Boston campuses will cast their ballots among AAUP, the Massachusetts Teachers Association and "no representative."

Student helps 'get point across'

This week, Nikki spent some time with Lindsey Fletcher, an Interpersonal Communications major.)

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

By late afternoon, the campus is deserted. Few lights shine from building windows, on the Wednesday before Thanksgiving.

At quarter to three, Lindsey Fletcher has been asked to leave the Hatch, as the coffee shop personnel wish to close early and hurry home to prepare for the holidays. But Fletcher, a junior at UMass, doesn't leave the Student Union for a car or a homeward bound bus; instead she walks toward Machmer Hall for a 3:35 class.

Two students wander into the classroom with Fletcher. A few minutes go by and another arrives with verbal doubts as to the appearance of an instructor for Interpersonal Communications.

One male student reclines full length on a large table top "We should adjourn to the Blue Wall," he says. Prof. Peloska enters with a frown at the overheard suggestion. There are only six students present from a roster of over twenty. "Maybe we should just hold class at the TOC," she offers laughingly.

Interpersonal Communication helps people to "successfully speak to others," said Fletcher "By 'successfully,' I mean being able to get your point across in the way you mean it, to a listener."

In this class different roles are sometimes played out, but today there is discussion of the way personalities are projected. "Historical" selves and "present" selves are the two terms discussed relating to how others see you. "Historical self is a past image people have had of you," said Fletcher, "maybe a childhood image, while a present self is how you are right now, or how the role you are playing is projected."

As it grows darker outside, conversation entwines with thoughts of Thanksgiving holidays. "It's difficult to go home when you are treated like a child," muses Fletcher. "Everyone remembers you as a child so you act as your historical self, when you were younger, when they were younger too.

"Depending on how long you've been away from home, it's hard to break those roles," said Polaska, "Brothers and sisters have drifted apart over the years. Family get-togethers are times to get reacquainted, but you may find yourselves acting historical roles because as children you were all closer and related better."

Laughter and personal anecdotes followed. "I feel schizophrenic when I go home. I get treated like a child because you are treated in your historical role of the child, but then you want to prove you are an adult," comments one student.

Discussion carries on until after 4 p.m. when Polaska bids everyone a Happy Thanksgiving. Someone yells from the hall, "We should get brownie points for this, showing up before Thanksgiving!" The comment is answered by Polaska, still inside the classroom. "You'll get your points, no test on Monday," she says. "That should help for a calmer Thanksgiving as your present self argues as an adult against a curfew, while your historical self drops off her laundry for Mom to do." Finally Lindsey Fletcher turns to go back to her off-campus apartment and prepare to go home.

Home for Lindsey Fletcher is Newton, though her family has most recently moved to Acton. Fletcher was a Newton High graduate of 1970 and went on to Newton Junior College for two years from 1973-1975.

President of her class, she majored in psychology. During the three year interim, Fletcher worked as an assistant to an oral surgeon, who admired Fletcher's quick mind and steady nerves and rewarded her intelligence with on the job training as his assistant. Fletcher admits, "During one operation on a woman's wisdom teeth, I fainted." Fletcher returned to school as a Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration (BDIC) major at UMass.

To be admitted in a BDIC program a student must declare his or her academic intentions in the second semester of her sophomore year. "A proposal must be offered to a faculty board," said Fletcher, "mine was about ten pages." An approved BDIC major must draw from the interrelating departments.

For her concentration in mental health, Fletcher draws upon psychology, sociology, communications and education. "It's harder at registration time for BDIC because you have to be aware of so many course offerings from more than one department." she said.

BDIC majors are eligible to participate in the Five College Exchange Program. "I have a practical major so I am able to find the courses I want here at UMass." said Fletcher. Nine credits of each semester must relate to the BDIC major.

Thieves heist butts in Munchies robbery

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Hampden Munchies in Southwest was broken into yesterday and an undetermined amount of goods were stolen, according to an employe at the store. The theft was discovered at noon as the store opened for regular business hours after being closed since last Wednesday for the Thanksgiving holiday.

"All that seems to have been taken is a large amount of cigarette cartons," said an employe. "The cigarettes are stored in cases here in the storeroom. There are thirty cartons to a case and at $5.00 a carton it comes to $150 right there." He estimated that at least a hundred cartons of cigarettes had been removed from the store.

Entrance to the storeroom at the back of the store was gained by knocking out several wooden slates which separate the store from the remaining portion of the main floor of the building. The function of the slats of wood is to allow the free circulation of air and heat through the grocery store.

Cigarettes seem to have been the only things taken in the break. "I don't think they were in here after food. The food out front looks to me to be pretty much the same as it was last week," said one employe.

Police from the department of Public Safety were unavailable for comment on the break yesterday.

Econ. journal now available; produced entirely by students

By RICHARD BARRELL
Collegian Staff

Copies of Eclipse, an economics journal writeen and produced by students for student use, is available now, according to Patricia Baker, spokesperson for the journal.

Baker, an economics major (UMass '78), said she helped organize the group of students who put out the new journal during the summer and fall of 1976.

Baker said she and other economic students wanted direct experience in their major. "Eclipse represents the efforts of students from the five colleges to gain that experience," she said.

Commenting on the purposes of the journal, Baker said, "Students get a chance to write for other students and thereby share knowledge. Also we are learning a lot about what putting out a journal entails," she added.

Students are concerned about such topics as the UMass budget, political and economic affairs in the state, third world economics, consumer problems and also theoretical issues, said Baker.

Students who put out Eclipse are from the five colleges, said Baker. A group of 17 students are now working on it, said Baker. "The group is unstructured and informal, and we would welcome new members of any major," she said.

The December issue is now being compiled. Plans for a strong February issue for the start of the new semester are underway, reports Baker.

Copies of the journal are available free at the people's news stand in the Student Union, said Baker. "We hope students will read it and let us know how they feel about it, both the good and the bad," said Baker.

"We want to add to the dimensions of student learning", she said. "We can teach each other and learn to share our experience."

State freeze halts Ed School unification plans

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

The hope of uniting the Department of Education under one roof will not be realized in the near future, due to a state freeze in the University's building funds.

Department of Education offices are located both in Hills House and in the School of Education building. The faculty feels that the physical separation contributes to a lack of unity among the department, and has requested that a wing be added to the education building.

The building addition was requested after consideration of moving some offices to Hills House. A move to that location would mean transplanting the department of Mental Health and also result in general overcrowding of education personnel.

The move to Hills House was made anyway, with the approval of the Physical Administration Offices and Dean of the School of Education, according to Tim Masloski, an undergraduate representative of the Dean's Cabinet.

The Hills House location will serve as temporary quarters for education and continuing education until building funds can be obtained to expand the School of Education building into headquarters for the education department.

In-coming School of Education Dean Mario Fantini met with Paul L. Puryear, University Provost, before the move. The provost had originally been against the move on the basis that no University expansion should take place until state financial matters were settled.

Fantini will be instated as dean on Wednesday.

According to Masloski, the placement of the Department of Education in two separate locations makes the students feel out of touch with the department. They are in the process of setting up programs to remedy the problem. Student Councils are in operation and council representatives hope that they will have a voice in the choosing of three new faculty members which will be added in the upcoming fall. The representatives also hope that all education students can make recommendations through them.

FAC fire estimates expected this week

Damage estimates of fire which swept through a small area of the Rand Theatre in the UMass Fine Arts Center are expected to be released early this week.

The fire, which broke out at 10:12 a.m. Wednesday, was ignited by a hot piece of welder's slag, according to a Fine Arts Center spokesperson.

The slag, which is strips of metal heated and used by welders as a sealing device, ignited polyurethane foam fiber in the theatre.

Two Amherst fire trucks and a hook and ladder responded to the alarm, but the sprinkler system had extinguished the blaze while the apparatus was en route.

"The fire was put out by the sprinkler system in nine and a half minutes. It put out 65 gallons of water, an average of seven per minute," said the spokesperson.

Theatres are traditionally fire hazards, but the fire prevention apparatus in the Fine Arts Center had been approved by state and Amherst fire officials, said the spokesperson.

The welders were constructing a set for an upcoming production, according to the spokesperson.

Officials in the Fine Arts Center, while stressing that the estimate was incomplete, said that damage was slight and probably restricted to only water and smoke damage.

Clean up operations began immediately and new sprinkler heads were installed within two hours, said the spokesperson.

The Fine Arts Center, which, according to the spokesperson, is the best fireproofed building on campus, was opened in 1974.

'Men's Lives' shown here 60 times

By RICHARD BARRELL
Collegian Staff

"Men's Lives", a film about the limitations of the stereotypical male sex role has been shown some 60 times to over 1200 people, said Frank Dorman, a staffer at the Southwest Men's Center. Dorman, who's remarks were made during the Men's Center's regular staff meeting said the film has been shown to both campus and community groups.

Staff member Richard Bingham emphasized that the film has been receiving enthusiastic praise from viewers. "Many hours of wide-ranging discussion have followed the showings," said Bingham. Bingham and other men's center staffers usually accompany the film when it is shown, to facilitate discussion of the many social, economic, and personal issues it raises, according to members.

Other center business included a proposal by staffer Ronald Wright for the center to look into offering colloquium courses. Staffers also decided to continue their effort to reach out to other alternative centers to share information and experiences.

Staffers reported efforts are underway to distribute brochures about the center around the campus. Brochures have been placed at the campus assistance table and at several alternative centers around campus, it was reported.

People interested in the Men's Center are urged to call 545-0263 or drop by the center at Kennedy tower No. 3, said Wright.

People who wish to see or book a showing of the film "Men's Lives" are also urged to call the Center, according to staffers.

In addition to Interpersonal Communications, Fletcher also takes Abnormal Psychology and The Sociology of Family. "Both of those classes are large lectures," says Fletcher, "too large. I'm sure that's a common complaint but half of the semester seems to go through one ear and out the other."

For her semester elective, Lindsey Fletcher takes Paranoia and Literature on Thursday nights where she and other students are working on a revolutionary psychological concept with Prof. Edward Jayne of the English department.

"We're working on formulating a psychological test that will determine whether there is any relation between literature and paranoia," she said.

Fletcher has no morning classes because from nine to 12 every day she works at off-campus housing. "We're called counselors, but I work as an informational resource. We try to warn against places that have had a history of problems or help the student look for a room in a house in the next town. People should understand the laws and realize what kind of living situation they are getting into," she added.

Fletcher is a friendly person. People are usually struck by her smile and her sharp wit. Over a drink at the TOC conversation is interrupted as someone drops by for a few words. "I met him at off-campus housing," she said. "People keep coming in to look for a place and soon you get to know them."

Fletcher laughs. "This wasn't my first job at UMass. One summer I worked at the Office of Residental Life." Fletcher laughs at an inquiry at her counselling capacity over that summer, "Counselling? There was no counselling job for that summer. I did manual labor all summer, painting, moving things around. It was good to just get out and work." But Lindsey Fletcher does not just work without deriving some pleasure. "The exercise felt great, and we all had some good times."

As Fletcher works her way through school she has come to realize all the opportunities available to students at the University. "There is so much here; concerts, programs I don't have time for much. This semester I've only managed to take a swimming course to keep in shape."

Recreational time is more likely spent for some local cause. Two weeks ago you may have noticed a petite woman in front of the Hatch circulating a petition for signatures. It was Lindsey Fletcher who obtained enough signatures to put a rent control referendum on the ballot for November 16th.

"The referendum failed," Fletcher said, "because hardly anyone bothered to vote. Most people are not from the area or they said, "What voting, I voted last week." The referendum failed due to apathy."

Fletcher is a motivated, intelligent woman. At 24 she has come back to school, found a job, and is politically active. But says the modest Fletcher, "I'm a hopeless romantic. I'm either involved with too many people or causes."

Fletcher's soft spot is people. She hopes to work at a clinic after graduation. She said, "It is in the cities that most people need help, and I want to be there doing something." Mental health is one of the most neglected sources of problems in the country as people shy away from the stigma of psychological attention.

"If you can get to a problem when it's small," said Fletcher, "It's much easier to help than when an individual lets the crisis grow into big complex problems."

Whatever specialized area of mental health she enters, Lindsey Fletcher is one of those people who inspires ones confidence that she will do well. Dedicated to helping people, Fletcher works towards her goal of an early graduation.

In times of needed relaxation, Fletcher can be found camping out on any given mountain top because that's one of the activities she likes best. "It lets me get away from everything," she said.

"Everyone needs that sometimes."

$55,000 disappears from sack

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Thanksgiving holiday delayed an investigation into the disappearance of some $55,000 in cash from a sealed canvas sack delivered Saturday to a South Side bank, an FBI spokesman said yesterday.

The money was ordered from the LaSalle National Bank by the Beverly Bank Friday.

The sack containing the bills was picked up and stored overnight by Purolator Inc., a bonded delivery and security company, authorities said.

When some Purolator employes return from the holdiay, a company official said, they will face lie detector tests.

It was the third major theft involving Purolator in slighting more than two years.

The latest theft was discovered Saturday morning when employes of the Beverly Bank broke the seal on the sack and, instead of the money, found newspapers cut to the size of dollar bills and tied in six bundles.

FBI Special Agent Lamont Pugh said many persons the FBI wanted to question had gone away for the holiday and would not be back until today.

"There's no reason to try to track them down in Southern Illinois or anything like that — they'll be back at work Monday," said Pugh. "It's just an inconvenience."

Pugh said the bundled newspaper will be sent to the FBI's laboratory in Washington to check for fingerprints or other identifying marks.

George Childs, Purolator regional vice president, said all employes who came in contact with the money pouch will be given lie detector tests.

"I'm not sure where it happened," said Childs. He said the switch could have occurred in either of the two banks, in the Purolator vault or in the armored truck.

Report confirms gap between men and women wage earners

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The gap between wages earned by men and women has nearly doubled in the past 20 years, partly because so many females have gone to work for the first time, a government report said yesterday.

Women who held fulltime jobs in 1974 earned only 57 cents for every dollar earned by men, according to the report issued by the Women's Bureau of the Labor Department Employment Standards Administration.

Much of the earning gap can be explained only by "a maximum measure of discrimination," even after such factors such as women having less job experience, working less overtime or having different educational backgrounds have been considered, the report said.

It took those women nearly nine days of work to gross the same income earned by men in five days, the bureau said.

While women have made employment gains in recent years, the report said, men nearly doubled the gap between their salaries and those earned by females between 1955 and 1974.

The bureau said that in "constant dollars," which take inflation into account, working men averaged earning $1,911 more than working women in 1955. It said men stretched that advantage to $3,433 in 1974 — a 79 per cent difference.

Two major factors have contributed to the widening gap, the report said.

First, it said, although "increasing numbers of women are securing higher level and better paying positions, there is still a predominance of women in lower status occupations of a traditional nature which provide limited opportunity for advancement."

And second, "the dynamic rise in women labor force participation has resulted in a larger proportion of women who are in or near the entry level."

Many women who started work were forced to take low-paying beginner jobs, it said, while most men had more years of employment experience.

The report said women are nearly four times as likely as men to earn between $3,000 and $4,999 a year, and three times as likely to be in the $5,000 to $6,999 pay bracket.

"Despite the fact that women were 32 per cent of all year-found fulltime earners in 1974, they accounted for 63 per cent of workers earning between $3,000 and $4,999," it said.

"They made up 58 per cent of those earning $5,000 to $6,999 ... but accounted for only 5 per cent of all year-round, fulltime workers earning $15,000 and over."

'It stinks'

WETHERSFIELD, Conn. (AP) — I don't mind women getting jobs and equal rights but they're going too far when they try to cut out boys' activities," says Emerson Kellogg 3rd.

Emerson is a 12-year-old former member of the all-boys choir of the Wethersfield elementary schools, an organization that fell victim this year to the women's movement and federal sex discrimination guidelines.

"Women's liberation? I think it stinks," said Emerson, who also acknowledged that he didn't like girls but got along "pretty good" with his 15-year-old sister. "If they want to be equal let the girls have their own choir and the boys their own choir."

"I'm in agreement," chimed in the boy's father, Emerson Kellogg Jr., a telephone repairman. "Women can do some things but they can't do everything."

The all-boys choir was disbanded earlier this year to comply with a Department of Health, Education and Welfare regulation implementing Title IX of the Higher Education Act.

Company was cover for CIA spying

ARLINGTON, TEX. (UPI) — CIA agents illegally used an aircraft company as a cover for spying and drove the firm to the brink of bankruptcy when the cover was blown, according to the former head of the company.

Dr. Lynn Bollinger, chairman of General Aircraft Corp. of Massachusetts from 1954-71 and now a professor at the University of Texas at Arlington, told the Dallas Times-Herald the company has filed a $25 million damage claim with the CIA to recoup losses attributed to the spy agency's unauthorized use of the company name.

The complaint — which has no legal status — charges the CIA, without the firm's permission, used the name of Helio Aircraft, a General Aircraft Corp. subsidiary, as a cover for its operations in the Congo, Thailand, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

The claim, filed in October, says negotiations several years ago with Congo Premier Moise Tshombe for the sale of planes fell though when the country's leaders discovered CIA operatives posing as company officials.

"Such cover was used by these agents to carry on illegal and immoral activities which resulted in the deaths of government officials and the fall of the existing government," the claim said.

"These activities came to the attention of the Congo government and immediately resulted in the expulsion of Helio and its legitimate employes from any further operations."

The CIA declined to comment on the charges.

Bollinger, who helped develop a short takeoff and landing STOL aircraft for the firm, resigned in 1971.

"There are still some Third World countries that beliive we are part of the U.S. government," he said. "Hopefully this claim will stop some of that."

Bollinger said in 1961 the firm was approached by CIA agents and asked to turn over all of its operations to the CIA. The company refused, he said.

A special report to the General Aircraft stockholders in September said recent disclosures before Congress about CIA involvement in other countries made apparent the reason for years of "extraordinary and unexplainable difficulties" in selling the aircraft.

Bollinger said the company last month sold its Pittsburgh, Kan., manufacturing plant because "until it recovers its losses and gets its slate wiped clean in other countries, the company should not be in the plane manufacturing business."

Amy will attend public school

PLAINS, Ga. (UPI) — President-elect Jimmy Carter and his wife announced yesterday that their 9-year-old daughter Amy will attend an integrated public school about six blocks from the White House, the first child of a president ever to do so.

In a statement read by Press Secretary Jody Powell, the Carters said Amy will enroll in January at the Thaddeus Stevens School. The school, opened in 1868, was built for the children of freed slaves and is the oldest in the city.

The last White House child who attended a Washington public school was President Theodore Roosevelt's son, Quentin.

In those days, schools in the District of Columbia were legally segregated.

Amy will be in the only fourth grade class at Thaddeus Stevens. Her future teacher, Mrs. Verona Meeder, said she expects the president's daughter to fit in easily and "be just like the other 20 girls in the class" within a few days.

Harrington says Boston must tighten

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts Senate President Kevin Harrington said yesterday Boston can avoid bankruptcy by tightening its belt and shouldn't look to Beacon Hill for direct financial help.

"We are tapped dry. We have gone to the well as often as we can," Harrington said. "There are a lot of things that could be done, but it doesn't necessarily involve the Massachusetts legislature."

The Salem Democrat urged Mayor Kevin H. White and the Boston City Council to slash the municipal budget by 30 or 35 per cent and avoid default, bankruptcy or receivership.

Harrington made his remarks while appearing on Boston radio station WEEI's Bay State Forum.

On another subject, Harrington said he never declared open economic war against New Hampshire and its governor, Meldrim Thompson.

Harrington was vacationing in Germany when the public furor erupted over his supposed "declaration of war" against the Granite State. The Democrat said he had no idea that his words were being misconstrued.

"I was not declaring war, but only trying to articulate what I thought was a reasoned point of view," Harrington said.

'Biggest' fire guts Providence building

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A four-alarm fire, destroyed an unoccupied building Saturday night and temporarily put part of the downtown business district in peril.

One minor injury was reported. The fire was still under investigation by Providence fire fighters yesterday morning.

According to officials, the fire erupted about 7 p.m. in the five-story Swarts Building in the downtown commercial district and later spread up the street to the Wilcox building, which had been heavily damaged by fire two years ago.

Providence Fire Chief Michael F. Moise said the blaze was finally brought under control at 10:29 p.m.

All available Providence fire fighters and equipment were summoned to the scene. They were augmented by fire departments from 10 surrounding communities. At one point there were 20 fire companies and 88 firemen involved in fighting the blaze.

The Swarts Building, which had been marked for demolition anyway, was burning out of control by the time fire fighters arrived on the scene, officials said. Firemen concentrated on evacuating every store, restaurant and bar within two blocks.

Fire fighters and police officers also had to contend with keeping a crowd of spectators, numbering between 3,000 and 5,000, away from the immediate vicinity of the blaze.

Shortly after firemen arrived, the fire started to spread to the adjoining Lauderdale Building which, like the Swarts Building, was built in the 1890s. Fire fighters sent up a wall of water between the two buildings.

Second Indian suit?

AUGUSTA, Maine (UPI) — Maine officials, who appear to have resolved most of the financial problems stemming from a land claim by two Maine Indian tribes, may soon find themselves faced with a second Indian lawsuit.

Loomis Sappier, 47, a student at St. Thomas University in Fredericton and a member of the Maliseet Indian tribe, says he is preparing a lawsuit in U.S. District Court in Portland, claiming the state illegally took between 100,000 and 1 million acres of Maliseet tribal land.

The Indians' claim involves most of northeastern Maine, though it was not clear whether the two suits might overlap.

Sappier said his research is not complete, but indicates most of the contested land is in northern Aroostook County.

The land claim might also extend to the Maliseet Reservation near Perth, New Brunswick, he said.

The law suit will be based on the same principle as the pending suit by Maine's Passamaquoddy and Penobscot Tribes, who say the state violated a federal law forbidding land transactions involving Indian tribes without congressional approval.

Sappier said his attorney, Mark Johnson of Perth, has written to U.S. District Court Judge Edward T. Gignoux asking for a timetable for the Passamaquoddy and Penobscot claim and indicating the Maliseets may have a separate claim.

And three years later..

GROTON, Conn. (UPI) — Three years and a handful of failures later, the Coast Guard Research and Development Center said yesterday it is finally ready to put into use 50 solar-based navigational buoys to help ships at sea.

Despite four mistakes in eight tries, the Coast Guard says the buoys it tested in the Long Island Sound for the past three years are ready for use by mariners.

The failures, the center said, were the result of human error.

The Coast Guard has also decided to put the 50 buoys in Florida waterways for further tests.

Australia devalues currency—new value

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Australia devalued its currency yesterday in a move aimed at making its wool, meat and other exports more competitive on the world market, stimulating foreign investment and bolstering sagging foreign reserves.

The Australian dollar was devalued by a peacetime record 17½ per cent, giving it a new value of $1.0174 in American money. This was a sharp cut from its official value of $1.2354 at the end of trading Friday.

The devaluation should make such prime Australian products as wool, beef, lamb and wheat cheaper abroad in the immediate future. It may also make it cheaper for tourists to visit what is considered one of the most expensive destinations in the world.

Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser's Conservative government ordered the devaluation after resisting it for months as unnecessary. The decision was welcomed by Australia's powerful mining and agricultural interests whose export earnings have been hit by inflation, wage costs and strikes. It was condemned as inflationary by trade union spokesmen and by the opposition Labor party.

Australia's devaluation prompted suspension of foreign exchange trading in New Zealand, which counts Australia as its biggest export market. New Zealand devalued its currency 15 per cent on Aug. 10, 1975, and there were predictions the New Zealand dollar now might be devalued another 8 to 10 per cent.

The Australian devaluation was announced by the Treasury in a statement saying it was forced to do so by rising costs and wages and the loss of one third of Australia's foreign reserves in one year.

The remaining reserves of about $2 billion would pay for less than three month's imports, said Treasurer Phillip Lynch.

Lynch acknowledged that devaluation would mean increases in domestic prices. He indicated credit would be tightened and government spending further cut in the continuing fight against inflation. Prices currently are rising at a rate of 13.9 per cent a year, compared to 12.1 per cent a year ago.

Devaluation came 11 months after the election of the ultra-conservative Fraser, a wealthy sheep farmer whose maxim is that work, not welfare, is the path to Australia's economic success.

Fraser has made drastic cuts in government spending and challenged a strike-prone Australian unions, but failed to curb inflation, unemployment or the depletion of foreign reserves.

Blizzard threatens efforts in shattered eastern Turkey

MURADIYE, Turkey (AP) — A blizzard threatened rescue efforts in earthquake-shattered eastern Turkey yesterday, and the provincial governor ordered all residents of the capital between 18 and 65 drafted to help the thousands of quake victims.

"We are afraid that some mountain villagers who survived the quake may now freeze to death," said Muzaffer Yuce, deputy governor of Van province, after the heavy snow began yesterday morning. The temperature was 10 degrees Fahrenheit and falling.

"We consider this snowstorm, under the circumstances, as great a calamity as the quake itself," Gov. Ahmet Tosun said.

At least six villages in this mountainous area hit by Wednesday's quake were reportedly still cut off, with not even helicopters able to get in to bring help.

Officials called for all available snow-moving equipment to be rushed into the area.

Tosun announced that he was putting emergency measures into force to speed up the task of bringing survivors in from still-isolated and flattened mountain settlements. All adults in Van were ordered drafted, and all private vehicles were confiscated. Government offices and bakery shops were ordered to remain in operation 24 hours a day.

School teachers were told to report to work immediately to help settle survivors in official buildings and schoolhouses.

Officials declined to release any new figures on the death toll from the quake. Some 3,626 bodies had been recovered from the ruins of Muradiye, nearby Caldiran and area villages by Saturday, and officials said then the final toll could be above 5,000.

The airport at Van, 50 miles south of here, was closed for several hours by the snow, halting the massive flow of relief supplies. But it was reopened later and two American, one Pakistani and one West German plane landed, officials said.

U.S. Secretary of Commerce Elliot Richardson arrived yesterday in Ankara to discuss the need for further U.S. assistance.

Badran resigns

AMMAN, Jordan (UPI) — Premier Mudar Badran has submitted the resignation of his four-month-old government to King Hussein and then immediately formed a new 19-man cabinet, Amman radio said yesterday.

The radio gave no official reason for the cabinet shuffle Saturday night, in which five government members were dismissed and seven new members appointed.

The key portfolios of defense, foreign affairs — both posts are held by the premier — and interior did not change.

But in a move that reflected a drive to revive Jordan's flagging economy, new ministers of finance and industry and trade were named.

New ministers also were named to head the departments of education, public works, transport, youth and culture and municipal and rural affairs.

Highway system may save rare southern woodpecker

ATLANTA [AP] — The interstate highway system, much maligned by environmentalists, actually may save a rare southern woodpecker from extinction, says a Mississippi State University zoologist.

The red-cockaded woodpecker once was common in the South, but today it is on the endangered species list. Most recent sightings of the bird have been along roadsides, said Dr. Jerome A. Jackson of Mississippi State.

Whole colonies of red-cockaded woodpeckers have been seen along interstate highways in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama, said Jackson.

A similar situation has been reported in the concrete maze of southern California. The comeback of a bird known as the white-tailed kite is related to its feeding along freeways, said Dr. Ralph W. Schreiber, curator of ornithology at the Los Angeles Museum of Natural History.

Experts believe the red-cockaded woodpecker is attracted to the roadsides because pines there have been allowed to grow naturally. The bird commonly pecks out its nest in the soft wood of 70-year-old pine trees infected iwth a heart rot fungus.

But today most pines are harvested well before they reach 70, and the woodpecker's natural nesting grounds are fast disappearing.

Buck fever comes to end

HARDWICK, Vt. [AP] — It is called deer hunting season, but in reality it is more like an annual two-week Vermont holiday.

Workers leave their jobs, small companies close and students skip school to grab their rifles and head for the woods in search of Vermont's elusive white-tail deer.

It is over now. About 10,000 bucks were killed by the time the season ended yesterday, said Vermont fish and game officials. That meant about one in every 14 hunters shot a deer, they said.

The conclusion of the annual hunt signals a return to business as usual.

The supply store resumes its regular hours, utilities can be connected and car dealers are open six days a week again.

"Closed all day — both sales and service — so that we and our employes can all go deer hunting", read the headline in a newspaper advertisement a car dealer had printed on the season's opening day.

Bernard Jerome and his son Kelly closed shop at their building supply store during most of deer season.

"I don't care if I bag a buck, so long as I have a good time," explained the elder Jerome, as he locked the door. "It's the only vacation we get each year."

A Lyndonville machine manufacturing company that employs 400 workers cut out is lunch hour during deer season.

"That way the boys could leave work at three in the afternoon and had enough time to hunt for an hour or so before dark," said shop superintendent Duane Smith.

He said the plant would schedule overtime hours in some departments during the next few days to catch up on orders that were delayed when many plant workers took their annual vacations these past two weeks to go hunting.

Rosalind Russell dead at 65

LOS ANGELES [AP] — Rosalind Russell, whose witty elegance and beauty provided a series of enduring film performances, died yesterday after a lengthy battle with cancer and arthritis. She was 65.

From "Craig's Wife" and "His Girl Friday" to "Auntie Mame" and "Mourning Becomes Electra", Miss Russell won four Oscar nominations for best actress and seemed able to play anything with skill and intelligence.

Her death from cancer and arthritis was confirmed by a family spokesman.

As an ingenue at MGM in the mid-1930's, Miss Russell seemed typed as a society girl. But she demonstrated her range by playing the cold-hearted woman in "Craig's Wife" 1937 and the catty socialite in "The Women."

She specialized in portraying career women in the period before women's liberation. She was cast as a reporter in "His Girl Friday", a college dean in "Women of Distinction", and advertising executive in "Take a Letter, Darling," and a judge in "Tell it to the Judge."

'Gliding makes a good pilot out of you'

FREMONT, Calif. (UPI) — Cattle grazed on the brown hillsides, unaware of the silent object whishing above them.

A ridge loomed directly ahead. The sailplane turned sharply, catching a wind lift that eased it up and over the rocky outcropping.

"We'll swing around and make another pass over the ridge," said Blaine Banks, a pilot-instructor at Sky Sailing, home of the nation's busiest gliderport.

Banks performed two half rolls and then nosed downward to pick up speed, pulled up and straightened out, causing a brief moment of exhilarating weightlessness.

"Now you know how astronauts feel in space," he said.

About 20 minutes from when the glider was towed into the air by a light plane and with a clink, the sound of the rope release, was left alone in the sky, it circled over a row of power lines and approached the airport runway.

The engineless bird touched down at 70 miles per hour, bumping to a halt within a few inches of its assigned parking space.

"I enjoy gliding as a recreational type thing. It's a lot of fun," said Banks, who has been flying single-engine planes for nine years.

Barbara Otto, a member of Soaring Experience, America's first all-woman gliding club, said the field's air ships get taken up between 10 and 100 times a day, depending on weather conditions, particularly wind currents.

"Gliding makes a good pilot out of you," said Ms. Otto. "It trains you in safety and precision with the controls."

Taking away the noisy engine, she said, makes a pilot become almost one with the craft, guiding it easily without conscious effort.

"With an engine things are predictable — soaring's never predictable," said Ms. Otto, an Allentown, Pa., native who now lives in San Francisco.

"The emphasis is on learning the pure art of flying itself and the medium that you're moving in — the air.

"One of the pleasures of gliding is you feel very much attuned to the new medium. There's the thrill of discovering another dimension."

Soaring Experience is one of 197 glider clubs in the United States, four of which are located at Sky Sailing Airport.

Ms. Otto said there was a "sense of comradeship" among the women, who supported each other en route to achieving their gliding credentials.

"I enjoyed the challenge — watching 16 women learn to fly," said Ms. Otto, who has registered 155 hours of flight time and who had a power rating before she tried soaring.

"It gave me a way to express myself, show my talent."

Pendleton investigates assaults

CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. (UPI) — The leader of a civil rights group says 13 black Marines, arrested for attacking seven white Marines with screw drivers, were breaking up a Ku Klux Klan meeting on the base.

Lt. Col. Dan Brown, director of the Joint Public Affairs Office at Camp Pendleton, confirmed Saturday that authorities are investigating the charges made by the San Diego Urban League's executive director, Clarence Pendleton Jr.

"We have heard of the existence of such a group," Brown said of the KKK charges. "However, we've got an assault case on our hands which is our primary problem at this moment."

Pendleton said notices of a Nov. 13 KKK meeting were posted on the base.

The 13 black Marines, reportedly armed with screwdrivers and clubs, allegedly burst into a barrack where a beer party was going on. Six of the white marines were beaten and stabbed and two remained hospitalized.

The blacks are in custody with eight of them charged with assault and conspiracy to commit assault.

Although beer drinking in the barracks is against regulations, none of the whites have been charged yet.

"It was attack to break up a meeting of the KKK," Pendleton said, adding that officers confiscated a pistol and a roster listing Marine KKK members.

However, Maj. Sally Pritchett, base deputy public affairs officer, said no Klan material was found.

Both Brown and Maj. Pritchett noted that Marine personnel were not prohibited from joining the KKK or any other organization.

"If there is such a group, current federal laws and regulations do not make it an offense to be a member of the KKK," Brown added. "What is an offense is the commission of a crime.

WASHINGTON: Sen. Robert Dole

Germany loss is Alpine gain

SURCUOLM, Switzerland [AP] — West Germany's loss is the gain of this tiny Alpine village, and the local citizenry couldn't be happier.

Gunter and Ernst Wilhelm Sachs, West German multimillionaire brothers who were granted Swiss citizenship Saturday, are expected to unload a tax bonanza on their new town and its 88 other residents.

It will be a bargain for the Sachses, who are trying to avoid paying $60 million in taxes to the West German government.

Village President Alois Cavegn has already announced that local taxes will be cut by 20 per cent beginning Jan. 1. He is also weighing plans to build a water purification plant and to modernize the village water supply system.

Maybe even an indoor swimming pool for this spot 4,000 feet high in the Grisons Alps.

Even before the unanimous citizenship vote Saturday in the cantonal state parliament, the Sachses had donated $40,000 to renovate the village church, paid $2,400 in fees for citizenship papers and promised to provide forestry equipment for the area.

Surcuolm income tax revenue is expected to soar from the present $11,200 a year to more than $120,000 next year, with the tax on the Sachses' industrial fortune.

"The public knows what dynamic, efficient, social-minded, art-admiring industrialists these gentlemen are," gushed a district official in a local newspaper.

"It's like winning at the sweepstakes every year," commented one resident.

UMies in pro hockey

No luck for skaters in NHL

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the final of a four-part series on former UMass athletes now active in professional sports.

Trying to track down ex-UMass hockey players is a little like trying to find the proverbial needle in the haystack.

Since so many professional leagues have come into existence in the past few years, it's a bit difficult to find the whereabouts of the former Redmen-Minutemen. However, at least four UMass skaters have plied their wares in the pros, so here comes the lowdown:

Nearly every UMass offensive hockey record is held by former center Pat Keenan. The 1973 graduate holds the mark for most points in a season (65), in a career (180), and in a single game (nine) against Holy Cross in 1970).

A Division II All-American, Keenan had point totals of 56, 59, and 65 in his three-year Minutemen-Redmen career. He helped lead the teams to the Division II playoffs in each of his seasons, and was also instrumental in the 1971-72 championship year. Keenan also made Division II All-American that season.

Upon leaving UMass, Keenan tried out with the Boston Bruins. He was the leading scorer of the NHL team's rookie camp, but was cut from the B's roster prior to the regular season. According to UMass coach Jack Canniff, Boston then sent him to one of its lower minor league teams, the Cape Cod Cubs of the North American Hockey League. However, Cape Cod soon folded and Keenan is now out of pro hockey.

Another member of that championship team who pursued a professional hockey career was goalie P.J. Flaherty. A 1972 UMass graduate, Flaherty holds three team netminder records. He set the mark for most saves in a career (1306), lowest goals against average in a season (2.80) and also in a career (3.05). Flaherty also made Division II All-America in 1972.

Flaherty hooked up with Dayton and Fort Wayne, two minor leagues teams in the midewestern International Hockey League. He later made his way back to Massachusetts, where he was reunited with former teammate Keenan on the Cubs. However, Flaherty was also left stranded when Cape Cod went out of business. Canniff said that his former goalie is now going to either Holland or Italy to play the ice sport.

Defenseman Brian Sullivan, the third player from the '72 Redmen champs to make the pros, was graduated in 1972 from UMass. The captain of the first-place squad, he was named to the ECAC Division II All-Star team following his senior season.

Sullivan joined the Eastern League's Springfield Blades after his collegiate career. The Western Mass. team played in the Eastern States Colliseum after the then-Springfield Kings vacated the building to perform in the Civic Center. The Springfield experiment with two-team hockey didn't last long, however, as the Blades also packed up their franchise a few months into the season.

The last Redman-Minutemen to play professional hockey was Don Riley. A 1973 graduate, the center had point totals of 28, 29, and 34 in his three varsity seasons. Although Riley holds no UMass hockey records, Canniff said that he had lots of talent.

Riley was drafted by the then-California Golden Seals and went to their training camp. The Seals planned on keeping him in their organization after cutting him from the major league squad. He was assigned to Charlotte of the Southern League. However, Riley apparently had a change of heart about pro hockey and never reported to the team. He is now coaching hgh school hockey in Gloucester at Canniff's old school.

Capriola finishes big

BOSTON (UPI) — Glen Capriola turned in the best game of his career Saturday with a 179-yard performance in Boston College's 59-6 win over Holy Cross.

The senior from Berwyn, Pa., needed 176 yards to become the fifth Boston College player to gain 1,000 yards in a season. Playing just over a half, the 6-foot-0, 220-pound tailback gained 179 yards in 23 carries to finish with 1,003 yards. The performance gave Capriola a career mark 2,049, fifth highest in Boston College history and he received the Edward J. O'Melia Award as the game's outstanding performer.

The Eagles' trouncing of the Crusaders brought its season's final record to 8-3. Even though BC did finish with a respectable record under coach Joe Yukica, the Eagles will not see any further action in post-season bowl games.

NE governors ask Carter for meeting

ALBANY, N.Y. [AP] — Governors of seven northeastern states want to look President-elect Jimmy Carter in the eye and talk over a few things they want for the Northeast.

Gov. Hugh Carey of New York, chairman of the Coalition of Northeastern Governors, said the group has sent a letter to Carter, formally asking the former governor of Georgia to meet personally with them next month.

The letter, made public Saturday, includes several proposals the coalition developed during its recent conference at Saratoga Springs.

It said the four most important proposals were creating a regional energy and development corporation, setting up a federal tax incentive to stimulate investments in economically depressed areas, direct federal aid for needy areas and a major welfare overhaul.

MIT dropout charged with beheading mother

GLOUCESTER, Mass. [AP] — A former student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology was held by Gloucester police last night in the beating death and beheading of his mother, police said.

Brian Whittemore, 26, was confined at police headquarters here pending an arraignment Monday on a first degree murder charge in Gloucester District Court.

Police said Eva Whittemore, 62, was found dead in her home at the Top of the Harbor duplex development late Sunday morning by police answering a complaint from neighbors. She had been beaten to death with a hammer. Neighbors reported that the mother and son had been arguing.

"An autopsy showed that the first blow was enough to kill her," said John Cronin, Gloucester's chief of detectives.

"The rest she never felt." He said her head had apparently been cut off with a jacknife.

Whittemore was arrested at the house yesterday.

Cronin said Whittemore, a 1968 honors graduate of Gloucester High School, had history of mental illness and had been hospitalized in the past.

He said Whittemore had not been living at home and resided at various times in Florida, New York and Boston after dropping out of MIT in his junior year.

A school spokesman said Whittemore was not listed in the current directory of students, but further details were not immediately available.

The UMass Omen

The animals on campus had been strangely restless all week. Just the day before I had watched the squirrels cowering and hiding in the trees outside Goessman as I left my lab, dejected by the seemingly spontaneous disappearance of my hydrogenation product.

That morning I had returned from my daily shower only to find my dwarf coleus shrivelled and brown on my windowsill. I shuddered uncontrollably and stared out through the glass, where the sun was obscured by a black cloud. Evil forces were at work.

The elevators in JQA were all dead, so I took the stairs. Outside there was an unusual chill in the air. At the Southwest bus stop an empty shuttle bus lay grotesquely turned on its side. My pace quickened as I made my way hurriedly toward Machmer Hall.

I struggled against a heavy wind that was whipping around the west side of the library and entered my class. I tried to keep my mind from wandering from the lecture, but the memories of the unnatural events of the day troubled my soul. Both my new Bic pens ran dry within minutes.

After class I walked nervously to the Campus Center to look at records in the University Store. In the concourse I spied Charlotte Allen and Albert Sparks strolling together hand in hand. I trembled and ducked into the store. My terror mounted as Chick Corea and Jimi Hendrix albums were transformed to "The Best of the Osmonds" before my very eyes. I panicked and ran from the store out past the Blue Wall, which had been replaced by administrative offices.

It was overcast as I nearly flew to Worcester Dining Commons — was there perhaps not escape from this madness in a peaceful lunch? But no such luck, as only two dishes were being served, leftover lazy golombki and stuffed peppers. I left as quickly as I had arrived, clutching my upset stomach.

Recalling that I had not yet turned in my scheduling sheet, I headed for Whitmore. The schedule book had certainly screwed me this year — my courses all conflicted, and I could sign up for no more than seventeen credits. I began to wonder if this could not be connected with the hellish conspiracy that haunted me today.

My thoughts were interrupted by an incredible sight. Where the campus pond had only yesterday rippled in the breeze lay a mudflat, scattered with dying goldfish. I shook my head and looked to the heavens, asking myself what this malicious deity had in store for me next. A frightened passerby mumbled that all the water from the pond had flowed into the Hatch. I gasped and moved on.

In a cold sweat I approached the low profile of Whitmore. A mysterious force overcame my body as I drew nearer, my legs guiding me involuntarily up the red-bricked ramp toward my fate. A scream of terror lodged itself halfway up my throat and I choked. My last vision before entering was of terrified students rushing irrationally about campus, their books and notes left to flutter away in the wind.

The administration building was devoid of any sign of human life for the first time I could remember. I found myself once again in control of my own movement. The door to the stairway swung open before me, and I shuffled apprehensively forward and downstairs.

The only sounds were my pounding heartbeat and a curious humming noise. I followed the noise to another door, this one left ajar. I went in.

It was Oscar, the computer. From the window above, where I frequently cashed checks, I had often gazed down upon this massive circuitry and amused myself with the thought of it taking over the university. Little did I now that it already had.

Contrary to the silly image often portrayed in sci-fi flicks, most computers cannot speak, Oscar included. Instead, a typed message was punched out by a machine to my left. As I read, it all became clear. Poor Oscar, it seems, had finally cracked under the pressure of years of coping with scheduling and insufficient funding from the state. I was moved by the real-life tragedy. The now deranged computer had in its desperation sought revenge on the world that had treated it so cruelly.

Smiling benignly on the accumulation of whirring tapes and flickering lights, I edged toward the wall. Shaking noticeably, I reached down slowly and pulled the plug from its outlet. The room fell dark and silent.

Outside the sun was shining as I walked to my 2:30 COINS class.

Organizing in Economics

By the UEC EDITORIAL COLLECTIVE

During the semester the Undergraduate Economics Council has been organizing and working towards increasing student power within the Economics Department. We are a group of undergraduates in economics who started organizing in the spring of 1976 over our lack of control of our department and our education. Similar to other students in departments throughout the university we had no say in determining the evaluation procedure, the curriculum offered, the departmental hiring policies and other policies.

> We feel that our efforts are an example of what all students can and should do to influence and control their own educational development.

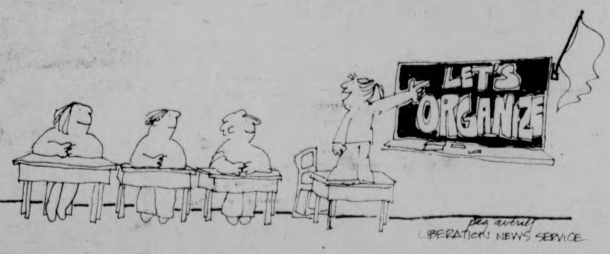
A semester later our position in the department has changed drastically in that both students and faculty now recognize the UEC as the representative force of undergraduates. While our long range goals have yet to reach fruition, we have achieved certain objectives with concrete results. Last spring due to what we considered a very limited selection of upper level courses a general meeting was called. Out of this meeting came a list of courses which we believed should be offered.

In order to ascertain as to whether these courses were interesting to a large number of economics students we conducted a survey consisting of the proposed new course as well as the department's standard selection. At a meeting with the faculty the results of the survey were presented. A high level of interest was shown for six of these courses. These courses were then informally approved by the department head at the time, Norman Aitken. In addition to getting the courses that students wanted the UEC also gained a position on the hiring committee designed to seek new faculty.



This fall the UEC's active membership has grown such that we have been able to pursue a wide range of activities. We have also received majority support of the economics undergraduate majors in the form of a petition that designated the UEC as their representative body. In cooperation with graduate students within the department we have been pressing for the department to schedule courses that the graduate students would like to teach. We have succeeded in getting three new classes offered as well as a change of instructor in another.

But this isn't the only thing the UEC has been working on. We have also been interviewing prospective faculty members to fill vacated slots within the department. We've drawn up guidelines through which potential faculty members will be evaluated. These guidelines have been generally accepted by the faculty personnel committee. Our recommendations on hiring are then forwarded to the personnel committee.

The UEC is also setting up a subjective course evaluation questionnaire to be circulated in the place of the computerized evaluation forms. We hope that as a result of this economics students will be able to make more informal choices in their selection of courses. The response of the department to this has been interesting. Initially we were told it was illegal and should not pursue the matter. After researching the idea we found out that there were no legal problems and we were encouraged to do it by Dean Wilkinson. As a result the department head has become more agreeable to the idea. Hopefully this questionnaire will be used at the end of this semester.

We are also engaged in setting up seminars on educational and career opportunities including what should be done in preparation for them. One of these will take place the week after Thanksgiving on December 9, Thursday evening in the Campus Center.

One of the most valuable aspects of our organization is that information about the department is widely disseminated. Our meetings are all open to all interested students and all who attend meetings collectively decide group policy. We feel that our efforts are an example of what all students can and should do to influence and control their own educational development. The UEC and other groups on campus, like the Student Organizing Project, will be glad to meet with other individuals or groups who are interested in developing this type of organization within their own departments. We feel that such an organization aids people in becoming the active determiners of their educations rather than the current norm of being passive recipients.

Director Daphne Reed said she is interested in drawing on the resources of the surrounding communities to fill dramatic roles, backstage and technical positions for the performance.

"Experience is not necessary," she said, "But I am looking for people who share my admiration for Ms. Childress' keen observations of human nature as we assemble our cast and crew."

Auditions are scheduled for today and tomorrow in Room 15 of Emily Dickinson Hall at 7:30 p.m. Rehearsals will start Jan. 6.

In the cast are six blacks (two younger and two older women, one young man and one child) and five whites (one younger woman, one older woman, two younger men, and one child).

The drama is set in the deep South in World War I and is the story of the consequences of a love affair of long standing between a black woman and a white man. The original New York Shakespeare Festival production starred Ruby Dee and James Broderick.

Scripts are on reserve in all of the Five College libraries. For further information, call 549-4600, ext. 386, or 253-3887.

Take steady aim

By JACOB LOVE

The astrological weather for the day will be dreamy and mild with minor headaches around 10 a.m. and intermittent clunkiness thru sundown. The early evening will be happily energetic.

The Sun, our spiritual focus, is in Sagittarius, the sign of The Archer. Several other planets are there as well, emphasizing the basic meaning of the sign. The Archer shoots an arrow towards a far away target. Thus we will find our greatest joy in The Quest — aiming at a distant goal.

Over the coming week, conditions will present us with a vivid image of our target. So let's keep our eyes open and try to take steady aim.

Saturn, the get-your-act-together planet, gave us a big boost towards the target over the weekend. Saturn, as the stern Guru, helps us to face hard, cold reality and learn our limitations.

Saturn also helps us learn the craft we have chosen. But only if we are willing to study, work, and persevere. Over the weekend, Saturn gave us the rationale — the necessary thoughts — that we needed to understand in order to get our act together. Saturn also gave us the love-and-money rationale; we got a chance to look at our credit rating.

After all that, Saturn started going retrograde. As the Earth in her orbit started swinging past him in his orbit, his apparent motion in the sky turned backwards. Which means symbolically that it's time for us to internalize the Saturn function, the father figure.

Parking ban for snow removal

There is no parking of motor vehicles on the streets of Amherst from 2 to 6 a.m., beginning Wednesday, in order to facilitate the removal of snow during the winter months.

This parking ban is strictly enforced and vehicles left on the public ways are subject to be ticketed and towed until April 1.

The town of Amherst has set aside three parking areas in the central business district for overnight parking. They are the Pray Street metered lot, the Amity Street metered lot and the so-called Lincoln metered lot behind the business blocks on Main Street.

Notices of this towing regulation have been placed at all filling stations within the community as well as motels, hotels and places of business.

Mass PIRG conducts survey

Peter C. Bogle, staff attorney for the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), has announced that Mass PIRG will conduct a statewide public opinion survey of homeowner attitudes about solar energy during the first two weeks of December.

The survey, conducted by student interviewers over the telephone, will pose basic questions about solar energy potential, advantages and disadvantages to randomly selected homeowners throughout Massachusetts.

Mass PIRG chose to survey homeowners, Bogle says, because "Massachusetts homeowners are important decision makers who in fact control Bay State solar energy development. We want to know what they think and where they get their information."

Students who are interested in helping conduct the phone interviews should attend a briefing-training session tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Room 163 of the Campus Center.

Mass PIRG also needs the help of key punchers and computer programers to help analyze the data.

Bogle noted that the solar survey is a good opportunity to learn surveying skills while at the same time collecting valuable energy policy information.

Celebrated author and literary critic at Smith

Irving Howe

The Five-College B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations are pleased to announce that Irving Howe, the author of the outstanding best seller "World of Our Fathers" will deliver a lecture tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium, Smith College. One of the foremost literary critics on the American scene, Howe's topic will be "Strangers — The Relationship of American Jewish Writers to the Mainstream."

Howe, teacher, writer, and critic, was born in New York City in 1920 and was graduated from the City College of New York in 1940. He has taught at Brandeis and Stanford Universities and is now Distinguished Professor of English, City University of New York Graduate School and Hunter College. This year he is at the National Humanities Institute of Yale University.

Irving Howe is the editor of Dissent. His work has appeared in many publications, including The New York Times, The New Republic, The New York Review of Books, Partisan Review, etc. Among his books are "The Critical Point; Decline of the New;" "Politics and the Novel" and with Eliezer Greenberg, "A Treasury of Yiddish Stories, A Treasury of Yiddish Poetry and Voices from the Yiddish."

The son of Russian immigrants from the Ukraine, growing up in the Bronx, with Yiddish as his first language, Howe's background and erudition made him uniquely fit for the task of writing "World of Our Fathers", the first full account of the social and cultural history of the East European Jews in America.

Thirty-seven weeks on the best seller lists, "World of Our Fathers" is a work of richly detailed history and broad narrative sweep. It is the collective biography of the two million Jews who emigrated to the United States during the four decades beginning in the 1880's. Drawing on a wealth of primary and secondary sources in English and Yiddish — memoirs, newspaper accounts, histories, fictions, personal interviews, Howe records and analyzes the ways in which these immigrants changed and were changed as they attempted to make their way into American society and maintain their Yiddish culture and traditions. In the sense that the story of America is the story of diverse ethnic groups grappling with assimilation into the mainstream, then "World of Our Fathers" is more than a major contribution to Jewish history. It is a major contribution to American history.

Howe's lecture is being co-sponsored by the Amherst Jewish Community. There is no admission charge and the public is welcome.

National League of Cities paints bleak American picture

DENVER (AP) — A report by the National League of Cities paints a bleak picture of urban America in 1976 as city officials begin debate here on which priorities they will press before the Carter administration.

President-elect Jimmy Carter is not attending the League's annual Congress of Cities but was to give a speech yesterday night by telephone hookup to a meeting of the national black caucus of local elected officials.

Earlier, the 3,000 delegates began debating the league's urban agenda that will emerge later this week.

Carter representatives arrived Saturday and met with league officials, as well as groups of mayors who supported and advised Carter during his election effort.

What they heard is what Carter has been told all along — the nation's big cities are in trouble and in need of immediate federal assistance.

"The situation of many cities worsened in 1976 as severe economic conditions hit city residents extremely hard, especially the black and the poor," said the league staff report.

The report noted that the percentage of Americans living in poverty increased for a second straight year in 1975.

The over-all U.S. poverty rate was 12.3 per cent, but the rate in central cities was 15 per cent.

According to the report, high unemployment and the nation's sluggish economy "reduced state and local revenues by $27 billion below full employment potential."

Other major problems during 1976 were continued population loss by many large cities, as well as increased concentration of the poor into ghettoized city neighborhoods.

The league report also noted that as some cities lose population and cash revenues, others gain. "Population migration is favoring the South and the Southwest over the Northeast and North Central and wealth is flowing in the same ways," said the report.

"Growth as well as decline is costly and creates public problems," it said.

However, the report concludes, "1976 was not a year for dwelling upon the costs of growth. The costs of decline were too obvious, too great and too demanding."

The report also cited several bright spots during 1976, noting the ongoing rehabilitation of downtown areas in Baltimore and Detroit.

Hikers suffer frostbite

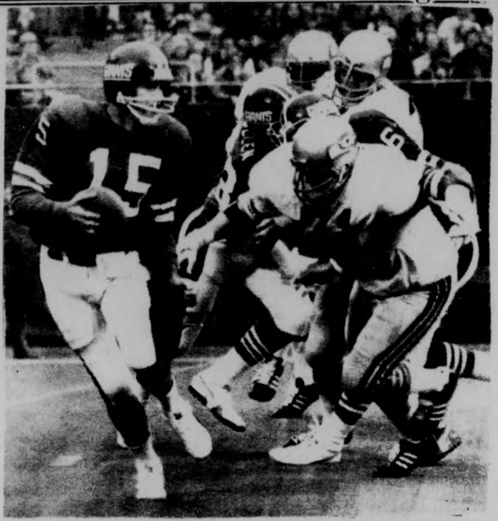
BOULDER, Colo. (UPI) — An expert on winter camping yesterday said two Colorado University sophomores, stranded overnight on a glacier in subzero temperatures, stayed alive only by "a stroke of luck."

The skiers, Herbert L. Myers, Watertown, S.D., and Howard Krentz, Plainfield, N.J., both 20, were in fair condition yesterday at Boulder Community Hospital.

A spokesman said Myers had superficial frostbite to both feet; Kretnz suffered "profound" frostbite to both feet and both hands and faces at least six weeks in the hospital.

"There is a very good likelihood that Krentz will lose some of his toes or fingers," the spokesman said.

Stewart Leach, safety and education officer for the Rocky Mountain Rescue Group, said Myers and Krentz, both of whom had been in Colorado about three months and "only negligible winter camping experience," left Wednesday on a four-day cross-country ski trip across the Continental Divide.



(SEATTLE—GIANTS) — EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J.: New York Giants quarterback Craig Morton (15) scrambles yesterday for an open receiver as Steve Niehaus (71) of the Seattle Seahawks closes in for the kill in the second quarter. Morton connected for two aerial touchdown passes to lead the Giants to their biggest offensive output of the season and a 28-16 victory over Seattle.(UPI)

New divorce service becomes church ritual

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The couple saying "I do" at the altar may be ending a marriage instead of starting one. The divorce service is part of a new "alternate" ritual of the United Methodist Church.

The ritual calls for the estranged couple to stand before the minister with the congregation present. Late in the service, the wedding band is transferred from the left to right hand as a symbol of the divorce.

"I expect it to be used by quite a few people. I hope the ritual will help people realize they are in no way cut off from the church when they get divorced," said Rosalie Bentzinger, 52, of Des Moines, who helped develop the divorce rite.

A recently published book detailing the divorce ceremony is part of a United Methodist Church's alternate rituals project.

Although it is not part of the church's official Book of Worship, it may be used at United Methodist churches throughout the country.

"There is always some risk as soon as you try to minister to people in offbeat or non-traditional things," Miss Bentzinger said in a weekend interview.

"Lots of people feel we are encouraging divorce, but we're just recognizing that it does happen."

"The church takes the whole business of marriage very seriously. Divorce is an experience many people could have," she said. "Our concern is how the church can help them."

The case for faculty unionization

To the Editor:

Although I have great respect for Professor Oswald Tippo's accomplishments as a scholar, teacher and academic leader, I must disagree with his letter of November 24 urging a "no" vote on the question of unionization.

Professor Tippo begins with "the ideal or model of a university" which he envisions as a "community" of scholars, gathered to pursue truth but occasionally performing administrative chores. By contrast, I begin with the real world. It is not a community at all, or at least not much of one but rather a system of power relationships whose purpose is to distribute scarce educational resources. At present, it seems to me, the faculty has all to little voice in the allocation of these resources and the administration, both in Amherst and in Boston, all too much.

Professor Tippo fears that unionization will introduce an "adversary" relationship into university affairs. I would suggest that such an adversary relationship already exists. This relationship is defined prinicpally by the greater power of the administration in university decision-making, but is exaccerbated by differential rewards for administrative service, by the proliferation of nonacademic appointments, and by the growth of "professional" administrators, that is to say men who lay claim to office through long tenure in administrative posts rather than through excellence in teaching or scholarship.

Professor Tippo believes that unionization will bring an "alien and non academic" system into university life, one drawn from "industrial" rather than "academic" models. Perhaps so, but it seems to me that university life has been already transformed by the introduction of bureaucratic and hierachical arrangements borrowed from the modern corporation. As faculty we are faced not with a choice between abstract models of academic organization, but rather with the need to adapt to the university as it now exists. Unionization, in my view, is probably the most creative response we can make in the present situation. A union may not restore the mythical community of scholars which Professor Tippo envisions, but it might serve to integrate a badly divided faculty into a cohesive whole, to restore some sense of balance in existing power relationships, and to defend the interests of scholars and teachers.

Professor Tippo believes that unionization will result in a shift of power to Boston. In fact, we have already experienced an enormous shift of power toward Boston in the last five years, a shift all too dramatically reflected in the escalating costs of the central administration. Collective bargaining may indeed increase the burdens of local administrators who will have to deal with two purposeful actors, an organized faculty and a central administration, and not, as at present, a central administration and a fragmented, alienated and ineffective faculty.

Professor Tippo believes that the "remarkable history of this institution during the last decade" will be imperiled by the introduction of "nonacademic types" from the union into a situation previously characterized by administrators and scholars "sitting down to talk...about mutual educational concerns in a congenial atmostphere..." Three points, it seems to me, are relevant here:

1] Although the University indeed underwent "remarkable" growth in the late 1960's [especially, I might add, during Professor Tippo's chancellorship], the history of the last half decade has been one of steady decline as measured by falling salaries, declining funds for libraries and laboratories, larger classes, etc.

2] Decisions today on this campus are not, for the most part, reached through processes of mutuality. Certainly the faculty has scant control over such key areas as budgeting and allocation of educational resources, and in fact has faced challenges to its control over classrooms, curricula and personnel in the form of increased intervention in these areas by the administration.

3] Collective bargaining provides an instrument for expressing faculty concerns coherently and powerfully. It can and should rescue, not scuttle, the frail bark of academic collegiality.

Professor Tippo argues that in voting for a union we will be "adding still another layer of....bureaucracy...." The issue here, however, is not simply the growth of bureaucracy. In fact, the administration has expanded quite rapidly in the past five years, during which administrative personnel costs on the Amherst campus alone have increased by 150 per cent. The real issue, it seems to me, is not bureaucracy per se, but rather to whom the bureaucracy is responsible. The introduction of collective bargaining will give scholars and teachers a stronger voice in the governance of their own university and will limit the ability of administrators,either in Amherst or in Boston, to impose upon them capricious and arbitrary policies and procedures.

Finally, Professor Tippo argues that "we will have less flexibility... involving sabbaticals, merit increases, teaching loads, research assignments...." We have not had a merit increase in three years, a policy tacitly supported by the central administration. Teaching loads last year were arbitrarily increased, and the student-teacher ratio is creeping steadily upward. Sabbaticals, though grounded in academic tradition, exist at the discretion of the administration and the trustees. The "flexibility" I have been exhibited in these areas in the last five years does not augur well for our future as scholars and teachers. Indeed, the increasing arbitrariness of procedures in these areas represent a trend which I hope will be arrested by the advent of collective bargaining.

The problems of higher education at the University of Massachusetts, of course, transcend the powers of both faculty and administrators. We are, all of us, at the mercy of long term economic and demographic processes. Certainly unionization is no panacea. It is, however, at least in my view, the only practical alternative to the continued drift and demoralization which has characterized academic life on this campus during the past five years.

Arts at UMass: Love it or leave it

To the Editor:

My sincere congratulations to Marea for her letter in Tuesday's Collegian. Truth in journalism is such a rare quality, because it transcends the ridiculous semantic bull that surrounds the objectivity question.

I had a unique, cryptic conversation with an acquaintance from the cultural workers collective today. He's working on a documentary film concerning the Gether's Brown case. I see no harm in joining this bandwagon, particularly when another Collegian *commentator believes that porn*ography is the most important issue on campus. The issue, as always, is racism, sexism, economic oppression.

The cultural workers are having a difficult time raising money for the film; and an even more difficult time reacning through people's covers to discover the values and prejudices that have surrounded the case.

I don't know enough about the case yet; so [illegible] merely on the bandwagon. [illegible] strange conversation I had with Brett focused on where we're from, and why we do these seemingly altruistic, frustrating things. When I spelled out my name, he asked, "you're from a German background." I thought quickly and said, "no, a lot of my great uncles got murdered in Russia about 50 years ago or so." His did too, it seems. "The Cossacks" he said. "Yes." My father's job is to raise money, as his father did, for good causes — Israel, hospitals, schools, etc. It is certainly a tough job. My grandfather received a plaque from Levi Eshkol, the second prime minister of Israel.

I don't expect any plaques from UMass. There doesn't seem to be much money for good causes around. Business school seems to be where it's at.

To make a long story short, I'm having a difficult time pulling together this student arts festival. My idea is to pull people away from business, so they can communicate and work together for the common goal. We have some great talent lined up; musicians, films, video, and more; but the important thing is to return the student union Ballroom to the students, instead of the businessmen who will so kindly donate $50 to the United Fund if we beg them.

We need a student center here very badly. We have a student union where students work as administrators for pathetically underfunded programs, and a campus center infamous for prostitution, sleight-of-hand finances, and escalators that move only for businessmen.

I suppose that the idea for an art festival is new and hard to cope with. The program council has been wishy washy at best, except for Peter Belsito's positive approach. The program council is intended to bring money into the center, not necessarily culture. Culture is over at Hampshire. The Fine Arts Council has some good stuff, but how do they bring in this Spanish ballet from fascist land?

According to Allen Light, the "box office" determine.. success at the Fine Arts Center.

Since the businessmen will always hand us the shaft, it would be nice if at least our own student senators could resolve to support this festival with some money and organization. They blew plenty on Orleans: With a tenth of what they paid Orleans, they could hire a hundred excellent, beautiful local musicians. I'm quite sick of begging and suffocating in red tape. Your ad, administrators. UMass; love it or leave it.

Success through believing

by KEN FONDA

How many of you have ever heard this saying, "God helps those that help themselves."? Where did this saying come from? A person who doesn't know the Bible might say that it came from the Bible. The truth is that God helps those that believe. Believe what, you say? That God is and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him. — Hebrew 11:6.

The difference between successful living and existing is the difference between believing in God and believing God. Perhaps one objective of obtaining a college education is learning how to be a success. Many men have written books on how to succeed, men like Dale Carnegie, Charles E. "Tremendous" Jones, or David J. Schwartz. All of these men recognized the power of positive thinking and believing.

People who only dream get nowhere, but a person will never get anywhere without dreams. The man who sits and only thinks positively that his ship is coming gets nowhere, while the man who believes positively attains his goal. What is the difference between thinking and believing? The difference is quite subtle because one cannot believe unless one thinks, but believing is bigger than that. Thinking is like a car without wheels and believing is the wheels.

The greatest definition of what believing is can be found in Hebrews 11:1 which says "Now believing is the title deed of things prayed for, the evidence that they are yours before you actually see them" (Literal translation according to usage). Let's take this example: A person goes to an auto dealer, talks to a salesman and decides he is going to buy a new car. After much discussion to decide exactly what the customer wants the salesman draws up a deed to this new car. The person buying the car can't drive away in that title deed, but that deed is proof that within so many weeks he will receive delivery of the new car. Believing works the same way. You can't drive away in believing, but believicg is the proof that you are going to receive what you asked for.

The great thing about believing is that it works for anyone. Jesus said to his disciples that "whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith". Mark 11:23 Notice he said "whosoever". That means anyone can believe. Also notice that doubt is absolutely contrary to positive believing.

Believing to obtain results is much like taking a picture. First you must decide what picture you are going to take. Then you must focus in on that picture and get clear on everything in the picture. Next you must let in the proper amount of light allowing proper exposure time and snap the picture. If any of these steps are left out you will get a blurry picture and you will get inconsistent results.

You can apply this principle to many things. Do you want to get good grades in courses? Believe you will and you will. Do you want to have better personal relations with people? See yourself doing it and you will have it. Believing is the greatest key to life. Believe big and get the results.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Monday, November 29 — Born today, you are an emotional independent, reacting and responding in your own way and time to events and circumstances around you without waiting for a directive from others. It matters to you what others think -- but not so much that you will change your views to suit the views of those whose opinions you value. For you value your own integrity more and are always careful, therefore, to say, act, even think along lines of principle. Because you have always sought integrity, even as a youngster, as an adult you find it a simple matter to be your own man -- or woman.

All of which is not to say that you do not enjoy good relationships with others. Indeed, your personal integrity is one of the main reasons others are attracted to you in the first place -- even though they may come to recognize that integrity because of differences with you, differences which may, at times, even lead to serious argument. A mature individual, you are able to stand on your own two feet even as you realize that others may not be as able to do so. To your friends and loved ones you are bound to bring a stability they would otherwise find lacking in their lives.

A hard worker, and an ambitious one, you take great pleasure from the mental and physical exercise involved in any activity. On the other hand, you are one who knows how to relax in your leisure time, so that you can always approach your work from a physically and mentally fresh point of view.

Tuesday, November 30

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Reconsider new efforts aimed at cementing new friendships. You may not be ready to give your all to a new relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Seize an opportunity for spiritual gain as it approaches. If you wait until some later date you may be too late.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Guilt over a past offense should be expiated without further delay. Otherwise, you will do yourself emotional damage.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Consider the circumstances that went into the making of the present situation on the employment scene. Promises gain little.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Make an effort to be independent of another's opinions. Do your work according to your own best judgment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If you continue to think immaturely, you cannot do more than act in an immature fashion. Evening hours may prove hard to handle.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Necessary adjustments must be made if you are to succeed on the employment scene where others failed. Know your own limitations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Your own abilities are your own best bet where future success is concerned. Make sure you are not depending upon others' good graces.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — This is a day for blowing your own horn. If you wait for another to do it for you, you may wait a long time. Act in your own interest.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Though there may be temptation in the form of promises of material gain to lower your standards, don't. Stick to your own principles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — If you would circumvent self-destruction, you must put self-doubt to flight. Don't believe all you hear about another's views.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If you approach a new phase of work in fear, you cannot possibly succeed. Allow self-confidence to develop within.

When to dunk or not to dunk

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — During a timeout in the Syracuse-West Virginia championship game Saturday night, in the Hall of Fame Tipoff tournament, the public address announcer said:

"A few rule changes you may be interested in that have taken place in college basketball; dunking the ball is now allowed during play and a technical foul called on the bench now results in an automatic two-shot foul..."

Well, both of those new rules came into play during the tournament, which took place in Springfield Civic Center this past weekend. The revived dunk rule, brought back after a ten-year absence, was utilized by UMass' Pyatt and West Virginia's Sid Bostick (the tourney MVP).

Pyatt was the first player in the tourney to take advantage of the relaxed dunk rule. Late in the Minutemen's loss against West Virginia, UMass forced a Mountaineer turnover which resulted in a two-on-none fast break. The junior forward took a pass and then majestically two-handedly stuffed the ball and hung for a few seconds afterward on the rim, undoubtedly to punctuate his achievement. For his finishing flourish, Pyatt was slapped with a technical foul.

Bostick, meanwhile, found himself free around the Syracuse loop in the trophy game, took a couple of steps and let loose with a one-handed dunk.

The only two stuffs of the tourney brought about good crowd reactions. Denied the priviledge of watching such stars as David Thompson and Julius Erving perform their specialty while undergraduates, collegiate basketball fans are apparently set for the return of the dunk. Ten years without it was ten years too long.

The two-shot technical, on the other hand, was slapped on UMass coach Jack Leaman twice in the tournament. Incensed by some dubious officiating, the Minutemen mentor let the men in the striped shirts have it. For his efforts, Leaman was given a reward of two technicals.

Playoff-bound Patriots buck punchless Broncos, 38-14

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Rookie cornerback Mike Haynes returned a punt 62 yards for a touchdown and intercepted a pass while the defensive line notched nine quarterback sacks yesterday to steer the playoff-bound New England Patriots to a 38-14 win over the Denver Broncos.

The victory pushed the Patriots' record to 9-3 and kept them one game ahead with two games remaining in the race for the American Football Conference wild card playoff berth. New England needs one more victory to clinch its first playoff berth in 13 years.

Don Calhoun, filling in again for injured fullback Sam Cunningham, gained a Patriots' season-high of 177 yards in 25 carries to go over the 100-yard mark for the third straight game. New England broke its single-game offensive yardage record for the third time this season in pounding out 332 yards.

The Patriots built a 31-0 lead on quarterback Steve Grogan's one-yard run, a three-yard pass from Grogan to tight end Al Chandler, Haynes' second TD return of the year, a one-yard run by Andy Johnson, a three-yard burst by rookie Ike Forte and John Smith's 49-yard field goal.

The Broncos, now two games behind the Patriots with a 7-5 record, scored in the third period on Jon Keyworth's one-yard run and in the last quarter on an 11-yard pass from Craig Penrose to Riley Odoms.

Tony McGee led New England by tackling Denver quarterback Steve Ramsey three times.

New England won with 24 points in the second period that gave the Pats a 31-0 halftime advantage. They squandered two earlier opportunities to score.

Bob Howard's interception set up Smith's longest field goal of his career in the second quarter and Grogan hit Chandler to put New England ahead 17-0.

A minute and a half later, Haynes, the only player in New England's 17-year history to return a punt for a touchdown, fielded a Bill Van Heusen kick on his own 38, broke toward the middle and cut down the right sideline for the score.

With 21 seconds left in the half, Johnson sprinted around the right side for a TD after Haynes had returned another Denver punt 36 yards to the Broncos' 29.

Denver lost the services of Van Heusen, running back Otis Armstrong and defensive end Paul Smith in the first half. New England linebacker Sam Hunt left the game in the fourth quarter with a hamstring pull.

Steelers still alive

The Pittsburgh Steelers are still alive in their quest for an unprecedented third consecutive Super Bowl title.

The Steelers, faced with elimination yesterday at Cincinnati, rallied on Franco Harris' four-yard run through the snow to defeat the Bengals 7-3 and move to within a game of first place in the American Conference Central Division.

It was Pittsburgh's seventh straight win while the Bengals had a five-game winning streak snapped. Two of Cincinnati's three losses this year have been to the Steelers.

In order for Pittsburgh to make the playoffs, Cincinnati must lose to either Oakland or the New York Jets in the next two weeks while Pittsburgh continues to win.

Cincinnati took a 3-0 lead on rookie Chris Bahr's 40-yard field goal in the first quarter but with 22 seconds to go in the third period, Harris plowed four yards for the winning score. It was set up by Dwight White's recovery of Boobie Clark's fumble at the Bengal 24.

The entire second half was played in a driving snowstorm. The snow quickly covered the artificial turf and players were hampered by treacherous footing the final two quarters.

Bert Jones, the NFL's top passer, fired three TD passes in a 24-point second period barrage as Baltimore clinched a playoff berth by whipping the Jets. The Colts are 10-2, a game ahead of New England in the AFC East. If they fail to win the division title, they still are assured a wild card playoff spot.

Jones hit 22-of-32 passes for 175 yards and threw TD passes of five yards to Don McCauley, 14 to Lydell Mitchell and 31 to Roger Carr. Toni Linhart added a career-high four field goals.

Rookie cornerback Mike Haynes returned a punt 62 yards for a score and intercepted a pass while the defensive line notched nine quarterback sacks to steer playoff-bound New England over Denver. The victory pushed the Patriots' record to 9-3 and kept them a game ahead with two left in the race for the AFC wild card berth. New England needs one more victory to clinch its first playoff berth in 13 years.

Mike Thomas caught two of Bill Kilmer's three TD passes and surpassed the 1,000 yard rushing mark as Washington shut out Philadelphia and gained ground in the NFC playoff scramble. The victory boosted the Redskins into an 8-4 tie with St. Louis with two games left and strengthened their chances for at least a wild card playoff berth.

Brian Sipe threw TD passes to Paul Warfield and Reggie Rucker as Cleveland edged Miami in a swirling snowstorm to keep its playoff hopes alive.

John Gladchuk (l) and Peter McCarty (r) have been elected co-captains of the 1977 UMass football team. Gladchuk, a Hotel-Management major from Amherst, has been the most consistent receiver on the team during the past two years. McCarty, a Phys. Rimwomen awesome in pre-season game

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Eastern Connecticut State arrived late yesterday for its women's basketball scrimmage against UMass. And, the way things turned out, perhaps the team shouldn't have even bothered to show up at all.

Because, as it turned out, the Minutewomen displayed a balanced offensive attack, a defense which forced numerous turnovers, and some sparkling individual plays in defeating their opponent, 81-56, in a pre-season game at the Cage.

You knew that it was going to be a UMass day when the Minutewomen scored the game's first eight points before Eastern Connecticut could get on the board via two free throws. The lead fluctuated anywhere from that early six-point difference to a 23-point advantage near the end of the game. UMass, built its lead mainly by virtue of some outstanding defensive play and also though a sloppy EC offensive game.

Actually, UMass used a mixture of inside play and outside shooting in its offensive attack. Leading the way from the perimeter were two freshman guards, Sue Peters and Sue Henry. They started in the backcourt for the Minutewomen and both scored in double figures, with 16 and 10 points respectively.

The inside game was spearheaded by senior forwards Chris Basile (10 points) and Nancy O'Neil (11). The starting duo did much of the UMass boardwork and also chipped in with some key hoops.

Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski used every player on her 12-person squad during the scrimmage, and several of them had made some important contributions. In particular, forwards Maura Supinski (eight points) and Jo Balletta (seven points), plus center Ginny Peebles (also with seven), came off the bench to help out the Minutewomen.

Despite the rout, Ozdarski wasn't happy with everything she saw. "We still have to work hard on our fundamentals," the first-year coach said. "There's still a lot of other things that we have to work on, too."

But the 25-point win did have good points to it. "I was pleased with the way our game plan, which was to shoot from the outside, worked out. It opened up the middle for us," she added.

"Our season will be built upon improvement," Ozdarski said. "We have to be a total team, and this is a concept I hope to instill in the players."

Jackson a Yankee?

NEW YORK (UPI) — Reggie Jackson, lured by the glitter of big city living and the gold of one baseball's richest organizations, is expected to sign a multi-year contract today with the New York Yankees in excess of $2 million.

Jackson, the 30-year-old slugging outfielder who played out his option with the Baltimore Orioles last season, thus joins former Cincinnati Reds' ace left-hander Don Gullett as the second free agent from the re-entry draft signed by the Yankees. While Gullett's six-year contract, signed Nov. 18, was worth $2 million, Jackson reportedly will receive a total package of bonus, salary and deferred payments worth nearly $2.5 million.

Surprisingly, both the Montreal Expos and San Diego Padres, finalists with the Yankees in the bidding for Jackson's services, made substantially higher offers for the charismatic slugger. But it was the prospect of playing in the media-centered New York, where he already enjoys numerous outside business interests, which in the end lured Jackson to the Yankees.

It was that same "big city" pitch which enabled Yankee owner George Steinbrenner to sign Jackson's former Oakland teammate, Catfish Hunter, to a million dollar contract two years ago.

Volleyball review

Spikers fall short of goal

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team struggled through October trying to break .500, but fell short ending the month with a 8-10 record. All hopes of attaining the .500 goal went down the drain for the spikers this month as they could only muster one win and one tie in eight trys. This tailspin ended the spikers season, leaving them a dismal record of 9-20-1.

The spikers, whose first win came in the season opener against Barrington, did not taste victory again until mid-October with a win over Northeastern in a tri-match won by MIT.

The October 16 win against Northeastern seemed to be a turning point for the spikers, not so much because of the win but because of the improving individual and team play. Coach Dianne Thompson said at the time that it was the first real sign of confidence the women had shown all season.

This theory seemingly turned into fact as UMass went on to win a tournament at UMaine-Orono two weeks later. The spikers won all three of its matches to take the tournament title. One of its victims was the powerful UMaine-Orono club — at that time rated as one of the top teams in New England.

After stretching its winning streak to four by winning over Mt. Holyoke, UMass lost to UNH and beat Williams in a tough tri-match. As October came to an end UMass, who was 3-8 half way through the month, found itself with a 8-10 record.

Coach Thompson consistently stated how impressed she was with the improvement the women had shown, particularly in their individual skills. However, it was clear that the objectives for the remainder of the season was to even off the record.

Little did coach Thompson realize that 8-10 would be the closest her team would come to .500. The spikers who were off and running were at October's end brought to a dead stop as November pressed on.

The spikers went to tournaments in Rhode Island, Worcester and Pennsylvania and returned without winning a match. Rhode Island and Worcester were nightmares. In Rhode Jsland the women lost to URI, Delaware and Springfield, while splitting with Bridgewater.

"It was the worst I've seen them play," Thompson said after the tournament.

At Worcester the spikers never got past the first round, losing to Mt. Holyoke, a team UMass had beaten earlier in the season.

In the Pennsylvania tournament the results were the same but the story was entirely different. UMass, completely outclassed, lost four out of four matches. The spikers faced some of the best teams in the east, and although they gained experience they took quite a beating.

Despite the outcome, Thompson said the women played well and were that they were happy with their final performance.

According to Thompson, her first season as volleyball coach was a learning experience for both team and coach. She said that the improvements the women made throughout the season made it all worthwhile, regardless of the record.

W. Virginia wins tourney... ...Minutemen place third

Hoopsters split tourney action

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

"We have no excuses now about being young and all that bologna. We have two games under our belt now. But I'll tell ya, some of the things I saw out there tonight scared the hell out of me."

—UMass Coach Jack Leaman
after the UMass-Harvard game.

SPRINGFIELD — The UMass basketball team failed to successfully defend its Hall of Fame Tip-Off Tournament title as the Minutemen split their opening games of the 1976-77 season to take third place in the four-team weekend tourney here at the Civic Center. UMass dropped its opener to eventual tourney champion West Virginia, 89-77 Friday night before bouncing back with a 69-50 triumph against an undersized Harvard squad Saturday night.

West Virginia, one of UMass' foes in the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League this year, upset tourney favorite Syracuse, 83-78 behind MVP Sid Bostick to capture the title. Syracuse had previously beaten Harvard, 75-48 in the tournament opener.

For the Minutemen, it was not a performance worthy of six weeks practice. The contrasting outcomes correlated the contrasting opponents. West Virginia and Harvard? How about William Shakespeare and Rod McKuen? Or Stevie Wonder and Glen Campbell? West Virginia previewed just how tough ECBL opponents will be this year for UMass, while the Crimson may well fatten up many an opponent's record this year if its 13 per cent first half shooting is any indication of its outlook. How did UMass fit into this? — let's just say very non-artistic.

"There's damn well a lot of work to be done for us to be the team we were last year," coach Leaman said following the tourney.

Leaman's concern had to be evident in the loss to the Mountaineers. UMass and West Virginia traded leads through most of the opening half before the latter took complete command.

UMass held a 36-34 lead with less than two minutes left in the half, thanks to the play of junior guard Derick Claiborne and the rebounding of forward Jim Town. Claiborne hit five of eight shots in the half, but more importantly took control of the Minutemen attack in the absence of Alex Eldridge. Eldridge was not on the travelling squad for the weekend tilts, as UMass could dress just 12 players and "he wasn't one of the top 12 in practice is what it comes down to" according to Leaman.

West Virginia netted the final seven points of the half to take a 41-36 lead into intermission. The Mountaineers then ran a burst of 12 straight points early in the second half behind the jumpshots of co-captain Russ Chapman (18 points) to take a commanding 55-41 lead. The lead peaked at 71-51 midway through the half following an eight point spree, and it was an early goodby for UMass.

Town, who finished with a game high 16 rebounds and was later named to the All-Tournament team, was ejected along with WV's Maurice Robinson following a scuffle with 9:23 left. Town was one of four Minutemen in double figures for the game as he finished with 10 points. Mike Pyatt, in an uncommon substitute role, came off the bench to score 16 points, as did Captain Mark Donoghue. Claiborne finished with 15 points, hitting just two field goals in the final half.

For West Virginia, All-American candidate Tony Robertson topped all scorers with 20 points, while Bostick, Chapman, and impressive freshman guard Lowes Moore hit all double figures.

"That wasn't Massachusetts out there," claimed Leaman. "We can't play the way we did and win. We can do two things, either play the way we should or play this way. If we play like this I won't have to worry 'cause I know we won't win."

The Minutemen came out strong the following night and jumped to a quick 18-4 lead after eight minutes. The lead ballooned to 28-9 as Claiborne again looked impressive. The junior guard hit five of six shots in the half and manned the running game effectively.

UMass went to a zone defense almost constantly ("We've never played this much zone in my 11 years here" — Leaman) to take advantage of the shorter Crimson. Harvard started three players under 6-foot-3, as UMass outrebounded the Crimson 47-33 in the game as Town once again led all rebounders with 18.

Harvard could not penetrate the Minutemen zone, and with miserable outside shooting hit just four field goals in the first 20 minutes (4-30, 13 per cent). The Crimson shot just 29 per cent for the game in comparison to UMass' 60 per cent which pretty much tells the story.

"What can you say?" asked Harvard coach Tom "Satch" Sanders after his team's dismal shooting performance. "You shoot 20 or 30 per cent — there's nothing you can say about that."

UMass led by as many as 23 (50-27) eight minutes into the second half, before a mild Crimson run narrowed the margin to 15. Town led UMass in three stats for the game: scoring (16), assists (five), and rebounds. The consistent Claiborne had 14, while Donoghue and sophomore Eric Williams had 10 points each.

Williams and sophomore Brad Johnson started in both tilts, at forward and guard, respectively. Leaman also gave Chuck Steveskey, Len Kohlhaas, and Bill Morrison valuable playing time. Leaman indicated he would go to his bench often and did exactly that as all 12 players saw action. However, the inexperience seemed to show.

"Our young people played scared out there", Leaman said. "They didn't play as well as they had the past six weeks."

"Our win was not a stellar performance by Massachusetts," he continued. "I'm happy with the way Derick took over, and our inside people moved a little better, but our young people are still having trouble adjusting."

Leaman will have little time to settle matters as the Minutemen meet Penn State in their home opener Wednesday night at the Cage.

NUMMO NEWS

VOLUME 2 ISSUE 8

A Black News Service Publication

The Black News Service strongly believes that our newspaper will speak the truths of the protractive struggle of black people.

NUMMO is the magic power of the spoken and written word.

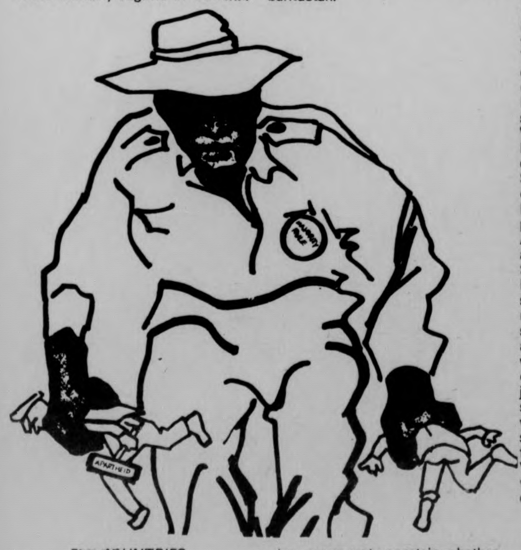
With our Arab brothers we are locked in the same struggle, particularly in the wake of closer links between the zionist entity in occupied Palestine and the neo-Nazi regime in Azania. We were emboldened in our own war of liberation by the great success of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Egypt, Syria and the other Arab armies during the October War. More victories of the same nature would be the greatest contribution to our struggle because zionist Israel after Vorster's visit with Rabin this year, has become an even greater ally of apartheid South Africa. All the freedom fighters of the world are our strong allies because the main force sustaining their oppressors, world imperialism, is the same force sustaining our mortal enemy — the white minority regime in Pretoria.



EEC COUNTRIES

We have been critical of members of the European Economic Commission, the EEC, because of the very close diplomatic, economic and even military ties that exist between some of them and the white minority regime in South Africa. Indeed the ranking scandal of our times is how France has most times been completely oblivious, and sometimes devious, in violating United Nations sanctions against the supply of arms and sale of war materials to the South African fascist regime. This scandal has been exaccerbated by the extensively published French decision to sell nuclear reactors to South Africa. A dangerous move by any standards.

However, we recognize that on an issue of great significance to the Azanian people and our country's territorial integrity, these countries pledged, in this Assembly, through Foreign Minister Max Van der Stoel of the Netherlands, that they would not grant recognition to the apartheid fraud — the Transkei bantustan.

We are as yet uncertain whether Foreign Minister Anthony Crosland of Britain jumped the gun when he told reporters of the EEC decision, last month, and said that US Secretary of State Dr. Henry Kissinger "has absolutely no intention of doing this" in answer to a question whether the United States would recognize the Transkei bantustan.

WESTERN AND JAPANESE INVESTMENTS

Investments from Japan and western countries, which total 80 per cent of all the money invested in South Africa, have been and continue to be the main pillar of support for white minority rule in Azania. To date the Japanese and western governments have shown little sensitivity and even less sincere concern over the piling evidence of white settler brutality towards the indigenous African majority. These countries are satisfied to pay lip service against apartheid atrocities, such as the wanton murders in Soweto, Alexandra township, Mananeberg, Ravensmead, Guguletu, Mabopane, Qwaqwa, KwaMashu, KwaZakhele, Mamelodi, Garankuwa, Mafekeng, Kagiso, KwaThema, Natalspruit, Thembisa, Langa, Nyanga, Witbank and Middleburg, to mention but a few places where unarmed peaceful demonstrators have been mowed down by trigger happy South African police. To this day they refuse to join the economic boycott against apartheid South Africa.

We have seen twisted bodies sprinkled like debris in the dusty streets of Black townships all over Azania.

Ever since June 16 newspapers the world over have been full of horror about children who have been detained or have simply disappeared. Police have admitted that six of our people have died in detention, there is evidence that they were tortured to death, the figure is obviously far higher.

It long ago stopped to be enough to merely condemn the apartheid policies of the South African white minority regime and then proceed to provide the financial and military support which makes it possible for the Pretoria fascists to perpetrate these sanguinary crimes. It is sheer hypocrisy to grant an undertaker a license to kill and then turn around and criticize him for doing a roaring business.

Until western countries abide by the many resolutions of the United Nations which call for an embargo on trade, economic relations and the supply of arms, and they sever diplomatic and cultural relations with apartheid South Africa, they can never escape the charge that their insensitivity to the plight of the Azanian people is influenced by the fact that the victims of oppression in South Africa are in the main Black, as much as by the profits they reap from the slave labour provided by the African people.

Recent history hears out this contention: when Hitler conducted progroms against the Jews and the people of Europe and sent others to gas chambers and concentration camps, the same powers, particularly Britain and France, and later on the United States, declared war against the Nazi tyrant and the Third Reich. Also they had no qualms about enlisting the support of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Vorster, a dedicated supporter of Hitler during World War II who was detained for pro-Nazi sabotage activities, is re-enacting Hitler's policies inside South Africa and even creating his own Vichy-style reggmes in the Bantustans, at the same time he passes laws empowering South African aggressor troops to attack any African states south of the Sahara — as recently as last week he threatened war against African states supporting liberation movements. The situation is too similar to that created by Hitler for anyone to pretend otherwise. But west European countries and Japan do not only remain opposed to our just resort to armed struggle but support Vorster in many important ways. What is more, they object to socialist countries aiding freedom fighters with the means to reply to Vorster's Hitler-like institutionalized violence. This is the worst form of double standards.

UNITED STATES' INITIATIVES

The significance of the so-called US initiative in Southern Africa at a time when African liberation struggles are approaching complete victory, in our candid view, lies in the fact that America wants to see the status quo in South Africa remain what it is. The threats against non-Africans interfering, when the US itself is supplying investments approaching $? billion, topped with a short-lived certificate of respectability from shuttle diplomacy afforded, Vorster simply tells us the US wants its apartheid protege to retain the monopoly of superior weapons in the battle that is now unfolding.

The US has a growing history of taking wrong sides and following incorrect policies in situations like the one in Azania, evidently the lessons of Indochina and Angola have not gone home.

This we must make clear once and for all: our freedom is too precious for us to subordinate it to America's or any other super power's hegemonistic ambitions. The Pan Africanist Congress, as the vanguard of our people in their life and death struggle to win back the Fatherland, will take assistance from all people of goodwill. And I will again paraphrase another great leader of the Third World, President J.K. Nyerere of Tanzania: our enemies cannot choose our friends for us.

To portray our liberation movements as putty in the hands of foreign manipulators is the ultimate insult. Further, we in PAC have fought long and hard, we lost some of our finest cadres on the battlefield and at the gallows; in great numbers we have served savage sentences of imprisonment of Robben Island and other prisons, through bitter winters and scorching summers. As the African idiom says, we will never let false converts feed on our sweat.

If it is the resolve of the United States or any of the imperialist powers to deny us the victory of a free and democratic Azania under indigenous African rule, let them be warned that the awakened Azanian masses will fight with even greater ferocity against foreign devils and their local lackeys.

TRANSKEI

Today was supposed to be a proving day for the South African white minority regime's policy of apartheid, separate development or whatever nomenclature the racist system now goes under. Billions of dollars have been spent preparing apartheid's first showpiece, the Transkei Bantustan, for international exhibition. On top of the wild spending every fascist precaution was taken to ensure a colorful debauchery. Last night our office received a cable informing us that scores of patriots suspected of belonging to PAC and of planning to disrupt the obscene jamboree have been detained under Proclamation 400, a detention without trial regulation of the South African Emergency laws in force since the time of Sharpeville in Azania's Transkei region. As the whole world knows, those internationallv celebrated Azanian authors and actors of the plays "Sizwe Banzi is Dead" and "The Island", John Kani and Winston Ntshona, have recently been placed in detention by Vorster's flunkey and so-called prime minister of the Transkei, Kaiser Matanzima. Not a single country responded to the invitation and none has extended the much and expensively canvassed recognition. Consequently, the celebrations have landed like a damp squib.

A ruse against the Azanian people and their liberation movement has turned into a useful weapon in their crusade against white settler tyranny in South Africa because our people dared to struggle.

AZANIA

During this Session many of the representatives that have taken the floor have referred to my country by the name popularly accepted by the broad movement of our people at home — Azania. Distinguished delegates will have read in the New York Times, in the Christian Science Monitor, the Washington Post and the Manchester and London Guardian, to name but a few papers, that this is indeed the name increasingly used by Black militants and the masses at home. It is no accident that PAC was first to use the name in modern times, our history is a history of always breaking new ground in the struggle for national liberation in Azania. We thank the many delegations who are moving with the current of our national liberation struggle — Long Live AZANIA!

CONCLUSION

Before concluding, I wish to sincerely thank the African Group at the United Nations for having acceded to the PAC's request for the item on South Africa to be brought before the plenary session of the United Nations General Assembly, this year. In so doing, the OAU member states have once more demonstrated high esteem for Azanian patriots and the thousands who have paved the way to freedom with their precious lives. I also want to thank all of those who supported this motion from the African Group. Our thanks also go to you, Mr. President, for inviting us to address the General Assembly.

The world is turning its back on the primitive policies of colonialism, of which South African apartheid is a vulgar remnant. We implore all those who pride themselves as custodians of the sacred

The Struggle Against Apartheid

What Whites Can Do About Racism

By ANGELA THOMAS

On Monday, November 8, an incident occurred in Butterfield Dorm which further illustrated the problems of racism which exist on this campus. A group of students were watching "Gone With The Wind" on television when another group of black students entered the dorm. In passing the television room, they stopped and began to discuss the racist nature of the film and its effect on people watching it.

Some of the students in the television room joined in the discussion, and others tried to listen more closely to the movie. The black students were first asked, and then told to keep quiet or move down the hall by several students in the room, most of whom were white.

Finally, a white male in the room yelled, "Will you people please keep quiet!" At this point, a black male who had been sitting quietly during the discussion watching the movie, jumped up in rage at the use of the phrase "you people" in this situation. He went toward the man who had made the comment but was prevented from reaching him by barriers in the room. A white woman then told him that if he was going to fight, to go somewhere else. Full of rage and frustration, the black man turned to her and hit her.

A lot of dynamics were in operation in this incident. The black man was incorrect for responding to his anger by hitting the woman, and he apologized later to her. At the same time, an overriding issue is the lack of racial awareness and sensitivity of the individuals who continued to tell the black students to shut up. They were unable to grasp the significance of the content of the discussion about racism and how their reaction to the students intensified the problem. A group of black students were discussing racism, stereotypes, and the imbalance of power, and, at the same time, they were being told to shut up and move on, mostly by white students who did feel that their conversation was appropriate at that time.

The next night a meeting was held to clarify issues and give people a chance to express their feelings. Some of the white students expressed that they learned a lot from this meeting. Others felt that it was a waste of time. Many people refused to acknowledge the racial content of the incident and only wanted to review it as one group watching television and another group disturbing them.

Wake up everybody! How many incidents will it take to convince people that UMass students are not exempt from the racism which pervades the country as a whole. Any serious person interested in dealing with these problems must make a conscious effort to do something to change the negative trend.

Interesting to note, last Sunday, when "Sounder" was on television, only a small number of students came to watch it, in contrast to the crowd drawn by "Gone With The Wind" for two nights.

All white students who are serious about working against racism, the basic contradiction in this society, must take the initiative to seek out alternative films and experiences which will enlighten them. They must not wait for black students to initiate these programs and must begin to do so themselves.

Scottsboro

For 64-year-old Clarence Norris, believed to be the sole survivor of Alabama's racist conspiracy of terror that practically destroyed the lives of nine innocent Black youth more than four decades ago, the nightmare of Scottsboro lingers on.

Despite the numerous books documenting the innocence of the Scottsboro Brothers and the widely publicized testimony of one of the two alleged "rape victims" that actually no rape took place, Clarence Norris after spending 15 years of his life in prison is still being pursued by the same criminal Alabama courts that tried to railroad him and eight other Black defendants to the chair in 1931.

The victims of frenzied white vigilantes, the nine Scottsboro Brothers were some of the millions "riding the rails" in search of work during the Depression when they were taken off a freight train by a racist mob. They were sentenced to death for allegedly raping two white women after a mock trial conducted in an atmosphere of racist hysteria. It was only a mass national movement which forced the Alabama authorities to commute their death sentence to long prison terms.

Today the terror of Scottsboro lives on. Four of the Scottsboro Brothers are dead (one driven to suicide) and the whereabouts of four others remain unknown.

Clarence Norris, now living in Brooklyn with his family, recently applied for a pardon from a 1946 parole violation because he felt he had "suffered enough for something I didn't do." The Alabama Parole Board answered by branding him a "fugitive from justice" and demanding his extradition.

It was only two years ago that one of the biggest murderers in contemporary history, a criminal responsible for the killing and maiming of millions of Vietnamese people, was given a full-fledged pardon by the President of the United States. Yet an innocent Black worker, the victim of one of the most frightful frameups, is instead being treated as a criminal by the racist Alabama courts.

If Ford or Carter were really interested in justice for all people (as they imply in those campaign ads aimed at the Black community), they could announce they would pardon Clarence Norris and other victims of racist injustice in the North and South. If they wanted a real debate, wouldn't that be an honest-to-goodness issue on which to take a stand?

Missing Page of World History

Scholar John Henrik Clarke spoke of his first impressions of Arthur Schomburg as a man dedicated to "our history," a history he described as the "missing page of world history."

Clarke spoke of both the historical significance of the Schomburg Center and the YMCA where the meeting was taking place. He pointed out that this YMCA had been the place where "Malcolm X had addressed rallies, where Black actress Cicely Tyson had first auditioned," and where other well known Black people first appeared publicly. Clarke explained that it was the strong-feeling of Arthur Schomburg that his collection remain in Harlem, easily accessible to the Black community.

Ali Rasheid, a minister of the Nation of Islam, told the crowd the struggle waged by Arthur Schomburg is still continuing today "through you and me," and he called on all to join the struggle to save the Schomburg.

Lillian Roberts, associate director of DC 37, AFSCME, condemned the government for its all-out attack against vital services, especially in regards to the Black and Latin communities.

Dennis Serrette, president of the New York chapter of the Coalition of Black Trade Unionists, threw the weight of his organization behind the efforts of the Citizens Coalition to Save the Schomburg, a cause he said "every progressive should support."

Claudette Furlonge, a leader of the May 1 Anti-Apartheid Day Committee, linked the struggle for the Schomburg with the struggle of the African masses in Soweto as struggles "against the same enemy."

The program concluded with a report of the many activities organized by the Citizens Coalition to Save the Schomburg by Glenderlyn Johnson, a leading member of the coalition and a staff member at the Schomburg for

Angela Loses Bid to Visit Joanne

By LAWRENCE NAGY

A judge upheld Middlesex County authorities on refusing to allow black activist Angela Davis to visit Joanne Chesimard, who is being held in the county jail awaiting trial for the 1973 murder of a state trooper.

Middlesex County Court Judge Richard S. Cohen denied an application filed by Chesimard's defense attorneys who sought to overturn a decision by Sheriff Joseph DeMarino barring Davis from the jail.

Davis was in New Brunswick yesterday to speak at a private reception at the Rutgers Alumni Faculty Club sponsored by the National Conference of Black Lawyers to raise funds for Chesimard's defense.

Lewis Myers Jr., a member of the Chesimard defense team, said Davis flew in from California for the fund-raising event. She wanted to see Chesimard because "they are friends," he said.

He contended Sheriff DeMarino violated rules governing visitation rights for prisoners at the county jail by denying Davis access to Chesimard.

Middlesex County Assistant Counsel James B. Convery argued Davis did not come under the categories of visitors allowed by the jail rules. The categories include family members, girlfriends and business associates.

Judge Cohen concluded Davis was not covered by any of the categories. He noted the girlfriend category was "not meant to indicate a mere casual friend of a prisoner" and said there was no indication Davis was responsible for the conduct of Chesimard's business affairs.

Defense attorneys had argued that since Chesimard wanted to consult with Davis on fund-raising for her defense, the visit could be covered by the business associate category.

Cohen also reviewed a list of persons who have visited Chesimard since she was brought to the jail in New Brunswick in January. The judge concluded DeMarino had not made exceptions previously to the categories of visitors allowed by jail rules. He added there was no indication there was such a close personal relationship between Chesimard and Davis to justify granting an exception.

In a related development, Convery filed suit on behalf of DeMarino in Superior Court seeking to reverse the decision of a hearing examiner who concluded Chesimard should be moved from her [illegible] cell in the jail to the mi[illegible] security county work[illegible]se in North Brunswick.

The suit called the decision by hearing examiner David Ploshnick "improper, arbitrary, capricious and without foundation in fact or law."

Plushnick, a New Brunswick attorney, conducted the hearing last month after U.S. District Court Judge George H. Barlow ruled Chesimard should be given a "procedural due process hearing" on the reasons for the isolation cell confinement in the jail.

Marion Brown: Revolutionary Concepts in Black Music — a Lecture-Demonstration, The Center for Racial Understanding, Moore House, Southwest, at 7:30, Monday, November 29

On Monday, December 6, 1976, Frederick Douglass comes to Amherst by way of the Center for Racial Understanding, the Malcolm XRoom, and the Five College Lecture Fund Committee. Arthur Napier Burghart willgive a live performance of the Outstanding Black Spokesman from the 19th Century. Burghart shares with you his Bicentennial gift to America. Arthur Napier Burghart, a man of many talents, is an actor who has appeared in motion pictures, repertory theatre, both on Broadway and Off Broadway plays. "Cotton Comes to Harlem" and Network motion pictures are to his credit. He has performed in a variety of plays like: Baraka's "The Slave", "Dutchman", Shakespeare's "Richard III", "King Lear", O'Neill's '"The Iceman Cometh", "Emperor Jones" and many many more.

Douglass, born into slavery, named Frederick Augustus Washington Bailey in Tuckahoe, Maryland in 1817. At eight he was sent to Baltimore to work for one of his masters relatives. In 1837, he fled from his owners, to avoid capture he dropped his two middle names and changed his last name. At a meeting of The Massachusetts Antislavery Society in 1841, Douglass told what freedom meant to him. The audience was so impressed that the society hired him to lecture about his experiences as a slave. During the early 1840's, Douaglass protested against segregated seating on railroad trains by sitting in cars reserved for whites. He had to be dragged from the white cars. Douglass also protested against religious discrimination. He once walked out of a church that kept blacks from taking part in a service until all the whites had finished participating.

"Narrative of theLife of Frederick Douglass", an autobiography, was published in 1845. Douglass feared that this identity as a runaway slave would be revealed when the book was published, so he went to England that same year. In England, he continued to speak against slavery. He also found friends who raised enough money to buy his freedom. Upon his return to the United States in 1847, he founded an antislavery newspaper the North Star in Rochester, N.Y. Douglass charged that employers hired white immigrants ahead of Black Americans. He accused even some abolitionist business of job discrimination against Negroes. He led a successful attack against segregated schools in Rochester. His home was a station on the underground railroad, which helped runaway slaves reach freedom.

The stimulating live performance will take place in the Southwest Center of Performing Arts (Hampden) at 8:00 p.m. It is free and open to the public.

Black Women Struggles

By NALIKU HAIKU SUDAN

In attempting to analyze the situation of the Black woman in America one crashes abrutly into a solid wall of grave misconceptions, outright distortions of fact, and defensive attitudes on the part of many. The system of capitalism under which we all live has attempted by many devious ways and means to destroy humanity of all people, and especially of Black people. This has meant an outrageous assault on every Black man, woman, and child who resides in the United States.

In keeping with its goal of destroying the Black race's will to resist subjugation, capitalism found it necessary to create a situation where the Black man found it impossible to find meaningful or productive employment. More often than not, he couldn't find work of any kind. And the Black woman was manipulated by the system, economically exploitated and physically assaulted. She could often find work in the white man's kitchen, however, and sometimes became the sole breadwinner of the family. This predicament has led to many psychological problems on the part of both man and woman and has contributed to the turmoil that we find in the Black family structure.

Unfortunately, neither the Black man nor the Black woman understood the true nature of the forces working upon them. Many Black women tended to accept the capitalistic evaluation of manhood and womanhood and belived in fact, that Black men were shitless and lazy, other wise they would get a job and support their families as they ought to. Personal relationships between Black men and Black women were thus torn asunder and one result has been the separation of man from wife, mother from child, etc.

America has defined the roles to which each individual should subscribe. It has defined "manhood" in terms of its own interests and "femininity" likewise. Therefore, an individual who has a good job, makes a lot of money and drives a Cadillac is a real "man," and conversly, and individual who is lacking in these "gualities" is less of a man. The advertising media in this country continuously informs the American male of his need for indispensable signs of his virility — the brand of cigarettes that cowboys prefer, the whiskey that has a masculine tang, or the label of the jockey strap that athletes wear.

The ideal model that is projected for a woman is to be surrounded by hypocritical homage and estranged from all real work, spending idle hours primping and preening, obsessed with conspicous consumption, and limiting life's functions to simply a sex role. We unqualitatively reject these respective models. A woman who stays at home caring for the children and house leads a very sterile existence. She must lead her life as a satellite to her mate. He goes out into the world and brings back part of the world for her. His interests and his understanding of the world becomes her own and she cannot develop herself as an individual having been reduced to only a biological function. This kind of woman leads a parasitic existence that can aptly be described as legalized prositiution. The above example is found in the white middle and upper classes of the American society and are goals that many bourgeois Blacks ascertain to become.

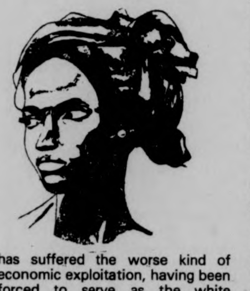
Furthermore, it is idle dreaming to think of Black women simply staying in the house watching soap operas like the middle class ideal is shown. Most Black women have to work to help hous, feed, and clothe their families. Black women make up a substantial percentage of the Black working force, and this is true for the poorest Black family as well as the so called "middle-class" family.

Black women were never afforded any such phony luxuries. Though we have been browbeaten with this image, the reality of the degading and dehumanizing jobs that were relagated to us quickly dissipated this mirage of womanhood. The following excerpts from a speech that Sojourner Truth made at a Women's Rights Convention in 1851 shows us how misleading and incomplete a life this model represents for us:

"...well, chilern, whar dar is so much racket dar must be something out o'kilter. I think dat 'txixt de niggers of de Souf and de women at de Norf all a talkin 'bout rights, de white men will be in a fix pretty soon. But what's all dis here talkin' 'bout? Dat man ober dar say dat women needs to be helped into carriages and lifted ober ditches, and to have de best place every whar. Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or ober mud puddles, or gives me best palces...I have plowed, and planted, and gathered into barns, and no man could head me — and ar'nt I a woman? I could work as much as a man (when I could get it), and bear de lash as well — and ar'nt I woman? I have borne five chilern and I seen 'em mas' all sold off into slavery, and when I cried out with a mother's grief, none but Jesus hears — and ar'nt I a woman?" 5.

Unfortunately, there seems to be some confusion in the movement today as to who has been oppressing whom. Since the advent of Black power, the Black male has exerted a more prominent leadership role in our struggle for justice in this country. He sees the system for what it really is for the most part, but where he rejects its values and mores on many issues, when it comes to women, he seems to take his guidelines from the pages of the Ladies Home Journal. Certain Black men are maintaining that they have been castrated by society but that the Black woman somehow escaped this persecution and even contributed to this emasculation.

Let me state here and now that the Black woman in America can justly be described as a "slave of a slave." By reducing the Black man in America to such object oppression, the Black woman had no protector and was used, and is still being used in come cases, as the scape goat for the evils that this horrendous system has perpetrated on Black men. Her physical image has been maliciously maligned; she has been sexually molested and abused by the white colonizer; she has suffered the worse kind of economic exploitation, having been forced to serve as the white woman's maid and wet nurse for white offspring while her own children were more often than not starving and neglected. It is the depth of this degradation to be socially manipulated, physically raped, and used to undermine your own household, and to be powerless to revers this syndrome.



It is true our husbands, fathers, brothers, and sons have been emasculated, lynched, and brutalized. They have suffered the cruelest assault on mankind that the world has ever known. However, it is a gross distortion of fact to state that the Black woman has oppressed Black men. The

Those who are exerting their "mankind" by telling Black women to step back into a domestic, submissive role are assuming a counter-revolutionary position position. Black women likewise have been abused by the system and we must begin talking about the elimination of all kinds of oppression. If we are talking about building a strong nation, capable of capitalist system found it expedient to enslave and oppress them and proceeded to do so without consultation of the signing of any agreements with Black women.

It must be pointed out at this time that Black women are not resentful of the rise of power of Black men. We welcome it. We see in it the eventual liberation of all Black people from this corrupt system of capitalism. Nevertheless, this does not mean that you have to negate one for the other. This kind of thinking is a problem of miseducation; that it is either x or y. 6. It is fallacious reasoning that in order for the Black man to be strong, the Black woman has to be weak.

throwing off the yoke of capitalism and oppression, then we are talking about the total involvement of every man, woman, and child, each with a highly developed political consciousness. We need our whole army out there dealing with the enemy not half — an army.

There are also some Black women who feel that there is no more productive role in life than having children. This attitude reflects the conditioning of the society in which we live and is adopted from a bourgeois white model. Some young sisters who never had to maintain a household and accept the confining roles which this entails tend to romanticize (along with the help of a few brothers) this role of housewife and mother. Black women who have had to endure this kind of function are less apt to have utopian visions.

Those who project in an intellectual manner how great and rewarding this role will be and who feel that the most important thing that they can contribute to the Black Nation is children are doing themselves a great injustice. This line of reasoning completely negates the contributions that Black women have historically made to the liberation struggle. These Black women include Sojourner Truth, Harriet Tubman, Mary Bethune, and Fannie Lou Hammer to name a few.

We live in a highly industrialized society and every member of the Black nation must be academically and technologically developed as possible to wage a revolution. We need competent teachers, doctors, nurses, electronics experts, chemists, biologists, physicists, political scientists, etc. Black women sitting at home reading bedtime stories are just not going to make it. 7.

Economic Exploitation of Black Women

The economic system of capitalism finds it expedient to reduce women to a state of enslavement. They often times serve as a scapegoat for the evils of the system. Much in the same way that the poor white cracker of the South, who is equally victimized, looks down upon Blacks and contributes to the oppression of Blacks, so, by giving to men a false feeling of superiority (at least in their own home or in their relationships with women), the oppression of women acts as an escape valve for capitalism. Men may be cruelly exploited and subjugated to all sorts of dehumanizating tactics on part of the ruling class, but they have someone who is below them - women.

Women also represent a surplus labor supply, the control which is absolutely necessary to the profitable functioning of capitalism. Women are systematically exploitated by the system. They are paid less for the same work that men do, the jobs are specifically related to women are low-paying and without the possibility of advancement. Statistics from the Womens Bureau of the U.S. Department of Labor Show that in 1967 the wage scale for non-white women was the lowest of them all.

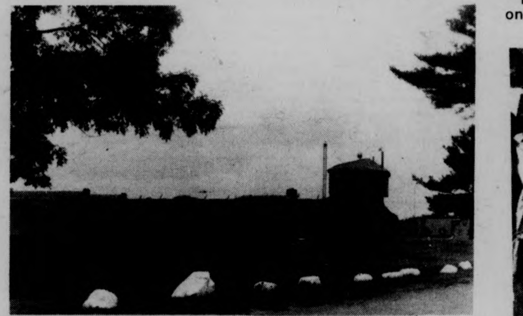
The Trial Legend

Craeman Gethers

Robert Earl Brown

Over a year has passed since the incarceration of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers for the McDonald robbery. During this time, the two men have appeared in five court sessions where the process of "separate but equal" has been used. Finally, the two students have been confronted by a powerful court system that has tricked and contradicted itself. In this respect, we have called all three processes a part of "The trial legend."

Craemen Gethers was convicted of the McDonald robbery on July 24, 1975. Earl Brown was convicted three months later (October 22, 1975). Since the two conviction trials which were marred by contradictory statements, and the imbedded racism that is faced by oppressed people around America, the two men have had three tediour appearances. The first appearance was on February 5, 1976. Judge Tamburello (the trial judge for Earl Brown) was scheduled to rule on a number of motions including one for a new trial. The trial was attended by supporters who were entertained by Judge Tamburello accusations that the court's integrity was damaged by emphasizing the case as racism. Basically, the attitude subsided when Judge Tamburello found out that he would be reinstated after he retired on February 5th. The news helped the judge to eventually decide on remanding Brown to the Northampton House of Correction. The order would allow Brown to continue his schooling, and serve his sentence. But the remand order fell far short of it intentions, and was confirmed by Deputy Master Burt of the Correctional House, that the act was illegal. The mistake led to a cancellation of Earl Brown's program, which brought about the February 27th hearing. The second trial brought on the introduction of an implied rule of the trial legend, the separate but equal clause. The trial corrected the problems Judge Tamburello had left with the remand order which held up the paper transfer from Walpole to Northampton. Because Judge Kent Smith was unfamiliar with the prior trial (conviction trial), the legend was allowed to continue. In this respect, instead of Earl Brown being allowed to continue his schooling, the sheriff announced he would work at the House of Corrections (Northampton) until April 16th, when he would meet the state's criteria for being within eighteen months of period. The second negative aspect, was the use of the separate but equal clause which was Craemen Gethers was appearing before Judge Hayer for motions on discovery of evidence, post-bail, and the motion for a retrial. The separate but equal clause which was evident by placing Earl and Craemen in different institutions, was used to keep them apart during the February 27th appearance of both men. The simultaneous appearances emphasized the unwillingness of the court to admit that it has made a mistake. The contradictions of the polygraphy where in one case it is used against Earl Brown, while Craemen polygraph was considered invalid; the subsiding of the court's to believe the contradictory statements by the three witnesses; the waste of money to railroad two innocent individuals; the threats of placing these individuals in a hostile environment; and the warning that the Northampton system has emphasized to oppressed people by hiding under the shields of justice. These were the elements that the fourth trial incurred. The fact that reforms in this society far outweigh one's freedom. The appearance was before the third judge since February 5,when Judge Tamburello the original trial judge retired (but was reinstated on April 29th). Judge Tisdale was assigned to the Earl Brown's April 9th appearance. The Trial legend in this appearance, brought out the fact that Tisdale had ruled on prior motions in this case. The actions that concluded, emphasize that he would not change the situation. In this respect Judges can act more like the District Attorney which contradicts the impartiality they should have.



Norfolk Prison

Rally outside Whitmore, Spring '76

The legend was helped by the attitude of the judge, as well as the April 16 eligibility date for work-release for Earl Brown. On April 16th, Judge Tisdale denied the motion for post-bail, while the work-release program was delayed three times until a letter from the Boston Correctional Office approved the program on June 1st. The final appearance was on July 2, when Craemen Gethers appeared before Judge Hayer with his fourth lawyer (Matthew Fineberg). The trial brought out Craemen's claim for a retrial. The first claim was based on the testimony of witnesses who verified that Craemen was on crutches. Secondly, because two private polygraphy test verified that Craemen Gethers did not participate in the McDonald robbery. Judge Hayer who stated that he needed some information from the polygraphers delayed his decision. The decision was delayed for two months. Judge Hayer denied the motion for a retrial because "that the Court was not impressed with the experience of the examiner," and that "I find that the decision to use or not witnesses is a matter of defense tactics and strategy, that if witnesses were available to the defendant and were not used he cannot be heard later to ask for a new trial on the basis that they were not called to him."

The attitude of both Judges has not been a surprise when we consider the use of "separate but equal" tactics. First, the fact that the sentences are different give us a hint of the whole injustice process. Craemen was given an eight to twelve year sentence, while Earl Brown received a three to five sentence. Basically, the latter came would only take the judges a wink support from the college community in the Pioneer Valley. The fact that the latter step had to take place, produced another contradiction. Because if an individual has the support of the community then how can there be justification for taking one from his community. In extending the point, Mr. Tamburello showed some guilt by thinking people would be satisfied with the light sentence. Secondly, the separate but equal tactics have curtailed the hopes of getting a retrial. Neither judge was willing to give permission for the defendant to receive a copy of the March trial (which both defendants were tried together). The importance of this transcript cannot be overlooked. It would express the fact, that the three transcripts (Probable Cause, March 1st Superior court trial, and the convictions trial) would justify a retrial. Since the courts are not willing to give the transcript up, it only impairs our chances for a retrial. Thirdly, Judge Hayer already ruled on Craemen motion for a retrial and denied it on September 3. At the same time Judge Hayer did not rule on every motion brought forward. The significance of this allows the judge to have some strings on Craemen's case. At the same time the whole denial of Craemen's retrial indirectly influences the next appearance of Earl Brown. The influence relates to the amount of time needed for an opinion, the arguments used, and the past influences of having one's mind made up prior to the evidence that will be presented. Finally, the separate but equal stand has done tremendous damage. In the entire case, there have been seven lawyers used. One has to ask, when will the defendant be able to obtain proper representatives. The incompetency of past lawyer questions the status of our present lawyer and any future lawyer if there is a need. But the reality of an answer can be seen by where the defendants are at. The incompetency of our case has left Craemen in Norfolk, while Earl Brown has traveled from Walpole, Norfolk to Northampton.

In summation, the reforms have only been promised as a mechanism to hold off the stream that has been raised by the Pioneer Valley College community. One has to submit that the legend of reforms will always remain as long as the oppressed individuals do not stand for their rights that are guaranteed by the Constitution. It would ohly take the judges a wink of the eye to understand that there is a court for the poor, and one for the rich. Thus, it is not hard to believe that a Patty Hearst can get out for Thanksgiving, while individuals like Craemen Gethers and Earl Brown have to remain incarcerated because society wanted some "niggers."

File Suit On Behalf of 5 Nationalists

From Claridad

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The judge of the district court of Washington, D.C., John J. Sirica, directed the government of the United States to show cause why it is opposed to the consideration of a petition which demands the freedom of Andres Figueroa Cordero.

The petition of habeas corpus is part of a lawsuit filed on behalf of the Five Puerto Rican Nationalist prisoners — Lolita Lebron, Oscar Collazo, Rafael Cancel Miranda, Irvin Flores, and Andres Figueroa Cordero — which accuses the United States of violating their human rights and violating their rights as prisoners of war.

The government alleges that the federal court has no jurisdiction over the case and petitioned that the case be transferred to a state court in Missiouri, where Figueroa Cordero is currently encarcerated.

Sirica, who had questioned the honesty of president Richard M. Nixon during the Watergate case, gave the government until next Monday to present its case.

The charge of violating the human rights of the prisoners is based on the fact that the prisoners are not allowed to write to each other, receive literature of their choice, or receive visitors unless they were known to them prior to their imprisonment.

The United States has continually refused to recognize the Five as political prisoners, claiming that theirs was a criminal act.

However, the lawsuit states that the Five are prisoners of war since they are citizens of a nation occupied by the United States.

The suit was filed here by the National Lawyers Guild, the National Conference of Black Lawyers, the National Prisons Project, the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), the Puerto Rico Legal Institute, and the Center for Constitutional Rights.

Emilio Soler Mari, Director of the Puerto Rico Legal Institute and lawyer for the Five Nationalists stated that the conduct of Judge Sirica "is a positive sign in favor of the just cause for the proposed excarceration."

U.S. Intervention

Before 1940, the United States had assumed tactical responsibilities only in Latin America and to some degree in East Asia. Of all the regions of the world, the one which required least direct responsibility was Africa. Thus, it has often been said that the United States had no interest in Africa and no policy toward Africa. That was not true, but at least up to 1960 the United States felt, correctly, that its interests were, by and large, well-protected by the tactical decisions of the four major colonial powers (Great Britain, France, Belgium and Portugal), plus South Africa.

That does not mean that the U.S. Government approved every policy of every colonial government. It means that, overall, nothing was seriously enough wrong from a U.S. point of view to warrant direct intervention. Now and then, the United States would make quiet suggestions about "changes"; these were most often ignored. Now and then, spokesmen for the administration in office would make a public declaration of liberal ideology which no one took seriously, as well they ought not to have done. But that was it. Otherwise the motto was: hear no evil, see no evil, speak no evil.

What changed this quiet content? As usual in history, the complacency of the powerful was undone by the refusal of the oppressed to acquiesce. The "peaceful" decolonization of Africa "downward," that is from north to south, had been launched well enough by Great Britain and France in the 1950s. Things got a bit sticky for France because of Algeria, but General de Gaulle got the train back on the track. The political objective was simple. The claims of the African middle classes to local political power and a share in the world economic pie would be granted in return for two things: no substantial change in the nature of economic ties to the Western world, and internal policing by these middle classes of their potentially radical peasants and workers.

The fact that an American ambassador was at that very moment negotiating in Nairobi with the NLC's Foreign Minister, Thomas Kanza, under the auspices of Kenya's President Jomo Kenyatta and the Organization of African Unity, didn't seem to make anyone in Washington blanch. When the Japanese pulled much the same thing before Pearl Harbor in 1941, Franklin Roosevelt called it "a day that will live in infamy." But what is infamous when done by Japanese to Americans is "humanitarian" when done by Americans to Congolese.

In any case, U.S. intervention worked. Within two more years General Mobutu was securely ensconced in the Congo, Nkrumah was ousted in Ghana and Ben Bella in Algeria, and the Angolan revolution ground to a temporary halt. From the point of view of African liberation, the decade from 1964 to 1974 was ten long years of frustration, stagnation, and a deteriorating status quo. The United States had done what needed to be done in the Congo and could leave Angola to the Portuguese, Zimbabwe to the British, Namibia to the South Africans, and everyone else to the local boys.

The spurt of Kennedy liberalism — a vote here and there denouncing the Portuguese at the United Nations; some scholarships to political refugees — died down. Mr. Johnson was preoccupied with Vietnam and the Dominican Republic. Mr. Nixon began to consider even more open support of the white regimes in southern Africa with National Security Staff Memorandum 39 (a product of Mr. Kissinger's staff).

Although one or two of the new African governments were a bit rambunctious (notably Kwame Nkrumah's Ghana and Sekou Toure's Guinea), the "peaceful transfer of power" was seen by Great Britain, France and the United States as a splendid success — until July 1960, when the newly independent Congo-Leopoldville, now Zaire, "exploded."

The Congo exploded for two reasons: Belgium, which was running the tactical show, had no previous experience with decolonization and made fearful errors. But even more important, for the first time decolonization had touched the "sensitive" zone of southern Africa. It was like a dentist finally getting near the nerve.

The Congo was part of Africa's mineral-rich area and it had a significant contingent of white settlers. Of course, it could have been "decolonized" without danger to Western political and economic interests; Britain's successful operation just four years later in Zambia — also mineral-rich and with settlers — proved it could be done. But the Belgians lacked Britain's acquired talents. So in the Congo, Katanga "seceded" and Patrice Lamumba ran around aggressively asserting Congolese interests and actually dared to ask the Russians for some transport planes to fly his troops into Katanga to put down the Belgian-protected rebel forces. Panic bells rang in Washington, London, Lisbon and Pretoria. And the United States stepped in.

It took the United States — operating both directly and via the United Nations — four to five years to pull the chestnuts out of the fire. But in 1964, Uniied States (not Russian) transport planes flew Belgian paratroopers to jump near Stanleyville (now Kisangani) and join South African mercenaries already on the ground. Together, they liquidated the National Liberation Council, the heirs of Lumumba's nationalist movement.

What a shock it was, then, on April 25, 1974, when the Portuguese Government fell — or rather crumbled from within as the result of a decade of patient, painful corrosion of its power and internal legitimacy by the PAIGC in Guinea-Bissau, the MPLA in Angola, and FRELIMO in Mozambique. Despite prescient warnings from General Spinola and others, the United States was caught unawares.

It took the United States, with Vietnam and Watergate on its mind, about sixteen months to realize how far things had gotten out of hand, and to comprehend that the new "reformed" Portuguese Government would be unable to arrange one of those harmless little decolonizations in Angola. When Kissinger did finally wake up, it was too late. The United States tried to do something in Angola, directly and via South Africa, but it was abortive.

The alarm bells went off again — both in Washington and in Pretoria — as they had in the summer of 1960. It took four to six years of hard work last time to get Africa back under Western control. Can it be done again? Not as likely, but neither Mr. Kissinger nor Mr. Vorster are the kind to give up easily.

Of the two, Vorster is the more knowledgeable and the more suave. He is also the more desperate. He has seen the menace of revolution coming for a long time now, even before Portugal's collapse. And he has been trying to head it off by "detente." To understand the Kissinger mission one must know what Vorster meant by detente.

Pending the ability of the oppressed Black majority to shake the regime from within, independent nations had been trying to undermine South Africa's international legitimacy and respectability by formal condemnation and practical isolation. Hence they sought to pass resolutions in the U.N. and to achieve diplomatic, economic and cultural boycotts. Bit by bit, this was working. The United Nations passed ever more militant resolutions and more and more Western nations voted for them. An arms embargo was theoretically enacted under international law. Diplomatic, transport and economic ties were broken, at least by most Third World and Socialist countries. One after another, international sports organizations barred South Africa from participation.

All this involved only pinpricks in material terms, since arms flowed in anyway, and trade and industry flourished, thanks to open and covert Western cooperation. But the moral isolation was beginning to have its effect — on the morale of the white regime, on the collective consciousness of the Black majority, and on "liberal public opinion" in the West.

From 1964 to 1974, the international anti-apartheid campaign represented a growing bother to the regime. It wasn't a crisis, but to sophisticated analysts (including Vorster), it boded no good. The way to handle a campaign to delegitimize it. This was Vorster's "detente." The idea was to get at first tacit, then open, support for "normal" relations between independent African nations and white South Africa.

Vorster started with the easy states — weak neighboring countries with conservative regimes: Malawi, Lesotho, Swaziland. Then he started after bigger fish among the ex-French colonies: the Malagasy Republic, the Ivory Coast, Gabon. He was working his way to still bigger fish like Zaire, Zambia and Kenya. And somewhere out on the horizon, he hoped maybe Nigeria could be persuaded to join the list.

It must be said that Vorster was a very prudent and patient fisherman and he was doing quite well. To be sure, he had behind-the-scenes backing from Paris, London and Washington; but he was making the decisions. He had even been involved since 1966 in a quiet effort to decolonize Rhodesia. He couldn't say this too loudly, since his own voters were not sophisticated enough to understand the tactic, but Harold Wilson knew what was going on, and so did Ian Smith.

Vorster was a good enough tactician that even the Portuguese coup did not slow him down. He was in fact merely emboldened to try to draw Mozambique into the net. What undid Mr. Vorster therefore was nothing he did or failed to do. Vorster was undone by Kissinger's false start in Angola. Nothing is worse in war and politics than starting an aggressive action and not going through with it. Kissinger started to overthrow the MPLA in Angola in the summer of 1975, persuaded the normally more prudent South Africans to commit their troops to sustain UNITA, and then pulled back. Nothing as disastrous as that had happened to the West since the Suez operation of 1956.

And Vorster had to pay the cost. The carefully constructed emergent arrangements for "detente" were suddenly abandoned by many of the prospective [illegible] worse, the war [illegible] had been underway since [illegible] in Zimbabwe and Namibia finally spread into South Africa itself. Readers of The New York Times commenced to hear of Soweto, and Soweto turned out to be only the start of a continuing and organized action.

Mr. Vorster said to Mr. Kissinger: do something. You undid years of my careful planning. And there's no time to lose. It was at this point, and only then, that Kissinger began to engage in "shuttle diplomacy." When for the first time the South African regime was seriously and imminently threatened from within, the United States "entered" the region — not to achieve a "peaceful solution" but, quite, the opposite, to struggle to contain the movement for African liberation.

The scheme is very simple. [1] Dump the Rhodesian whites quickly. Buy them off. These whites stole the land from the Africans, and made a handsome profit for twenty-five to seventy-five years on the stolen property and underpaid African labor. But never mind. Use some U.S. taxpayers' money to reward these whites one last time; give them a hefty start on their new life in Canada or Argentina. (None of them would want to go to Britain; the standard of living there is too low.) [2] Create a puppet independent state in Namibia with a large political role for the white settlers, and a semi-permanent invitation to the South African armed forces to station troops there. [3] Do a minor cosmetic job in South Africa, eliminating so-called "petty apartheid." Buy off the Coloureds (those of "mixed ancestry). [4] Get international recognition for Transkei, a Bantustan scheduled to become "independent" this year. Thus, set the stage for the ultimate partition of South Africa with the 20 per cent of whites retaining 80 per cent of the land area (including all the mines and factories). [5] Relegitimize Vorster and the white regime by getting the so-called "front-line Presidents" (Tanzania, Mozambique, Zambia, Botswana and Angola) to meet with Vorster and "trade" the rights of Blacks in South Africa for concessions to Blacks in Zimbabwe and Namibia.

It is this noble program that President Ford is presenting to the American voters as a great contribution to world peace. It is this noble program that Carter and Mondale and Senator Clark (the official Democratic "liberal" on southern Africa) are afraid to criticize. They all wish Kissinger well. And if they come into office, do they propose to do more of the same?

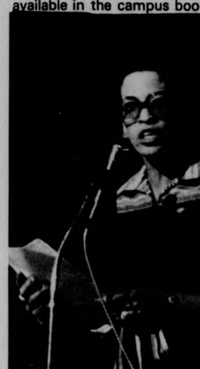
The United States is in southern Africa now in a big way. Vorster no longer is in tactical command. No doubt he liked it better before. But U.S. tactical leadership is a price he has had to pay to preserve privilege for his voters. And he is a sensible man. Kissinger's mission is a setback for the liberation movements. They know it, and are saying so loudly. The "front-line Presidents" know it too. But the United States can wield a mighty big stick when it wants to, and they are being careful.

Just recently I went down to Washington to participate in a conference called by the Methodist Church on southern Africa. At lunchtime a lot of Congressmen showed up and I happened to be sitting across from a rather prominent liberal Republican Senator. He asked me what the conferees thought of Mr. Kissinger's mission. I told him not much, and I explained why. He then asked me that old liberal question: "What can the United States do to make sure that it doesn't end up this time on the side of the wrong people?" I gave him the only answer I know: Get on the side of the right people.

Importance of Cuba to the Third World

FRADANE

THE IMPORTANCE OF CUBA TO THE THIRD WORLD, is the title of a colloquium held at New Africa House on Sunday 21st at three p.m. Speaking were three giants of our Pioneer Valley community — our beloved Johnetta Cole, a professor of Anthropology working out of New Africa House, Andrew Salkey a poet and novelist, hailing from Jamaica West Indies, and recently London, and now teaching at Hampshire College. Robert Marques Literature of the Caribbean also instructor at Hampshire College. Poet Irma McClaurin introduced the speakers and gave a moving recitation of Nicolas Guillen's poem, MY LAST NAME, dealing with the ancestry of his African name. Nicolas Guiellen is the National Poet of Cuba. Roberto Marques has translated many editions of Guiellen's poetry, notably the "El Gran Zoo," which is available in the campus bookstore.



Johnetta Cole

Johnetta Cole spoke on the relationship between Cuba and Africa in a powerful and electrifying manner. She pointed out the recent escalation of attacks on Cuba made by the CIA and other agencies of oppression. This is precisely because Cuba is supporting all third world struggles, in particular, those struggles in Guinea Bissau Mozambique, Chile, Puerto Rico and Angola.

Prof. Cole read a recent speech given by Castro during the anniversary of the Cuban revolution. It was a response to attacks on Castro by Kissinger saying essentially that Cuba had no business in Africa. Fidel found that so astounding, that in his speech he replied: "We are an Afro-Latino Nation. Africa's blood flows freely through our veins." The two nations, Cuba and Africa are linking historically and culturally to one another, and these links are indestructible. What is crucial about Fidel's statement is that in addition to the presence of Africans in the country — this reality is part of a daily procedure. The opposite is true about the United States where African presence is also a reality but it will be a rare thing indeed to have a Jimmi Carter admit, "Africa's blood flows freely through our veins."

Cole spoke on the reception, and perspective of African Nations; how they look upon Cuba. She quotes Aghostino Neto. "Long Live Cuban and Angolan Friendship."

What is also remarkable about Cuba is that once Capitalism left the country there was eliminated a need to divide the Cuban peoples.

Andrew Salkey — if you haven't heard this fine, fine writer read yet, I advise you to grab a chance at hearing him vocalize his artistic expression. Salkey read a poem of Guillen's which he himself called a "chunk of splendor." Indeed it was. The Poem is called "Arrival" and it was indeed beautiful, as also "The Guirrilas arrive" ... more on Salkey's own poetry later in Part II of this article.

Bob Marques compared the similarity of the Neo-Colonial position of Cuba was similar to the situation of Puerto Rico today ... It is important for those interested in solving the Puerto-Rican situation to look at how Cuba dealt successfully with US neo-colonialism.

Rally to Free the Five

From Claridad

NEW YORK — To struggle by whatever means necessary in order to attain the unconditional freedom of the five nationalist prisoners was reaffirmed by all of the speakers of the diverse organizations representing political, religious and lawyers groups in a rally held November 13th in front of the United Nations.

Addressing herself to approximately 2,000 people, Digna Sanchez, member of the Central Committee of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party and of the Political Commission of the U.S. Branch of the PSP, said that "our people have developed through an anti-imperialist struggle."

Sanchez pointed out that it was after the United Nations decided to eliminate the case of Puerto Rico from the list of colonial territories, as a result of the establishment of the "commonwealth" status of Puerto Rico, Andres Figueroa Cordero, Irvin Flores and Rafael Cancel Miranda attacked Congress in Washington.

Today, the PSP leader emphasized the progressive forces of the world that are in solidarity with our cause are much broader. Sanchez also spoke on the significance that the victories in Africa, Vietnam, and Cuba have for the Puerto Rican people and for peoples throughout the world. She pointed out that Cuba has been the most consistent in its solidarity with Puerto Rico.

She concluded in expressing the committment of the socialist to struggle in any way necessary in order to attain the liberty of the four participants in the attack at Congress and Oscar Collazo, the survivor of the attack on the Blair House in 1950.

PSP U. CONN.
FREE THE FIVE
U.S. IMPERIALISM
PUERTO RICO

Rally to Free the Five Nationalist Prisoners, Nov. 13.

The program which was characterized by its massivity and militant spirit, included the participation of Father Antonio Stevens, who read a message from the National Coordinating Committee to Free the Five Nationalists. The message pointed out the support demonstrated by a broad range of organizations for the freedom ofthe five nationalists. It was these same organizations who worked toward the mobilization.

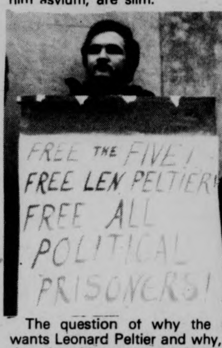
Among the speakers were Carlos Feliciano, president of the Nationalist Party of Puerto Rico, Russell Means, leader of the American Indian Movement, and Emilio Soler, one of the lawyers of the nationalists prisoners. Soler, who came specifically from Puerto Rico for this activity, explained the legal suit which is being brought around the case of the five nationalist prisoners.

The suit demands equal and humane treatment for the five, public hearings with their participation, a motion stressing the immediate freedom of Andres Figueroa Cordero, who is at this time gravely ill with cancer and a complaint which deals with the living conditions and limitations imposed on the other prisoners.

A number of other messages of solidarity were heard during the program. The large number of North Americans and third world participants in the march and rally was noted.

Repression on Pine Ridge

Leonard Peltier is a 32 year-old Lakota (Sioux) man who is wanted by the FBI for his alleged participation in a gun-battle on Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota that left two FBI agents and one Indian man dead on June 26, 1975. Peltier is seeking political asylum in Canada, where is presently held in prison, becausehe and his supporters are convinced that the US authorities simply want to stop Leonard Peltier, whether that be by putting him in a US jail or by other means. At the moment, Peltier's case is before Ron Basford, the Canadian minister of Justice. Progressive peoples throughout Canada and the US are pressuring Basford not to extradict Peltier, but the chances of Basford's recognizing the political nature of Peltier's case, and hence granting him asylum, are slim.



FREE THE FIVE!
FREE LEN PELTIER!
FREE ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS!

The question of why the FBI wants Leonard Peltier and why, on the other side, many people do not want Peltier extradicted, is at once simple and complex. The answer involves two issues. First, US government repression of the Native American movement. Secondly, it highlights Indian peoples' struggles for recognition of their sovereign and self-determining status as nations.

Leonard Peltier is a active and militant member of the American Indian Movement. He was, until he was forced to flee, working on the Pine Ridge Reservation with his people, the Oglala Lakota. Pine Ridge has been the scene of massive repression of progressive and traditional Indian people by the FBI since the liberation of Wounded Knee in 1973. Many of these people have been killed and many more have gone to prison for their committment to the struggle on Pine Ridge. The Bureau of Indian Affairs, through its puppet Tribal Government in concert with the FBI, has functioned as an illegal and alien colonial government on Pine Ridge and on all Indian territories.

When on June 26, 1975 the FBI invaded the community of Oglala on Pine Ridge, clad in battle fatigues and carrying M-16's, they were acting as a foreign army on Lakota territory. As might be expected to follow from any such intrusion, a gun battle ensued which killed Joe Stuntz, an Indian man and the two FBI agents. Later four people were indicted for responsibility for the deaths. All were Indians and they were charged with murdering the agents. No one investigated the death of Joe Stuntz and no one was charged with his murder.

Two of the four, Robert Robideau and Darrelle Butler, were aquitted in July of this year by an all-white jury in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Lacking hard evidence on which to try the two the government built a circumstantial case which included at least one witness who was offered money, 24-hour security and leniency on charges pending against him in return for his testimony.

The jury simply refused to buy the government's story. However, the government has had the benefit of this first try and will have its story tight if it brings Peltier and (if his charges are not dropped) the fourth defendant, James Eagle, to trial.

Peltier's fight for asylum becomes all the more necessary when some other facts surrounding the case become clear.

Anna Mae Aquash, a Mic-Mac woman from Nova Scotia, was also an AIM activist on Pine Ridge. In March of last year, her body was found in a culvert on a lonely road in one of the outlying districts on the reservation. The FBI maintained that Aquash died of exposure and quickly buried the body, before notifying next of kin. In an act of typical FBI brutality, they severed Aquash's hands and sent them to the Justice Department in Washington, D.C. for identification. While the FBI, who keep close tabs on all Pine Ridge activists, did not need to find out who Anna Mae was, they were for some reason attempting to cover up the nature of her death.

When a federal judge demanded a new autopsy from an independent pathologist, it was quickly discovered that Aquash died not from exposure but from a .38 caliber bullet (a caliber weapon used almost exclusively by police) in the back of the head.

If the FBI is willing to comply in assassination at least to point of covering for some persons or organizations hostile to AIM, it is clear that Leonard Peltier's life is indeed in danger should he be forced to return to the U.S.

Political assassination is not new to the FBI. Anyone who witnessed the murders of Black leaders like Fred Hampton in 1968 under the FBI's COINTELPRO operations knows the lengths to which they are willing to go to crush progressive movements.

Now, in 1976, AIM is being subjected to similar harrassment by federal-FBI programs like Operations Bicent and CHAOS.

The only "crime" of which Leonard Peltier is surely guilty is that of devoting his life to the liberation of his Indian people. The real crime is that the US government wants to take his liberty AND PERHAPS HIS life, in retribution.

eight years. She described how the Citizens Coalition was born in June, 1976, as a means of halting the racist attacks on the Schomburg Center by the New York Public Library administration. Foremost on their list of demands, she explained, is a new building to house the invaluable materials.

The recent public exposure, Ms. Johnson contended, has forced the administration to send a few painters and plasterers to do "several patch-up" jobs to cover the leaky ceiling and the falling plaster. The re-hiring of fired workers is another of the Coalition's demands. In May, 1975, Schomburg's first archivist, Laurore St. Juste, was unjustly fired, followed by the unjust firing of Keith Kern, acquisitions librarian, in May of 1976. Both staff positions, the coalition explained, were adequately funded, so financial cut-backs did not play a part in either firing. The coalition is demanding that both men be rehired. St. Juste and Kern have cases pending before the State and City Human Rights Commissions respectively.

Organizers of the event termed it a "great success" in the struggle to save the invaluable collection of books, photographs, records, manuscripts, and aritfacts of Black history. Glenderlyn Johnson noted that the large turnout indicated "the tremendous support this struggle enjoys among the population of Harlem and concern it has over the deteriorating condition of Schomburg brought on by the New York Public Library's racist attitude to the Schomburg."

A Struggling Life

This poem is about a faction of the people at Hampshire College. It is a sad poem with hope; I was sad with hope, while writing it.

These barefoot production-are quiet in the fighting

This dream was cast for

Now crude-oil and city

OLIVER LAKE —
Opens with a haunting flute, soloing, songing mystical sax, bird-like sounds, more than improvisation, a totally creative new range of sounds rich and throaty from head and heart

it was only a little while before i realized he was talkin'. you gotta tune into the language, it's like life, full range of emotions. He's talking and like, who told you, you had to talk with a comma and full stop period? Man has invented a whole new kinda punctuation! This man is playin all kinds of drama!

We can pick and choose the sounds we like. We can say, I like that sound. Now that sound — I can't get into. Here we are not told we have to get into the music, following a blind rhythm.

I slip into thinking. Why is he making these sounds? What is going through his mind to cause these sounds? and then, there is the sound of a duck quacking without it's bill. The notes then are bundled up like cold children. Then it becomes a matter of breathing and a matter of education. The music is educating me into another mode of thought pattern. It ain't European, baby. It's new all our own, with some thought to history and roots. These words (Poetry) and notes come out, tumble out unboxed.

Book Review: (Smokin' Inspiration!)

Folks, I heartily recommend that you, (and especially black women,) get a hold of this book, SASSAFRASS, by Ntozake Shange. Books by this author are extremely hard to come by, inspite of her Broadway hit, FOR COLORED GIRLS WHO HAVE CONSIDERED SUICIDE WHEN THE RAINBOW IS ENUF. I am sure, that this manuscript would come up to my expectations also. I have not read it, only peeped at it about a year before this young talent hit broadway. Ntozake, by the way, is a very warm earthy sister — as one can perceive from this short innovative novel. SASSAFRASS is intoxicating. It is a tale of a young creative sister who is living with a creative black man. What's outstanding about it is that it's written in our language and our rhythm.

What you might have to do is demand that your local bookstore stock Ntozake. Bookstore's around here are sadly deficit in Black creative talent. I intend that this article be first of a series informing the people of just what Black creative talent is available. I picked up my copy of SASSAFRASS at SPARK BOOKSTORE IN NORTHAMPTON. So you might start there. Otherwise, check out SHAMELESS HUSSY PRESS BOX 424, San Lorenzo, California 94580.

AAUP charges viewed as untimely

By LISA MELILLI
Staff Reporter

Recent charges brought against the University for "unfair practices" in the faculty unionization campaign have been viewed as a bad action on the part of the Amherst Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) by the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP).

The charges, filed by AAUP, one of the groups vying to represent faculty in collective bargaining, have been viewed by the competing group, MSP, as untimely in face of the Dec. 1 and 2 vote on whether to establish collective bargaining for faculty here and at the Boston campus.

AAUP charged the recent letters to faculty from President Robert C. Wood, Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, Amherst Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Paul L. Puryear and Boston Dean Robert J. Steamer violate state law by making "coersive" statements and misrepresentation of state law.

According to MSP President Larry S. Roberts and professor of Zoology here, the charges the AAUP filed with the state Labor Relations Commission may provoke that commission to postpone the Dec. 1 and 2 election to another date.

No one from the commission was available for comment last night.

AAUP President Joseph S. Larson and professor of zoology here said if the election is postponed because of the AAUP charges, they will drop them.

In an attempt to convince faculty to vote "no agent," according to Larson, these administrators "made statements misrepresenting state laws to influence or coerce faculty rule."

Roberts said that although the points made by the AAUP were pertinent, the charges could have been made after the election. Roberts said AAUP made the charges out of "desperation" to give the AAUP the appearance that they are an "activist organization."

"Throughout the campaign," said Roberts, "MSP has been seen as the activist group and AAUP not as activist. They're just trying to change their image right before election time."

Larson said that by waiting and not reacting immediately as the AAUP did, their message would not have been as effective.

Voices of New Africa House Concert

Sundays in Black storefront churches came alive last night as the Voices of New Africa House Choir hymned, rocked, swayed, and crooned at the Annual Fall Concert at the Fine Arts Center.

Under the direction of Dr. Horace Boyer, the choir performed in styles ranging from gospel and opera to contemporary jazz, highlighting the works of four local Black composers.

Beginning the program with Dr. Floyd Williams' "Lord Remember Me", the choir singers then performed in operatic blending of "Alleluia" by the renowned Dr. Fred Tillis. "Biblical Meditations on Piece" then introduced the jazzy sounds of composer William Dargon, who accompanied his piece on saxophone, while "Don't Ever Doubt It" from a musical composed by Semenya McCord added some soul.

The Voices of New Africa House blended in melodious harmony and featured some soloists who shook the walls of the concert hall. Walter Howard of Reconstruction sang the classic "Come Sunday" by Duke Ellington. The audience was treated to the voice of Beareather Reddy, who could give Aretha Franklin some competition, singing Billy Preston's "You Are Beautiful". The climaxing single came from soloist Pamela Benn, who produced such rich and deep tones that she was called for an encore.

The concert ended in the foot-stomping tradition of Black church music with the entire choir performing "If We Ever Needed The Lord Before."

The Choir, organized in 1972 by the famous percussionist Max Roach, is a combination of professional and nonprofessional vocalists and musicians from UMass and the five college area. They have appeared in solo concerts and with such well-known artists as Ossie Davis, Reggie Workman, Archie Shepp, Dee Dee Bridgewater, and of course, their founder, Max Roach.

The Voices of New Africa House Choir can be seen again tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center performing with the University Symphony Orchestra in Carman Moore's "Gospel Fuse." The program will feature vocalists Cissy Houston, Lillie Woodhouse, Terry Harris, and Ophelia Dargan, with Suliaman Hakim on soprano saxophone. The performance is free and open to the public.

Women a minority in transit service

By SHARON STENTIFORD
Collegian Staff

Have you ever wondered what it's like to be a woman bus driver?

According to Operations Manager Jeffrey McCormack, Student Senate Transit Service (SSTS) at UMass employs 16 women bus drivers out of a total of 106 drivers. Eighty-five per cent of the women who go through the Transit Training program and get their Class II license are hired, says McCormack.

SSTS seeks to hire more women in conformity with the standards of both UMass Undergraduate Student Senate and Federal Affirmative Action guidelines. McCormack says there simply haven't been many women with enough interest or self-confidence to apply.

SSTS employs women to work as radio operators, to drive and wash buses, supervise other drivers, work the grease crew, and do secretarial tasks.

McCormack said the safety record of women has been better than their male counterparts at SSTS, and those persons who have gone through training have better records than non-trainees.

He feels that women drivers are generally better able to accept the responsibility for the lives of 50-60 passengers at one time, and that women are "more level-headed" when emergencies arise.

UMass senior Sylvia Byam, a bus driver for the past year and a half, recalls one such situation. As she maneuvered a bus down a hill in Southwest, she realized that the brakes had failed. With no other alternative, she let the bus wind down the hill, being careful to clear pedestrians along the way. Having not said a word to the passengers during the descent, Byam doubts anyone realized what happened until they reached the bottom.

Byam notes that most passengers seem accustomed to seeing women drivers. She says "parents are the only ones who make comments about women drivers — especially fathers." She recalled one incident when a male passenger did not want to board the bus because she was a women. Byam is also optimistic about the rapport between male and female workers at SSTS. "If you try to do your job the best you can, they recognize that effort."

Pat Fielding, who has driven for SSTS for five semesters, feels "they treat women really well here." She describes SSTS as a "flexible system", and feels that among campus jobs, "it's about the best job you can have." She reports a friendly atmosphere between management and employees, adding, " hat is something that not too many places have."

Fielding says most people are accustomed to seeing women bus drivers. "There weren't many women when I first started driving. In the beginning people reacted to that — they would make comments like, 'Oh, look at the lady bus driver'."

UMass senior Sharon Frame has been a bus driver for eight months. She feels that attitudes towards her vary according to the individual and the situation. She notes that some passengers respond in positive ways, especially when she is in a good mood herself, while at other times, "they treat people as part of the machine, not as people."

The SSTS offers a bus driver training course every semester to students who have at least three semesters left at UMass.

Extension service promotes arts in Western Mass.

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

The Arts Extension Service (AES) here at UMass is not one of the University's more well-known organizations.

AES, which employs three full-time staff members, is a service that has helped to develop and promote the arts in western Massachusetts. AES works with art groups and individual artists and say they have worked with over 100 of these parties in their four years of existence.

Some of its services include seminars in art management issues, putting out publications, booking for area artists, and community development of the arts. They also have a listing of artists in the area.

The non-profit organization has posted a listing of lawyers in western Massachusetts from Hampshire, Berkshire, Hampden and Franklin counties, who are interested in helping with artists and art groups.

"As the arts continue to integrate themselves into the daily lives of more and more people," states AES, "artists and art organizations may find that they are involved in situations requiring legal expertise or assistance." Legal problems along these lines could include incorporating a new group, a group attempting to obtain non-profit status, or dealing with the rights of individual artists.

AES sent questionnaires to hundreds of lawyers to see who would be willing to assist, for a reduced fee, these individuals or groups who are unable to meet standard fees. According to Nan Levinson, Coordinator of Consulting Services for AES, "We got positive replies from about 45 lawyers, more than we expected." She does not count-out still more lawyers contacting AES. Having an interest in the arts is probably the main motiviation for an attorney to join the listing, she added.

Levinson stressed that AES is acting strictly as a referral agency, so, as AES says, " ... once the attorney and client are brought together, AES is no longer involved in the relationship."

Artists and groups needing legal assistance, related to their work, and believe they qualify for reduced rates, may call AES at 545-2013 for further information.

The next seminar that the organization will hold is slated for Saturday night, Dec. 11 at the Lord Jeffrey Inn in Amherst. Geared toward people in arts fields, it will be titled 'Legal and Financial Problems of Arts Organizations', and the program will feature two lawyers as speakers. They are Thomas Lesser of Northampton and Leonard Michaelson of Springfield, who will talk about trademarks and copyrights, among other topics.

AES holds several seminars in the spring, including its large annual Arts Festival in Northampton in May.

The other full-time staffers of the Arts Extension Service are the Coordinator of Artists' resources, Robert Lynch, and Program Assistant Shelley Sack.

Central defeats porno film

By ROSE CONWAY
Collegian Staff

A motion to give a movie guarantee to Chadbourne dormitory for the showing of the movie "The Devil and Miss Jones", was defeated last night by the Central Area Government because of the sexist nature of the film.

President Janice Perry pointed out that movie guarantees, by which the government compensates for any financial loss brought upon by a dorm by the showing of a movie, is a discretionary action of the government and is done as a favor to area dormitories. Central Area Government is not bound to give movie guarantees, she added.

Treasurer Anthony Burts said, "I have nothing against pornographic movies, but I feel that this area government should not back a film which is considered pornographic. There are other activities which the government might more justifiably put its money into."

Vice-president Andrew Topalian agreed and ,said "I think pornographic movies are sexist, and it would not be in the interests of the government to back it."

Brooks representative Robert Canon said, "The issue is not if the movie is pornographic, but sexist. I think we should debate the problems and institute programs for stopping sexism and racism here in the Central Area. The fact that we are debating this issue shows that the efforts we are making in this area are really not enough."

One of the proponents for giving the movie guarantee to Chadbourne was Steve Ross of Van Meter North, who said Chadbourne should not be used as a scapegoat. Ross also questioned what constitutes a "pornographic" movie, and asked about the council's views on racist and violent films. Burt said that no precedent has been made in dealing with movie guarantees, so Chadbourne was not being made the scapegoat on this issue.

The motion was defeated with 4 representatives voting against, three in favor, and one abstention.

Since Chadbourne dormitory has half the cost of the film in its treasury, the Recognized Student Organization (RSO) will still allow the film to be shown without a movie guarantee. However, it does not have the backing of the Central Area Government.

Representatives were asked to question their constituencies as to whether they felt the area government should send a memo to dorms informing them that the government will not be backing racist, sexist, or violent movies, and what they feel the terms of such a memo should be.

Burns gave notice to the government that he will resign from the office of Treasurer in two weeks. Nominations are now open for that position.

The treasurer is paid $20 a week and is responsible for handling the Central Area Government's accounts, transfer of RSO funds and reports to the government.

Nominations are open until Monday, December 13. Steve Ross is the only current nominee. All area residents are encouraged to apply.

The Women's Center reported that $373.44 has been spent from their budget this semester.

Activities Coordinator Wayne Burns informed the government that there will be a coffeehouse at a bottom-of-the-hill dorm, still to be determined, on Thursday, Dec. 9 from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m.

President Janice Perry said there will be a bazaar held in Field House this Sunday from 12-8 p.m. Tables can be reserved to sell crafts or baked goods by calling Laura McDonald at 6-4565 or Fitz Walker at 5-2138.

Faculty union—what happens to Senate ?

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

New systems — do they necessarily eliminate old ways of doing things? That's a major question for faculty as voting days, Dec. 1 and 2, on whether to establish a collective bargaining unit, are approaching. If faculty choose to establish such a union, what will happen to the Faculty Senate and other already established governance groups?

The faculty have been relying on the Faculty Senate and other governance units established by the Board of Trustees, such as the personnel committee and the grievance committee, to facilitate communication between faculty and administrators. Will a collective bargaining unit halt this existing communication?

For the two organizations competing to represent the faculty, the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the Faculty Senate will be a unit which can exist alongside the collective bargaining unit.

News Analysis

The Committee for Informed Faculty (CFIF) on the other hand, foresees the inception of a faculty collective bargaining unit as the end to the Faculty Senate and other already present governance structures. The CFIF is a group of faculty organized in early October to half the move toward forming a collective bargaining unit.

The CFIF's basic fear is that with a union, the relationship between faculty and administration will become like that between manager and arbitrator instead of educators working together to provide a learning experience.

According to Robert S. Bond, member of the CFIF and professor of Forestry here, the present governance system is "increasingly effective" and hopes faculty will choose to maintain the status quo.

There is a difference between the two competing organizations conception, however, of the senate and union's relationship.

For AAUP, the union will not substitute or add to these present governance systems, but merely insure that their recommendations will be negotiated with the administration.

As AAUP President Joseph S. Larson said yesterday at the Faculty Rules Committee meeting, the Faculty Senate can still make the rules concerning many of the academic issues such as requirements, appointments and reappointments, personnel committee and grievances. The collective bargaining unit will insure due process of these systems.

For the MSP, the union will complement these already existing systems. Along with the committee on programs and budget, the union will host an ancillary study on programs and budget not as a replacement to the present study, but as a complementary factor.

According to Eric Einhorm, Faculty Senate Rules Committee Chairperson and professor of Political Science here, faculty members serving on these research committees often feel they cannot spend the time required to make thorough studies and recommendations on particular issues because of time which must be devoted to teaching. The ancillary studies called for by the MSP proposal would aid faculty in this process.

MSP President Larry S. Roberts said of the AAUP proposal, "what's the use of continuing just having the governance organizations? Why even bother to have a union?"

Air Force seen open to women

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Careers in the Air Force are opening up to women, but they are still required, technically, to wear nail polish.

Victoria Bay, a sophomore cadet in the Air Force branch of the Reserved Officers Training Corp (AF-ROTC), at UMass, feels the Air Force is a place where equal opportunities for women are written into the rules.

Of the 48 possible officer career positions, three are still closed to her as a woman; navigator, pilot, and missile operator. Most of the combat-related skills remain closed to women also.

Bay says many of these decisions are social decisions, made by people outside of the Air Force.

Bay is one of 32, out of a total of 128, female AF-ROTC Cadets at UMass. Cadets, officer trainees, have the option of a two- or four-year program.

Bay, who has opted for the four-year program, has two years to "get used to it". Then she goes on to a summer at an assigned boot camp; a time of five a.m. risings, early morning jogs, and strict regimentation. "It comes down to attitude, whether you can stand up under high stress situations," she said.

After boot camp she must make a decision and possibly a commitment. If she decides to "swear in", she has agreed to serve four years after she graduates, Bay said.

During her last two years in college, she is officially a professional officer in the Air Force and receives $100-month spending money. Her books will be paid for, and scholarships are available.

Many people have joined the ROTC program lately because it means a guaranteed job after graduation, Bay said.

She must, as a Cadet, take one AF-ROTC course each semester. Bay must also wear her uniform for a one-hour lab each week, during which drills are usually practiced. Women are still issued only skirts at UMass, because the uniforms are too expensive to replace, she added.

An article in the October issue of Air Force magazine reads, "As part of the Air Force's five-year plan for increased female utilization, heretofore non-traditional jobs have opened to women, and the future holds promises for eventual (almost) total equity."

Bay stressed that women are judged by the same criteria as men for job openings, but she felt that within the ROTC program, women don't advance as quickly. She believes this may be because men, throughout their lives, are taught to be more aggressive.

"The UMass AF-ROTC program has been a sort of pioneer program for women," she said. They commissioned the first female nurse into the Air Force last week.

Ten years ago women made up only one per cent of the Air Force officers in active duty. Today that figure is just under six per cent, and the projected figure for two years from now is 8.4 per cent. Over two-thirds of these women are involved in the medical field.

Bay said she has noticed more women than men joining lately. If the Equal Rights Amendment passes on a federal level it may help to further equalize job possibilities for women, Bay added.

Most married women who are professionally involved with the Air Force have husbands who are also in the Air Force. The Force try to station the two together in this case, and they succeed about 90 per cent of the time, Bay said.

"You have to be ambitious, fairly athletic, and prove to the men in the program that you take your work seriously, to demand respect," said Vicky.

Grad Senate eyes funding process

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

In a rare moment of self-criticism, the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) discussed the Senate funding procedures and the rules the executive committee follows in providing the information on funding to the senate.

Senator George Sommers challenged the senate executive committee's role in determining the amount of information that the senate receives in the discussion of motions.

Sommers said the "power block" the four senate officers have, persuaded the senate many times to vote on measures that they did not have enough information to "knowledgably" decide upon.

"We have to face the fact that most people are not that involved with it (the decisions), and then make the system work for people who don't have the time to invest in committee work."

President Michael R. Federow said he, too, was concerned with the decision-making powers of the senate officers, but could not foresee revoking the responsibilities now granted to the senate Finance Committee to the senate without full senate authorization.

Sommers was criticized by senate members who, themselves had joined committees. One senator said the knowledge committee members gain is power.

"If the people want to join in the decision making then they must involve themselves in the committees," he said.

Federow told the senate that he had implicitly decided to select speakers with six rules in mind.

"I've followed these rules implicitly to now, and feel that you should understand what they are, and why I've followed them."

These rules include the right to respond to the position of the speaker, senators taking preference over officers, a point of information, a balance of viewpoints, whether the person has spoken previously and if the speaker is a woman or third world community member, Federow said.

Timothy R. Austin, GSS Vice-President, said the senate's past actions indicated that the members would prefer to absolve the senate meeting from the responsibility of the financial dealings.

Austin added that the senate has never "taken a position in what the criteria are for a group to get a grant from the GSS."

The discussion provided the impetus for a motion from Secretary Barbara A. Stack which "instructs" the GSS executive committee to take no further action on the $1,000 allocation to the GSEU until the senate meets to again approve the disbursement.

The funds are currently held up by the comptroller until the responsibility for the funds are determined by the court. The university believes the disbursement of the funds violate state labor laws, and so far refused to release the monies to the GSEU.

Gilmore to appear before board

SALT LAKE CITY [UPI] — Condemned killer Gary Gilmore made his demand to die clear and profane in a letter yesterday to Utah Board of Pardons members, telling them on the eve of a hearing to decide his fate: "Let's do it, you cowards."

Gilmore, who plans to appear personally before the board today and give its three members "good reason to kill me," wrote them a terse letter asking for immediate execution before a firing squad.

"I do not seek or desire your clemency," Gilmore wrote, underscoring "not" three times.

After addressing the pardons board with obscenities, Gilmore wrote: "The sentence was set. I accept it. The Utah State Supreme Court approved it. Let's do it, you cowards."

If the pardons board declines to commute or further stay his sentence, Gilmore could become the first convict in nearly a decade to be executed in the United States.

State officials predict he will die by gunfire by next Monday if the board allows the death sentence to stand and the federal courts do not intervene.

Mike Cannon, executive secretary of the board, said the only parties who had given advance notice that they would present their views at the hearing were Gilmore and two strange allies in his quest for death — Chief Deputy Utah Attorney General Robert Hansen and Utah County Attorney Noall Wootton, the man who prosecuted him.

Cannon said the convict's letter to the board was one of about 200 concerning the case, and one of only 10 per cent which called on board members to "let the ax fall."

He said the overwhelming majority of the letters asked some form of clemency.

GOP meets to uplift party image

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The nation's dwindling number of Republican governors was told yesterday that the GOP is doomed to become a permanent minority party unless it totally breaks its image of negativism.

With their number reduced to 12 by last month's elections, the governors and governors-elect held their winter conference and concentrated on the future of their party and what could be done to save it from political extinction.

Former Gov. Tom McCall of Oregon blamed the continuing demise on the party's right wing, and said the party had made "so many fatal mistakes it finds itself an endangered species at its own graveside.

"And most of those mistakes have arisen from the basic mistake that this party belongs to the American right wing, or at least that that right of center is so powerful it can dictate every major move no matter how politically suicidal."

Former Treasury Secretary John Conally said the GOP had to sell positive programs and shed the image of opposing government action to deal with the nation's problems.

Governor-elect James Thompson of Illinois, considered a future presidential hopeful, said Republicans "have to broaden the base of their party.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The winter meeting of the Republican Governors Association convened today with much talk focusing on efforts to uplift the party's image. Former governor Tom McCall of Oregon tells the GOP that it has "made so many fatal mistakes it finds itself an endangered species."

Ford, Carter return to work

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford, holding to a highly private post-election existence, met with top aides all day yesterday and his press secretary denied the chief executive has "turned into a recluse."

Ford scheduled no public appearances his first day at the Oval Office after a four-day Thanksgiving visit to secluded Camp David in Maryland and, although he invited Republican governors to an evening reception at the White House, press coverage was barred.

Since the election, Ford has spent 14 of 27 days in tightly guarded places out of town and has had almost no contact with the public or reporters. On the few occasions he has been seen, Ford has declined comment on his plans or his loss to Jimmy Carter.

Questioned about Ford's activities Monday, Press Secretary Ron Nessen said he had "a stack of red folders" on his desk and conferred with aides to continue "doing what he's done every day for the last two and a half years, which is running the country."

Without giving details, Nessen said: "There's a constant flow of paper, of decisions that have to be made. He's making them and will until noon on Jan. 20 ... There's no change whatsoever."

Jimmy Carter, returning to work after a quiet Thanksgiving weekend, met with top advisers yesterday and named three Georgia bankers to help coordinate financing of a "people's inaugural" ranging from longer museum hours to theatrical performances.

Carter's office released new details of the inaugural and its financing. The President-elect then met with his financial disclosure advisers and foreign policy advisers, including Averell Harriman.

Harriman, arriving at the Americus airport, said he had no names to suggest to Carter for secretary of state, and that the talks simply were an extension of earlier discussions that took place before Harriman visited Moscow.

Harriman said he "assumed" Carter would meet with Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev, but that any timetable would be up to the President-elect.

Carter also wrestled with the problem of how to handle disclosure of the finances of those who will be named to high-ranking jobs in his administration.

Energy policy urged

DENVER [UPI] — Environmentalist Barry Commoner told delegates to the National League of Cities convention yesterday to fight for a national energy policy or face the economic ruin of their cities and country.

Commoner's warning came only a day after President-elect Jimmy Carter, in a telephoned speech to black delegates attending the convention, promised to concentrate on "urban America," a group he said was "a victim of unfavorable economic policy."

Carter made his comments in a speech Sunday at a Banquet of the National Black Caucus of Local Elected Officials.

Commoner's warning came in a keynote address to nearly 3.000 delegates at the league's opening general session. He said policies of the Ford Administration were carrying the country toward economic disaster.

"No one needs to be told that our critics are in crisis," said Commoner, a Washington University professor. "Each year the quality of urban life becomes worse. The problems multiply, the costs escalate, bankruptcy threatens."

Commoner said despite the complexity of problems facing municipalities, nearly all of the cities' chaotic troubles stemmed from unemployment and inflation.

Commoner said the key to the unemployment and inflation problems was a new energy policy, and he urged the cities to take the lead in creating it.

Sniper fires atop motel

PORTLAND, Ore. [AP] — A sniper fired more than 30 shots into rush hour traffic from the top of a five-story motel early yesterday before giving himself up to police.

A policeman was wounded slightly in the shooting. No other injuries were reported.

The man surrendered as officers in bullet-proof vests approached his rooftop perch on a Holiday Inn, officers said. Police did not immediately identify him.

The wounded officer, Barry Cook, 29, was reported in good condition at nearby Emanual Hospital. Hospital officials said he was hit in the torso.

Police said Cook was responding to initial reports of shooting from the motel when he was hit.

Lawmen admit inability to control Combat Zone

BOSTON [AP] — Two top city law enforcement officials admitted yesterday that Boston's attempt to control adult entertainment by clustering it in one district — the Combat Zone — has failed.

Intended as a legal porn center, the Combat Zone has been overrun by violence, rampant prostitution and unbridaled racketeering, authorities say.

"The cluster zoning concept is a failure," said Asst. Dist. Atty. Timothy O'Neill. "It creates the impression we are licensing illegal activity, that anything goes."

Boston Police Commissioner Joseph M. Jordan agreed: "We must make sure the public can go down there without being harassed or assaulted. As far as that's concerned, the zoning has failed."

The two men suggested looking at other ways of zoning commercial sex, like one being tried in Detroit, as a way of cleaning up Boston's porn district.

The Combat Zone was legally defined two years ago when the city zoned all adult book stores, strip joints and x-rated movies into a two-block stretch of Washington Street near pastoral Boston Common and the downtown shopping area.

The zone was pushed into the public spotlight this month by the brutal stabbing of two Harvard football players, the death of a state trooper and allegations of police corruption in the area.

On any given night, protitutes line the streets of the zone actively soliciting customers. Some men have their wallets stolen, others get assaulted and a few never return.

The episodes have prompted officials to place more uniformed police officers on Combat Zone streets. Some prostitutes are fleeing the area in favor of safer stalking grounds, according to police intelligence reports.

"If they all go to New York City, that's fine," O'Neill said. "But we should put these sex shops in a place where they're not going to offend the eyes of people living, working and shopping near there."

State swaps road for building

HUDSON, Mass. [AP] — The state of Massachusetts is swapping a promise to build a $2 million road for a corporate plan to build a new facility.

The two-mile road here will lead to a new Digital Equipment Corp. building where 500 jobs will be created.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, Hudson town officials and officials of DEC of Maynard announced the project yesterday at a news conference.

Dukakis said Digital agreed to construct either a manufacturing or administratiive-engineering building on a 150-acre site it owns because a state connector road and local improvements will make the site readily accessible to Interstates 495 and 290.

"I think we've demonstrated that the state can work successfully with local government and private business to create economic growth and job opportunities in Massachusetts," Dukakis said.

Digital now employs 13,000 persons in Massachusetts, including 4,000 added to payrolls in the last 18 months. The company makes minicomputers.

Kenneth H. Olsen, president of Digital, had indicated at the corporation's annual meeting last October the Hudson expansion would be possible if voters defeated referenda for a graduated income tax and flat electric rates.

Both were defeated in the November election.

Olsen also said at the time that most of the firm's expansion of manufacturing space in the next two years would be outside Massachusetts.

Blue laws violated; managers prepare for court

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — Manager for two department stores cited for violating Sunday sales laws promised yesterday to battle Massachusetts' Blue Laws in federal court.

Managers of Zayre outlets in Agawam and Springfield were the objects yesterday of police complaints, charging them with violating the state's centuries-old Blue Laws by opening for business Sunday.

"We certainly will go to the Supreme Court of the state. We would then take it to federal jurisdiction to determine the constitutionality of the law if it was not resolved in the state courts," said Bernard Glazier, attorney for the two Zayre stores.

A probable cause hearing was scheduled for Wednesday in Springfield District Court. The hearing originally was set for Friday, but was moved up because police said they hoped to have the issue settled before the weekend.

A Zayre spokesman said no decision had been made on whether the Springfield and Agawam outlets would open again Sunday.

Bus flips off road

COLCHESTER, Vt. [UPI] — Sixty-one high school and junior high students and their driver watched in horror yesterday as their school bus tottered on the brink of an embankment, then tipped over on its side in a snowstorm.

At least 13 youngsters were injured, one seriously.

The bus was taking the students to school when it apparently caught a wheel in a muddy, snow covered shoulder and flipped off a paved road not far from Lake Champlain, police said.

The driver, Linda Fleming, 31, of Burlington, was shaken up but unhurt.

"We all knew the bus was going over 20 seconds before it did," Fleming said. "I believe the kids had time to brace themselves, and then we went.

"We had just enough time to say, 'we're going over.' What else can you think in that amount of time?"

Eleven youngsters were taken by ambulance to a nearby hospital, where four were admitted for back injuries and seven were treated and released.

Allen Plaza, 15, was listed in serious condition Monday with back and head injuries. Three other hospitalized students were described in "stable but fair" condition.

At least two students were brought to the emergency room by parents, but were not admitted. Others were either sent home or examined by physicians at Colcheser High School.

Train derails amid Kenya's big game area

KATHEKANI, Kenya [UPI] — An express train carrying 600 people through Kenya's lion and elephant country yesterday ran onto a flooded bridge whose rails had been swept away, crashed through it and plunged into a river.

The official Kenya News Agency reported at least 12 persons died and about 70 were injured in what railroad officials said was the worst passenger train disaster in East African history.

Witnesses said scores of people were trapped for hours in one car stuck in the mud of the rain-swollen river. They said the casualty toll from the wreck could go much higher, although workers used axes and blow torches through the night in an attempt to rescue more passengers.

A party of 17 American students, some Peace Corps volunteers and a score of delegates attending the general conference of the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization escaped injury.

The derailment occurred at 2:20 a.m. as the Mombasa-to-Nairobi express roared through a thunderstorm across the Ngaineithia River bridge near this tiny station in big-game country, 137 miles southeast of the capital.

Railway officials said the river level had risen 20 feet in the hours before the train arrived, and water swept over the tracks. The current swept away parts of the concrete support of the bridge and the rails themselves.

The weight of the engine collapsed the bridge immediately, the railway officials said, and seven cars behind it jack-knifed off the embankment and rolled into the mud and swirling water.

Professor sues CIA

ARLINGTON, Texas [AP] — A University of Texas at Arlington professor has filed a $25 million damage claim against the Central Intelligence Agency for allegedly using the name of a Massachusetts aircraft company he headed, the Dallas Times Herald says.

The Times Herald reported in Sunday editions that the professor, Dr. Lynn Bollinger, says CIA agents illegally posed as representatives of Helio Aircraft Co. in the early 1970s.

Bollinger was chief executive officer of Helio's parent firm, General Aircraft Co. from 1954 to 1971.

The claim says the firm was negotiating with Congo authorities for an aircraft sale when that country's leaders discovered CIA operatives posing as company officials.

Land seized by squatters

DURANGO, Mexico [UPI] — Land-hungry peasants took 651,300 acres of crop and grazing land from large landowners in this northern cattle-raising state yesterday — the largest property invasion in recent Mexican history.

Restless after years of unfulfilled government promises to redistribute large ranches, agrarian leaders said they were not waiting until the six-year administration of President Luis Echeverria ends tomorrow.

The peasants erected squatter camps to claim more than 100 square miles of land, in parcels that ranged in size from 93,353 acres to 8,684 acres.

Three properties owned by two U.S. citizens were taken over by the peasants, led by the Durango State Workers' and Farmers' Federation.

Rep. Bob Krueger, D-Tex., said in Mexico City that landowners and campesinos peasants, split over the land expropriation issue, have contributed to a national mood of "slightly nervous anticipation" prior to the inauguration of Jose Lopez Portillo as president.

"The country is still very divided over the actions a week ago by incumbent President Echeverria," Krueger said, referring to the expropriation by peasants of 215,000 acres in Sonora state, which borders Arizona.

In Sonora, the Independent Farmers' Front said the federal government had been unjust in distributing the expropriated lands.

Syria lays low on demands

TEL AVIV, Israel [UPI] — Syria is abiding by Israel's demand to stay out of southern Lebanon, indicating the two nations have reached an "understanding" on policing of the explosive region, military sources said yesterday.

"They are doing what we've asked," one source said. "I won't go as far as calling it an agreement. But if you want to, you can call it an understanding."

Despite the apparent resolution, Israel still fears it could be attacked from southern Lebanon by Arab and Palestinian troops and seems to be ready to keep reinforcements at the border through the winter. Military sources said extra troops will stay at the border until there is a definite relaxation of tension.

The comments came a day after Defense Minister Shimon Peres reportedly said Syria has agreed to two major Israeli demands: to keep the south clear of the Syrian-dominated Arab troops sent into Lebanon to quell the civil war, and to create an independent Lebanese force to police the buffer zone.

"The Syrians took our warnings seriously," Peres was quoted as telling the cabinet by the Tel Aviv newspaper Yedioth Ahronoth. "They are now ready to abide by our requests."

Lawmaker says Carter will be slow to aid Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — A black U.S. congressman predicted yesterday President-elect Jimmy Carter's administration will not "rush to save white South Africa in the name of white brotherhood."

Rep. Charles Diggs, D-Mich., said the ruling white-minority regime expects U.S. help in its "extremely critical circumstances," but it will find Carter "far from as accommodating" as President Ford.

"There appears to be this anticipation that when the crunch comes — and I am sure it will — the United States will rush to save white South Africa in the name of white brotherhood," Diggs said.

"This will not happen." Instead, Diggs said, hopes are rising among black leaders that Carter will support their side.

Diggs flew to Lesotho later yesterday for a meeting of the African-American Institute chaired by Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, who heads a Senate foreign relations subcommittee on African affairs.

Before leaving, Diggs visited briefly the sprawling black ghetto of Soweto outside Johannesburg, the center of antigovernment riots this summer that police say left 376 persons dead.

Diggs told newsmen at the airport he had evidence — he did not elaborate or produce it — that "hundreds more" were killed in the riots than the official reports stated.

Organizing to fight the Big Apple banks

By LIBERATION NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK [LNS] — "This is a very good idea — it should've happened a long time ago. I know it's true, I live it every day," said a middle-aged man in work clothes standing in front of the Bowery Savings Bank on a busy Friday noontime in New York City.

Before him stood a big sign: "IF THE BANKS WERE OUT OF THE PICTURE, YOUR RENT OR MORTGAGE COULD BE CUT IN HALF!" Nearby, a handful of people from a city-wide housing group called Homefront passed out leaflets November 19 explaining just how the banks profit from housing.

"The banks didn't build your house. They didn't lay the bricks or provide the material needed to build," the leaflet explained in Spanish and English. "They weren't the laborers, carpenters, or architects. Yet the banks take half of your rent 'off the top' ...

"If your rent is $150 a month, $75 of that goes to banks to pay off the loan, with interest on the money borrowed to build or buy your apartment house.

"If you own your own home, one half of your monthly mortgage payment goes to the bank to pay off the interest on the loan you took to buy your house.

"Housing must be built for the needs of people, not for the profits of banks and landlords," the Homefront leaflet concluded. "Public financing of housing under tenant control is the answer."

Many passersby stopped to read the Homefront sign, and eagerly signed a petition to the Mayor which attacks the "stranglehold of banks and landlords on the city and our lives" and demands new housing built "directly with city revenues."

Older people, whose fixed incomes are particularly vulnerable to the high cost of housing in the city, were among the most interested in Homefront's display.

"I live in a rent controlled building," a 79-year old man told an LNS reporter. "Thirty years ago it was $52 a month. Today it's $158.20 a month. How do they call that controls? And if you don't like it, there's no place to move. Either you pay or go on welfare."

When asked why Homefront chose to set up in front of the Bowery Savings Bank, one leafleter explained that "Bowery is the major mortgage underwriter in the city." He went on to say that the group is planning similar actions at different banks all over the city, in conjunction with community and local housing organizations. In this way, Homefront hopes to encourage people on the street to get involved with their community organizations on this issue.

"It's not generally understood how much the banks are part of the housing crisis," said the Homefront member. "People think that the landlord is the only problem. So this is an educational campaign. Homefront is a socialist group — we think that the housing problem will only be solved by socialism. But we know that's a long range goal. This campaign is only one step towards it."

Some people passing by the Homefront display whom LNS spoke to were demoralized. "I suppose it's true," said one man, "the banks control all the money, and we need more housing, but what are you going to do?"

"Most people really do agree that housing is a basic need," a Homefront member said later. "The problem is getting people moving."

One very old man with a thick European accent gave his opinion on the subject after signing the petition. "I came here eight years ago and this country was great. Now it is lousy. Why? Because of people with money," he said, thrusting an arm toward the Bowery bank. "People are like animals. We have to bark to get something."

[For more information about Homefront, write to them at P.O. Box 269 Peter Stuyvesant Station, New York, N.Y. 10009.]

Pressure drop

By PAUL LOGUE, JR.

Sex. It always is a hot topic. Many myths have fallen within our timespan and some recent developments deserve some notice.

In Italy, after a three and one-half year study of men and women athletes, behavior scientists have concluded that sex before an event increases the ability of the performer. (Boston Globe 11-27). Although no physical supplement is provided, the psychological effect tends to soothe the athlete entering the contest calmer and with greater concentration.

Masturbation, however, tends to have a negative effect under similar conditions, according to the study.

I therefore propose a further study which can be done by consenting adults here at UMass.

During the final exam period, the stress factor has been calculated as being equal to that of an athletic event. So, before that big test, make prior arrangements with your favorite pal and see if your score increases from your semester average. Of course if you are a crammer, putting all your studies away until the last minute, a night in the sack may not increase your performance on the test, so you get screwed twice. But for the steady studier, this method could prove to be that extra lift which you need during the crucial, two-hour examination of your mental capacity.

To carry it all one step further, providing for those who are having trouble finding an appropriate partner, I call on all University professors for help. A pre-final mating schedule should be posted with a class roster in order to match up the lone individuals. Thus everyone will be provided with an equal opportunity to get a good grade.

All results of this research will be published in the National Sex and Test magazine in its 1977 edition. So remember, for the best on the test, put Jack in the rack.

One voter who'll abstain from tomorrow's election

To the Editor:

Why I shall not vote on December 1 and 2.

This is not to offer new arguments in the verbal battle of the election campaign — it is a plain statement: I shall not vote.

For one thing, I am not convinced that unionization is the answer for the problems confronting this University; for another, I have lost all confidence in our administration.

The bargaining-away of cost-of-living increases a year ago was for me the last straw.

I have a hunch that I shall not be alone with my decision and wish there were a way to count the non-voters.

As for the rest, I shall accept the decision my younger colleagues will make at the polls with equanimity.

Playing the superstar

He came into the room. A super-stud. The star that everyone recognized as the star and all the women rushed over to give him flowers, kisses, and the men rushed over to pass a joke. And he was like a god for their minds. He controlled the group. He was prestige. He was a model for all to follow.

And she came into the room. Another super-stud. The men came and the women to admire. It was the same.

Both are super-stars: the image we all strive to be.

All our lives, so far, we've tried to be something we're not. Images of perfection, universal heroes striving for success and making it, knowing no ememies, tears, or ugliness. It's the unrealistic ideal: the superstar. And once that ideal goes away, we've finally begun to see life, we've finally begun to mature, we've finally seen the end of our childhood. Maybe some of us will still do all the things we did as superstars, but it's different. It's us, not an image.

The growing up stage provides us with heroes to try to copy. First it was Mom and Dad serving as our stars ... infallibles. That faded, then it was heroes on T.V. and the movies. Rock stars — that's what I especially remember from my childhood. The Beatles, the Rolling Stones, Four Seasons and Cousin Brucie, how me and my brother wanted to be disc jockies. Then we stopped buying records because we like to play the songs ourselves, hearing them on the radio and being able to go right to the guitar and piano to play them. The two top area jazz musicians became our superstars. They were our teachers and we tried to copy them.

Sports: it's everyone's hero-image, part of the American thing. High school football heroes, large brawny bodies and with the Barbie-doll image, cheerleader type, of course. Student government types were idols, tool. They went along with the jocks.

Playing drag racing along the beach and racing down Main Street at 2 a.m. Practical jokes and the tease. Find the underdog images, the anti-superstars. Putting them down makes you fly higher.

And friends. Must be choosy. Friends tell what type of person you are. It has to be someone you'd feel good being with and more so, one you'd feel proud to be with. Image-setters not afraid to tell someone what to do. Act cool. Had to say man after every other word or snap your fingers. Dress sloppy. Had to know how to get really loaded. The seam and foam played on your mind getting high at Seaside.

All our lives, so far, we've tried to be something we're not...

The city — New York City, or for a lot of UMies it's Boston. Crawling into the city because badness was the city, the city was where badness lie. It was good to be bad and see bad and be able to talk about it.

College — play the little game — find your little image role and play it. Become part of what everyone's talking about. Why not? — it's your last chance for the real world lurks just around the corner and you have only four years to be that superstar, or try to be it and dream about it.

Reality is what you make of it and you made it as a superstar, but suddenly you see you can't really be yourself. You really haven't all this time trying to be a superstar. Even where you live you have to act. You can't be yourself. It upsets you. You feel yourself unsettled and at the same time feel yourself becoming settled, having to become settled. You keep playing the game, but knowing, knowing it can't be for much longer. But, then on the other hand, you don't want to give it up. You still want to be that superstar. What would they say if you changed all of a sudden?

It's normal to be worried. It's normal to be scared because you know you have to suddenly come to grips with yourself, and it's hard to find that self if you've been playing superstar. You even avoid avoid places and people where you can't be a superstar. But you're tired of playing two worlds. You're growing up. And worse, you find someone who wants to civilize you. You want to run away, but can't.

And then there's the person who never got to being a superstar. Never thought they did and never got around to liking themselves very much because of it. Suddenly — not caring anymore, not trying anymore. Some even became superstars at this point, others didn't. But it just stopped being important.

And then others who keep playing superstar and try, keep trying to be one and always failing. Never feeling unsettled. These are people we'll say "never grew up" when we reach forty.

This weekend I went through the issues of my high school newspaper my senior year when I was editor. And I found something I wrote:

You know you're growing up when you stop writing your true love's name on your notebooks.

You know you're growing up when you can sit home Saturday nights.

You know you're growing up when you can have a good time without any help.

You know you're growing up when you don't have to be told what to do — and stop being told what to do.

You know you're growing up when you know yourself and like what you know.

You know you're growing up when you don't have to play superstar anymore.

And I'll add another now:

You know you're growing up when the superstar image is yourself, the way you are and nothing more. A paradox, I know. And paradoxes are hard things to reach. Don't rush it, it will just happen.

High school infiltration

By JON YOSSARIAN

In recent House Armed Services Committee hearings, the Armed services estimated that their recruitment message reaches approximately 90 per cent of the target population nine or ten times a month. In their quest to blanket the nation's recruitment "market", the services have greatly expanded their public relations network and significantly increased their role in civilian institutions, particularly education.

Because high school graduates are considered prime recruiting prospects, the nations secondary school systems have witnessed a sharp rise in military influence. Contacts from the Army alone now reach out to more than two million high school students a year; Youth magazines are saturated with recruitment ads and every high school senior in the country receives unsolicited mail from the military several times a year. It would be safe to say that teenagers receive more advertising appeals from the armed services than from any other agency in society.

Since the end of the draft the military's recruitment apparatus has grown enormously. The total numbers of active recruiters has jumped from 13,000 in FY '71 to 32,000 in FY '75, and the budget for direct advertising alone stands at 93 million dollars. Recruiting costs have soared dramatically, rising from 168 million dollars in FY '71 to 590 million dollars in FY '75.

As the House Appropriations Committee noted in its report on the 1974 defense budget, "The Army is spending more to pay its recruitment personnel than it costs to pay any one of the Army's 13 combat divisions." In relation to the total defense budget these amounts are small. But when aimed at youth and the educational system, the effect of such spending is overwhelming. Armed Forces recruiting costs this year would pay for the entire educational systems of three cities the size of Washington, D.C.

Recruiters use a variety of tricks to gain admittance and acceptance at public high schools. Military bands are one example; When the Appropriations Committee questioned the need for so many bands, and their cost of over 52 million dollars in FY '74, the Department of Defense offered miniscule cuts in FY '75 and replied that:

> Bands are an effective tool in military recruiting programs. They impart the professional image of the military to the potential recruiting programs. They impart the professional image of the military to the potential recruit through radio and television appearances, concerts, shows and performances at local schools.

Other techniques of recruiting include the use of military sports clinics which have only recently been cut back. Following up on the sports-outdoor-adventure theme, the Army has also become a major booster of the National Varsity Club. The Army lists its interests in this non-profit foundation as reaching "high school coaches, athletes, and members of organized groups on the secondary high school level with Army information." If this isn't enough to motivate the adventurous, the Army can arrange to roll a tank or helicopter up to the school for students to see, or arrange a tour of a local base.

Finally, if all these and other approaches have failed to reach high school students, recruiters are instructed in a variety of ways to wheedle lists of high school seniors out of counselors or high school officials. If they won't cooperate, recruiters will try voting lists, the police, or anybody that can name every senior in town.

One last tactic used by the recruiter that shows the extent of subversion of high school programs by military recruiters, is the Delay Entry Program (DEP). This program is designed to enlist high school seniors who still have less than 270 days left in school, or 180 days for other qualified students. One interesting incentive to this program is that enlistees are offered a promotion of one rank, before they ever enter active duty, if they will work with the recruiter to enlist at least three of their fellow students into the armed forces.

I find this method of governmental infiltration into our nations school systems appalling, and I would recommend to all Collegian readers, to study this issue further; there are many conclusions to be drawn. I would also suggest that, if you know of a young person considering the armed services as a career, that you direct them to one of the military counseling organizations in Western Massachusetts, such as the Veterans' Coalition.

Aim for your dreams

By JACOB LOVE

The astrological weather for the day may be clunky in the morning, mildly foggy around noon, and increasingly energetic towards evening.

Several planets including the Sun are now moving thru Sagittarius, the sign of The Archer. We will utilize this energy best if we are able to shoot towards a distant target.

The key to finding our target is the planet Neptune. This is the planet of dreams and compassion. Neptune is currently floating thru Sagittarius and will in fact spend about 10 more years in this sign. Being such a long term resident, Neptune pretty much influences what happens in "Sag".

So if we can find our deepest most compassionate dream — and make that our target — we'll be in harmony with the times. This weekend Neptune will be in the spotlight of consciousness. Between now and then, if we gradually peep open our dreamy eyes, we can prepare ourselves for the coming revelation.

This morning at exactly 11:32 Neptune will be visible to meditators but only briefly, to those who look, as the stellar configuration is brief and subtle. Towards tomorrow morning, the emotional Moon will form an angle of maximum harmony with Neptune, again giving us a glimpse into the meaning of The Dream.

We'll get a burst of energy early this evening as the Moon connects with Mars, the action planet. And we'll get a boost of soul-harmony towards midnite as the Moon connects creatively with the Sun. All of this harmony, by the way, is centered on that dream target in Sagittarius.

The Moon is currently flowing thru the sign of Aries, The Ram. So we'll flow best if we're energetically trying to initiate — going out and getting things done. If we do what has to be done to hit our dream-target, we'll get there.

Aart Barn experience on display at SU gallery

By CRAIG ROCHE
Below the Salt Staff

The lights are on in the Aart Barn tonight, but much of the attention of the artists who create there is diverted from the Barn to the Student Union Art Gallery. It is there that the group of undergraduate painters are exhibiting the paintings that have come out of their Aart Barn experience.

The Aart Barn is the grey wooden structure next to the Textbook Annex. It is the place the seven painters come to work on their canvasses away from the interruptions and distance distractions that come in the Fine Arts Center cubicles and at home. David Small, one of the Barn painters exhibiting this week in the Student Union Art Gallery, put it another way.

"Here we can each spread out four or five canvasses. We have our own studio, and we can interact with the other people."

The place is a mess. You must love paint as much as the painters to feel truly comfortable there. The walls, doors, and refrigerator have all served as a temporary palette.

The Fellini-like cubicles of the Fine Arts Center "often block the flow of ideas, of creativity," Small said. There someone will jump out with a finished piece that hits you all at once, where "here we all see each other's work grow and change. It is much more open to dialogue and criticism."

Proof of that came as Lorenzo Pezzatini drifted over to Small's corner and entered our discussion. The Aart Barn provides the needed atmosphere for the undergraduate painter to struggle with the challenge of becoming an artist. In the Rennaisance, groups of painters and sculptors would join together to experiment and trade ideas. Today at UMass the Aart Barn serves this same function. Pezzatini described it as "the struggle where here in the Aart Barn, art is reality and not the anti-art expression of assignments."

Other Barn artists who have contributed to the Gallery show which runs to Dec. 4 are Joni Michaelson, Denra Kittrell, Tom Cushwa, Debra Sullivan, and Johanna Fuller Ryllfullam. The Aart Barn's only member who is not contributing to the show is a cat named Hari, who was moved in to control the mice.

And behind the scenes are the faculty, like John Grillo, who are making a point to drop by the Barn to talk and teach in atmosphere that has proven its worth to the students. Stop by the Gallery this week and find out why.

Students who checked their meal books and found tickets for meals Sunday, got a surprise when they went to fill their stomachs — the dining commons weren't open.

A spokesperson for Food Services said the extra tickets for week 14 were a mistake by the printer. Students were not charged for the meals which were never served.

But, students can now get extra first servings with the extra tickets this week. So, save them for a good meal.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, November 30 — Born today, you have a paradoxical passion for mixing past and present. Nostalgic by nature, you find it very nearly impossible to approach anything new and different without definite feelings of regret. Yet you are drawn to the new and different, realizing that therein lies the future. You know the value of progress, of change; you know that without them the future cannot really unfold. But you never lose your sense of history, of continuity. You are always aware of sources, of the process of becoming that is behind any event, any situation, any set of circumstances, no matter how formed and permanent they may seem to be.

Because of the combined love of past and future that makes up your present, you are not quick to make decisions. You study every possible consequence of any action well before the consequences occur. Thus when events culminate in one result or another, you are never surprised; rather, you are able to seize any result as you would an opportunity, thus transforming much that is ill to good by having already planned for the ill contingency.

A large-hearted individual, you have within yourself tremendous reservoirs of sympathy and generosity. Quick to come to another's aid, whether or not that aid is called for, you always offer whatever resources you possess, whether material or spiritual, to the service of anyone in difficulties. All you ask in return is that the "victim" should accept what you offer and use it well. You do not like to have your resources dwindled through unwise use.

Truman Scholarship

The start of a national academic search for the first Truman Scholarship candidates has been announced by the Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation.

The Honorable John W. Snyder, chairman of the Foundation's board of trustees and former Secretary of the Treasury under President Truman, made the announcement.

"The Foundation and the Truman Scholarships were established by an Act of Congress to honor one of our nation's great Presidents. This memorial is a living and prestigious one, as it provides a concrete way for our most talented college men and women to prepare themselves for careers in government."

Fifty-three students who will be in their junior year of college next fall will be selected during this year through the foundation as the first Truman Scholars.

The foundation will award scholarships in programs leading to careers in government and provide a maximum stipend of $5000 a year for up to four years of college study. In addition to being outstanding students, with a grade point average of at least "B" (or equivalent) and being in the upper quartile of their classes, candidates will be required to demonstrate a firm commitment to public service.

One student will be selected from each state, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and considered as a single entity, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

For consideration as a Truman Scholar, a student must be nominated by his or her college's president, upon the recommendation of the Truman Scholarship Program faculty representative. Accredited institutions of higher education must submit their nominations by December 15, 1976. For further information, contact your designated Truman Scholarship faculty representative.

Havlicek to miss two games

BOSTON [UPI] — Boston Celtics captain John Havlicek, a man not accustomed to sitting out games due to injury, probably will miss the Boston Celtics' next two contests because of a swollen left knee.

Havlicek, who has missed only 33 games because of injury in his 15-year career, sat out Boston's victory over the Knicks Saturday after his right knee puffed up. He had three ounces of fluid drained Sunday and managed to shoot fouls at Monday's drill in Lexington.

Havlicek is the National Basketball Association's career leader in games played, with 1,126.

"The best I can hope for is to be ready for Friday night," Havlicek said. "It didn't puff up again (after practicing) and that's a good sign."

But team physician, Dr. Thomas A. Silva suggested Havlicek sit out both Wednesday night's game against Seattle and the Friday night contest against Chicago.

"He's doubtful for Friday too. I would have to say he will be available for Sunday night's game at Kansas City, however," said Silva.

Coach Tommy Heinsohn said Fred Saunders probably would replace Havlicek as Boston's first man off the bench.

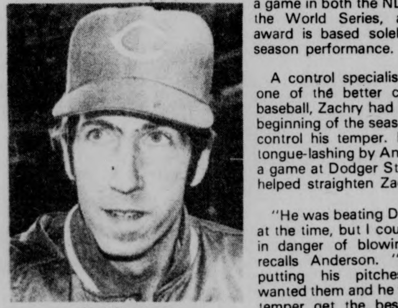
Reds' Zachary, SD's Metzger named NL co-rookie winners

NEW YORK [UPI] — Pat Zachry of the Cincinnati Reds and Butch Metzger of the San Diego Padres, two pitchers who figured prominently in their team's success last season, yesterday were named the first co-winners in the 25-year-history of the National League's Rookie of the Year Award.



Pat Zachary

In a balloting of 24 members of the baseball Writers Association of America — two from each NL city — Zachry and Metzger each received 11 votes with third baseman Hector Cruz of St. Louis getting the other two. In the rookie voting, only one man is named on the ballots and there is no point system.

The closest previous voting for top rookie honors came in 1968 when Johnny Bench edged Jerry Koosman, 10½ to 9½.

The 24-year-old Zachry, a lanky 6-foot-5 right-hander who spent six seasons in the minors before getting his chance, began the season as a relief pitcher. But, when the Reds became desperate for starting pitchers manager Spary Anderson turned to Zachry and he responded with a 14-7 record and an earned run average of 2.74 — fifth best in the league. He also won a game in both the NL playoffs and the World Series, although the award is based solely on regular season performance.

A control specialist who boasts one of the better change-ups in baseball, Zachry had trouble in the beginning of the season learning to control his temper. But, a severe tongue-lashing by Anderson during a game at Dodger Stadium in May helped straighten Zachry out.

"He was beating Don Sutton 4-1 at the time, but I could see he was in danger of blowing the lead," recalls Anderson. "He was not putting his pitches where he wanted them and he was letting his temper get the best of him. He couldn't seem to convince himself that he was actually beating Sutton.

"I decided it was time to talk to him, so I took him up the ramp leading from the dugout to the clubhouse and I chewed him out. I told him he was every inch the pitcher Don Sutton was and that if Sutton was so good, he would be leading us 4-1. He went back and beat the Dodgers, 5-3, and after that he was the best pitcher on our staff for most of the season."

Zachry is the fifth Reds' player to achieve top rookie honors. Previous Red rookie winners were Frank Robinson in 1956, Pete Rose in 1963, Tommy Helms in 1966 and Johnny Bench in 1968.

Metzger, a 24-year-old right-hander, was one of the NL's best relief pitchers in 1976, establishing a rookie record with 77 appearances. In addition to posting an 11-4 record and a 2.93 earned run average, Metzger saved 16 games and struck out 89 in 123 innings.

He also finished the most games (62) and had the league's longest winning streak (10 games) from April 20 to Aug. 8.

Because of Metzger and south-paw Randy Jones, who won 22 games and captured the NL's Cy Young award, the Padres were in contention in the NL West for nearly half the season.

Patriots not yet worrying about playoffs

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The New England Patriots are within inches of their longtime goal but refuse to talk about playoff possibilities until they cross the final yardstripe.

But the Denver Broncos, knocked out of playoff contention Sunday in New England's 38-14 win, feel certain the Patriots will reach postseason play and even get into the Super Bowl.

The Patriots are 9-3 and need one win in their last two games against New Orleans and Tampa Bay to clinch a "wild card" berth in the American Football Conference playoffs.

Yet, after their biggest win in 13 years, the Patriots were thinking only as far ahead as next week.

"Right now all we're concerned about is getting to the playoffs and we're all pulling together," said fullback Don Calhoun, who has gained 427 yards the past three games in relief of injured Sam Cunningham.

"I know people are saying we only need one more win to make the playoffs but we want to win the next two games and finish with a really great year," said quarterback Steve Grogan, declining to speculate on the playoffs.

But Denver quarterback Steve Ramsey, sacked nine times in Sunday's loss, said, "the Patriots have a good shot at going to the Super Bowl. They have by far the best running game I've seen this year."

Return specialist Rick Upchurch, bottled up by the Patriots Sunday, added that the Patriots "have plenty of stuff and use it well. If they play like they did against us, they've got a good shot to get into the Super Bowl."

Denver coach John Ralston. shocked by the way New England handled the Broncos, said the Patriots "will be an excellent representative of the AFC in the playoffs. I wish them well."

Patriots' guard Sam Adams summed up the New England outlook, saying, "I hope we get to the playoffs and I hope we're successful after we get there. That's the whole thing."

Heisman to Dorsett?

NEW YORK [UPI] — Tailback Tony Dorsett of the University of Pittsburgh, college football's all-time leading rusher, is the heavy favorite to receive the Heisman Trophy today as the outstanding player in the nation.

The 5-foot-11, 180-pound senior from Aliquippa, Pa., is expected to be a runaway winner in the balloting of more than 1,000 sports writers and sportscasters from across the nation.

The winner of the Heisman Trophy, given annually by the Downtown Athletic Club, will be announced at 11:30 a.m. EST Tuesday.

Dorsett, who finished fourth in the voting last season when Ohio State's Archie Griffin became the only player in history ever to win the Heisman Trophy twice, established 13 NCAA rushing records during his four-year career and won this year's rushing championship by averaging 177 yards per game. He gained 1,948 yards this season and scored 21 touchdowns.

Southern California's Ricky Bell, runnerup in last year's balloting, was expected to challenge Dorsett for the award, but Bell was injured at midseason and did not have as good a season as he did in his junior year. Bell won the rushing title last year but gained 675 yards less this season.

Bell did have the best single game rushing performance of the season (347 yards against Washington State), but Dorsett went over the 200-yard barrier four times and is the only player in history ever to surpass 6,000 career yards (6,082).

Ovalteam looses 'big guns' on indoor track field

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Like the building of a major skyscraper, coaches Ken O'Brien, Arnie Morse, and Gary King have assembled the major cornerstones but lack the missing accessories before the men's indoor track team can be considered a monumental masterpiece.

In almost every event, there is a super individual or one of the best in New England. "I'll tell you something about our team this year," said coach King. "We are going to surprise a lot of people. We have some big guns and come November 28th those big guns are going to open fire."

The "big guns," according to King, are Joe Martens in the 600 and the high jump, Jim Hunt and Mark Healy in the 1000, and Ken Adamson and Toney Pendleton in the 60 yard dash and long jump. The onslaught continues with Brady Mayer in the triple jump, Ron Melkonian in the shot put, Ted Power in the pole vault and the 440 relay of Martens, Richie Thompson, John Richards, and newcomer Doug Fraser.

Added to this is the strongest part of the team — the distance events. Mike Quinn, John McGrail, Frank Carroll, Louis Panaccione, Chris Farmer, Cliff Staples, John Scheer, Bob Martin, Jay Legere, the Wolfe brothers, Tom and Matt, and Bob Neil are all from the Yankee Conference winner and second in the New England's cross country team.

It's easier to say where the team is weak rather than start with the numerous strengths. In one season, the whole hurdling unit has been depleted. Considered the best unit in New England, O'Brien has to seek new recruits to replace record holder Curt Stegerwald, Pete Famulari, and Chris Nelson who transferred to a school in Germany.

"We will be experimenting with Brady Mayer and Bruce Parsons this season but we will be happy if they make tremendous progress," said O'Brien. "Brady is trying for the decathlon this spring and hasn't gone over a flight of hurdles before. But he is a great athlete and I don't think he will have any problem adapting."

Sophomore Ron Melkonian, record holder in the shotput, is one of the best throwers in New England. His best throw of 51'6 will consistently win or get second place in a meet. But unfortunately, other than Peter Saravis, Melkonian has little support.

Melkonian, Saravis, and rookie Richy Horgan, will attempt to throw the 35 pound weight toss. But O'Brien said this is a relatively new event for UMass and a lot of time, effort, and work will be needed before UMass can win any places in that event.

The strongest event for the UMass team is the 600. Quartermiler Martens, the UMass record holder with a 47.7 clocking, sets the pace for Healey, Richards, Thompson and Fraser. Martens will alternate between the high jump, 600 and anchoring the 440 relay, depending upon what the team needs the most help in.

Healy, one of the team's most versatile runners, will also alternate between the 600, 1000 and relay. Coach King expects the relay of Martens, Thompson, Richards, and Fraser to become one of the best in New England, if not the East.

Last year, the unit of Martens, Healy, Thompson, and Richards set new UMass records in the outdoor and indoor relay with times of 3:15.5 and 3:20.4, respectively.

The unit seeks to go under the 3:18 mark this season and become the number one relay in New England.

Jimmy Hunt, one of New England's premier half milers and 4th in the IC4A's with a time of 1:52 leads a group of veterans Peter Bloom, Mike Hansen and Francis O'Keefe in the 1000. This tandem of runners will serve as a nucleus for the two mile relay which King expects to become a difficult one to beat.

Veteran senior Kenny Adamson is UMass's top sprinter with a 6.3 clocking in the 60 yard dash. When Pendleton returns from a teaching internship, he will combine with him in the sprints and the long jump to give UMass excellent frontline strength.

Newcomers Peter Wineapple and freshmen Mark Dale, Jerry Herman and Billy Conant, all runners with 10.1 speed in the 100 will serve as good backup support.

Another strong event for the tracksters will be the long jump where Ken Adamson is the second best in New England with a 23'11 leap. Pendleton and John Slepetz will strive to give UMass a potential sweep in this event.

Likewise, in the high jump where Martens holds the UMass record at seven feet, the unit of Bob Fitzgerald, Ron Williams, and Brady Mayer will compete. Sophomore Fitzgerald, with a best jump of 6'8, developed into a strong jumper last year and is expected to challenge Martens for the top spot.

Besides the hurdles and high jump, Mayer, in his strongest event, will hope to improve his 45 ft. triple jump. Mayer, along with Bob Adamson, is considered an excellent triple jumper in the conference.

Powers, another UMass record holder in the pole vault, with a clear of 14'6, will look to become one of New England's best. Lack of facilities here at UMass hinder Powers but King and O'Brien feel he has the potential of breaking 15 feet.

Aiding Powers in another strong event for the ovalteam will be freshmen Tim Allen from Brattleboro, Vt. and Jeff Ritchie, with best high school jumps of 13'9.

Rounding out the team is the distance crew which needs no introduction. With a majority of the personnel coming from the cross country team, the UMass depth is astounding. Coaches Morse and O'Brien figure on Farmer, (one of New England's top five milers), Scheer, and Neil to be the top three. Meanwhile cross country superstars McGrail and Quinn, with frontrunners Carroll, Panaccionne, and Staples, will lead the three mile.

Kilmer shuns media, QB hassles

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A smouldering Bill Kilmer has declared himself "fed up with the whole situation here" and suggested he may be playing his last year as a Washington Redskin, it was reported yesterday.

Morrie Siegel of the Washington Star quoted the veteran quarterback as saying after the 24-0 Redskin victory over the Philadelphia Eagles Sunday: "Today's game may be the last I'll ever play at RFK Stadium as a Redskin.

"You can speculate all you want. It's not the team. I am just fed up with the whole situation here. I am tired of being a whipping boy."

A spokesman for the Redskins declined comment on Kilmer's statement and refused to give out his whereabouts or his phone number.

The 37-year-old quarterback made his remarks to Siegel after a Sunday locker room episode in which he flared up at two local sports writers who cover the team regularly, challenging them to a fight.

Kilmer, now in his 16th season, has been avoiding the news media in recent weeks, particularly during the time he was replaced as starting quarterback by a younger rival, Joe Theismann.

In the Redskins' last two outings, however, coach George Allen started Kilmer and the veteran has produced victories over the St. Louis Cardinals and Eagles to thrust Washington into the forefront of the battle for a Super Bowl playoff berth.

Against Philadelphia, Kilmer connected on three touchdown passes, completing 10 of 18 for 119 yards without an interception or an opposition sack.

A fiery team leader, he lost his starting job to Theismann when he sustained an arm injury in mid-season but was reinstated by Allen two games ago when the Redskins faced a "must win" situation to overhaul the Cardinals for at least a wild card playoff spot.

He was heavily booed in Washington's loss to the Dallas Cowboys on Oct. 31 and a banner at Sunday's game read "Forgive them, Billy, they know not what they boo."

Allen has had quarterback option problems almost throughout his six-year tenure at Washington.

Until Sonny Jurgensen retired under Allen's prodding before last season, Billy vs. Sonny fan arguments raged over who should start.

It's official; Jackson a Yank

Reggie Jackson performs the new hat routine, a common sight recently, after signing with the Yanks. (UPI)

NEW YORK [UPI] — Reggie Jackson, who once said "They'd name a candy bar after me if I played in New York," got his chance to prove it yesterday when the slugging outfielder signed a five-year, estimated $3 million contract with the New York Yankees.

In agreeing to terms with the Yankees, Jackson turned down larger monetary offers from the Montreal Expos and San Diego Padres for the glitter and glamor of a big city more attuned to his lifestyle.

"Other teams offered me more money than the Yankees," Jackson admitted. "But there are certain things that are more important than money. It was easy for me to become a rich man in the position I was in. Some clubs offered me several hundred thousand dollars more, even seven figures more, but George Steinbrenner outhustled everybody else.

"We conducted our business on a one-to-one relationship and he drew up the contract himself. We didn't call on any attorneys until we got down to the nuts and bolts. He was always calling me on the telephone and showing his interest. We finally hit it off when I came to New York for a closing commercial."

Jackson is the second free agent selected in the Nov. 4 re-entry draft signed by the Yankees in the last 11 days. The Yankees shelled out $2 million to sign left-handed pitcher Don Gullett.

Pitt's top ranking a score for East

Lest there had been any doubt remaining as to which college football team is number one in the nation, it was shattered into a million pieces following last Friday night's televised game.

Pittsburgh ended seasons of frustration at the hands of arch-rival Penn State defeated the Nittany Lions, 27-7, thus solidifying its stake to the national championship.

What, you say? Yes, it's true. Chauvinistic USC and Michigan fans may vehemently beg to pardon, but as far as the polls and I are concerned, it is the year of the Panther.

An Eastern school has finally asserted itself and is top dog in college football. That's not an easy task. All you need do is look back at 1968 and 1969 to see what happened to one of the best college teams never named numero uno in the country.

It is ironic that Pitt completed its undefeated regular season against the team that missed out on those two crowns. Penn State went 10-0 in those two late 1960 years, and won two Orange Bowl games to boot. But the Nittany Lions weren't given the nod by the pollsters.

In '68, Ohio State, which defeated USC and O.J. Simpson in the Rose Bowl, was named number one, while in '69, by virtue of a come-from-behind win over Notre Dame in a thrilling game, Texas grabbed the top spot. Penn State could only lash out at the voting verbally from its number two position in the polls.

Coach Joe Paterno, quarterback Chuck Burkhart, and even the governor of Pennsylvania let the sportswriters and sportscasters have a piece of their minds about their polling proclivities.

The major criticism levied at Penn State in those days was that it passed up chances to play in bowls against tougher opponents. For instance, in 1969 the Nittany Lions could have met the Longhorns in the Cotton Bowl, but instead chose the Orange Bowl and Missouri. Paterno explained that he liked the climate and vacationing in Miami better. Oh.

Anyway, those Penn State teams had talent coming out of their ears. Players like Mike Reid, John Skorupan, Lydell Mitchell, and Franco Harris all went on to make their names known in the pros, while people of the ilk of Dennis Onkotz, Steve Smear, and Bob Campbell all had darn good collegiate careers.

While the Nittany Lions were winning all those games, people thought Pitt was a thing that comes out of the middle of an olive. The Panthers weren't exactly a football powerhouse back then, as they lost many more games than they won. But in 1972, a new coach, Johnny Majors, arrived on the scene from Iowa State, and he started to build a respectable squad.

After picking up people such as Tony Dorsett, Elliott Walker, Bob Haygood, Matt Cavanaugh, Bob Jury, Randy Holloway, Al Romano, and Carson Long for his school, Majors went to work to fit the pieces together, and have his efforts paid dividends.

Last year, after a 7-4 season and a heartbreaking one-point season-ending loss to tormentor Penn State, Pitt went on to the Sun Bowl and destroyed Kansas and Nolan Cromwell.

This year, though, Pitt has been letter perfect. Beginning with a 31-10 romp over Notre Dame, the Panthers have romped over every opponent. Despite injuries to quarterbacks Haygood and Cavanaugh, (and their replacement is some story) no one, with the exception of West Virginia and Syracuse, has given them a game. Mr. Dorsett has rushed for over 6,000 career yards and broken Archie Griffin's all-time record this season, to help out former ninth-string QB Tom Yewcic after he was elevated to a starting position to fill in for his injured counterparts.

Some college football fans claim Pitt has an easy schedule. Well, maybe that's true. But do those same fans call the teams USC and Michigan play real testers? The Trojans' two big games are against UCLA and Notre Dame, while the Wolverines tune up against 11 no-names for their annual battle against Ohio State. But Purdue, one of those annual spoilers, gave them their only loss this year.

So it all really boils down to New Year's Day, 1977, when Pitt will be given its final test for its number one ranking against the "junkyard dogs", better known as the Georgia Bulldogs, in the Sugar Bowl. The once-beaten, fourth-rated team will provide the Panthers with their stiffest test by far this season.

Even though Pitt is playing the number four team in the nation, barbs have been thrown its way because it ducked an Orange Bowl invitation. But hey, it was the Panthers' decision, wasn't it?

The last time a Pitt team was ranked number one was way back in the mists of time, in 1937. It's been a long wait for the Panthers. And, believe me, they don't intend to let their chance slip away now. Pollsters, beware. Midwesterners, southwesterners, southeasterners, beware. Your treasured territory has been trampled upon. At long last, the East is number one again.

Rumors run rampant concerning Majors

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Rumors surrounding Pitt football coach Johnny Majors' departure continued yesterday with a report that former Notre Dame coach Ara Parseghian was among four men being considered for the Panther position if Majors accepts an offer to return to the University of Tennessee.

A spokesman for Parseghian in South Bend, Ind., said, however, the former Notre Dame coach was not interested in returning to college football.

Majors is in New York to accept the Lambert Trophy, emblematic of Pittsburgh's college football supremacy in the East. He was expected to remain there for Tuesday's Heisman Trophy presentation.

Majors met last weekend with Tennessee officials, who offered him the head coaching position. Vol coach Bill Battle resigned last week.

Majors said he would continue discussions with Tennessee and also would talk with Pitt officials, apparently allowing them to compete with the Vol offer.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette said Monday Parseghian had reportedly asked to be considered for the Pitt job should Majors return to Tennessee where he was an All-American.

Others mentioned, according to the newspaper, were Navy coach George Welch, Frank Burns of Rutgers and Jackie Sherrill, a former Pitt assistant and now head coach at Washington State.

Gary Gilmore's death wish to be fulfilled

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Condemned killer Gary Gilmore yesterday convinced the Utah Board of Pardons to let him die, setting the stage for his execution by firing squad within a week.

"Thank you, Mr. Latimer," the 35-year-old slayer told Board Chairman George Latimer after he announced the 2-1 decision not to commute or delay imposition of the death penalty.

"I did not request to die," said the condemned man, who sat at the end of a large table flanked by the three board members. "I simply accepted the sentence of the court. That's not a request to die."

Gilmore was convicted of first degree murder for the execution-style slaying of Bennie Bushnell, 25, Provo, Utah, during a holdup last summer. He has admitted slaying a young service station attendant the previous night.

Gilmore, who wore prison whites with handcuffs on his wrists and shackles on his ankles, appeared gaunt and nervous but spoke calmly and firmly. He had lost 20 pounds during a 11-day hunger strike.

"I'd like to make it clear I'm not a proponent of capital punishment," he said. "I don't have an opinion one way or another, but I do see the virtue and the logic of the maxim, 'An eye for an eye.'

"This is my life and my death. I seek nothing from you. I haven't earned anything and I don't deserve anything. I simply accepted the sentence that was given me. I believe the sentence was proper."

The pardons board immediately prepared papers on its decision for transmittal to Fourth District Judge J. Robert Bullock in Provo, who must set a new execution date.

Gilmore's lawyer Ronald Stanger and state authorities predicted the execution would be set for next Monday or sooner to avoid possible legal questions over a state law requiring executions within 60 days of sentencing.

The American Civil Liberties Union said it would file a request for a stay of Gilmore's execution with the high court.

Faculty casts ballots

Unionization vote begins

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

About 2000 UMass faculty and staff here and at the Boston campus will vote today and tomorrow on whether to establish a collective bargaining unit with the administration. Voting on this campus will take place in Campus Center rooms 168-177 from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. both days.

Faculty and staff will be deciding whether to have a union and if so will choose between the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and the National Education Association (NEA) as their representative agent.

Faculty at the Boston campus would be represented by a Boston branch of AAUP; faculty at the Amherst campus by an Amherst branch.

On the NEA level, faculty at Boston would be represented by the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA), and faculty at Amherst by the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP).

According to a poll taken recently by AAUP, MSP should be the winner, AAUP losing by a small margin. According to results from contacting 659 faculty members on the Amherst campus, 72.8 per cent of that number will be voting for the formation of a collective bargaining unit.

Joseph S. Larson, AAUP president and professor of forestry here said that 35 to 40 per cent of those polled will be voting for MSP, 25 to 30 per cent will be voting for AAUP, 25 to 30 per cent will be voting no agent. Larson said the vote for AAUP was larger than for no agent.

Larson said the AAUP polled people who according to the Committee for Informed Faculty, a group of faculty who have tried to halt the movement toward unionization, will be voting for no agent. Larson said the AAUP found that many of that group have shifted their support to AAUP as a choice between a lesser of two evils.

Members of MSP feared that recent charges filed by AAUP against the University for unfair campaign practices would make the state Labor Relations Commission said yesterday the elections would not be postponed.

The AAUP said in charges filed with the state Labor Relations Commission that recent letters to Finance head refutes Wood

Pay raise promise denied

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

State Secretary of Administration and Finance John R. Buckley said yesterday he did not guarantee UMass President Robert C. Wood pay raises equivalent to those negotiated for other state workers for University professional and nonprofessional employes.

In a Nov. 19 memorandum to the executive committee of the University Board of Trustees, Wood wrote that Buckley at a Nov. 8 meeting had "made clear the intention of the Commonwealth to treat all state employes equally with regard to cost of living adjustments and to extend the benefits of the settlement, if ratified by the Alliance membership, to all eligible individuals."

The Alliance is a new measure proposed in the 1977 budget to create cost of living salary adjustments for state workers.

Buckley said in a letter to John M. Sullivan, associate executive secretary of the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) that he did not make "clear" what Wood claims.

MTA is the state-wide affiliate of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, one of the groups competing to represent faculty in collective bargaining.

"I have made no guarantees and would not in that such a posture would prejudice the bargaining process," Buckley said.

"Any settlement must stand on its own merits. Moreover, salary adjustments for state employes not belonging to formal bargaining units must await a separate legislative appropriation bargained with employe representatives," Buckley said.

Dr. William H. Herbert, exec. secretary of MTA said "President Wood is guilty of a crudent form of interference in the selection of a representative."

The 1977 state budget provides $32 million for cost of living adjustments for all state employes. Terms of the Alliance settlement indicate an additional $10 million would be needed.

Buckley said the Commonwealth is presently evaluating the cost impact of several higher education contracts.

"Decisions on funding of those contracts will be made in due course, on their own merits, and in accordance with the requirements of Section 7 Chapter 150E," Buckley said.

Collins to present UMass legislation

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Representative James G. Collins (D-Amherst) will introduce two bills concerning UMass students in the state legislature today before a 5 p.m. deadline. The bills are also being sponsored by Student Government Association (SGA) co-Presidents Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus as well as Brian S. DeLima, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

One bill would allow the transfer of the deposit locations of Student Activity Tax Fund (SATF) monies from the local banks where they are now to the Student Federal Credit Union. The other bill would create a study commission to investigate the effect faculty collective bargaining would have on the possibilities of student unionization and collective bargaining.

Collins also said that he would file a statement of intent to file a bill that would transfer part of the ownership of the Campus Center complex from the UMass Building Authority to the state.

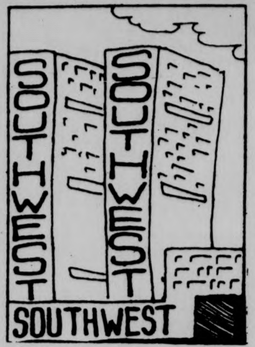
According to Martus, this issue is expected to come before the legislature "sometime this March."

Peter Graham, SGA rents and fees chairperson, said this bill would alleviate part of the "very large debt" students must assume. "Students pay debt service fees on this white elephant, the campus center," Graham said.

The decision to file the bills on collective bargaining and the SATF was made yesterday in a meeting at the State House between Collins, Martus, Cronin, DeLima, and the legislative researcher for the Student Senate, Henry Ragin.

"We decided to introduce the bill on the transfer of SATF funds to the Credit Union because we feel it will be good for the Credit Union and perhaps enable it to arrange for more HELP loans for students," said Martus. The money is presently deposited in private banks, including the Amherst Savings Bank and Worcester County National Bank. The move may also affect control of the interest on the money which is now controlled by the trustees.

"I am going to sponsor both these bills because I think they are both good ideas," said Collins, a member of the legislature's Committee on Education. He said he considered the bill concerning the SATF funds especially likely to pass the legislature. Both bills must be filed and considered in the Legislature since they require the adoption and modification of state legislation.



SW must have sex, race programs

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

A bill that would have made possible funds to dorms without antiracism or antisexism programs was defeated last night in an unusually well-attended meeting of the Southwest Assembly (SWA).

In the back of the room, some 10 to 12 non-representatives, residents and former residents of Southwest among them, joined in applause after the proposal to rescind SWA Bylaw 7 was defeated in a voice vote.

Another proposal, which would provide each dorm with 25 per cent of the total sum SWA receives each year from the Student Activity Tax Fund (SATF), has been tabled for a week to the Civil Liberties and Finance Committees to determine the bill's legality. Also under examination will be the amendment to that bill, which would allocate 10 per cent of that sum to be used by the dorms to set up antiracism and-or antisexism programs.

In other business, SWA narrowly elected as co-treasurers representatives Bonnie Ward of Washington and Mike Fox of JQA. Kathy Wood and Ron Alden were defeated after the third and fourth ballots respectively.

Ward is presently the chairwoman of the Civil Liberties Committee.

Treasurer Mark Gardner had cited time conflicts as well as personal considerations as factors in his decision to resign after this semester.

A bill sponsored by Fox and Ward that would have allocated an additional $300 to pay the salary of a co-treasurer, was defeated earlier in the evening.

Student Advocates Debbie Love, Niki Phaneuf and Louis Copponi will represent SWA before the Student Judiciary on Dec. 9, it was announced. SWA is the defendant in a suit brought by Albert Sparks, the Baroque Enterprises head who has filed two complaints against the assembly. One deals with the question of censorship and the other challenges the constitutionality of the SWA Bylaw 7.

Student Senate Representative Karen Kelly urged attendance at the Student Senate meeting tonight in which she will ask for support for SWA's stand on banning pornographic movies at the Hampden Student Center.

A proposal that would allocate $200 to fund a Christmas banquet for Pierpont residents has been tabled for consideration by the Finance and Civil Liberties Committees.

Barry Benson of Thoreau and Jay Milender of Pierpont were the sponsors of both of last night's controversial proposals. They said they were more concerned with giving each dorm funding than they were with repealing the present funding law.

"If every student contributes to the (Student Activity) Tax Fund, than he deserves the benefits, regardless of the racism and sexism programs of his dorm," Milender said.

"We want every dorm to get money," Benson continued. "We're not here to attack the bylaw."

The SWA Bylaw 7 states: No house shall receive monetary support from the Southwest Assembly unless it has an anti-racism and-or anti-sexism program. The SWA civil liberties committee is empowered to set up criteria for an ongoing program, and also rule on whether a house's program meets that criteria.

In defense of the bylaw, Michelle Frank, a former representative from Melville who now lives off-campus and works at MacKimmie's Center for Racial Understanding, recalled the initial difficulty in getting the law passed several years ago and said that to repeal the law now would mean "negating the history" of the assembly.

"The only way that Southwest can give backbone to its verbalizations about racism and sexism is through its bylaws," Frank said. "You have to back up what you say with something concrete like funding."

Student affairs office begins sex bias hearings

By RICHARD KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The first in a series of public hearings on sex discrimination in each department under the Office of Student Affairs began yesterday with a self-evaluation by the Dean of Students' Office.

The initial hearing focused on the fraternity-sorority system here.

Several women at the hearing expressed concern over sexist and abusive actions associated with certain fraternity men in the Phillips Street area. Only one student not connected with the Dean of Students' Office or the evaluation committee was present when the hearing began.

Ed Bowe, Greek Area director, emphasized that the vast majority of fraternities is not involved in sexist or abusive actions. He said he had received only one complaint about the incident, relating to only one fraternity, and that the fraternity has pledged to deal with the problem.

Furthermore, he said, such incidents "will not be tolerated in the future" by the University.

Questioned on the nature of possible University action, Bowe said it could include suspension of social privileges or the removal of the offending chapter from campus.

Bowe said there are other sex-related issues in the Greek Affairs Office. He reiterated several times his feeling of being "inadequate" to deal effectively with problems peculiar to women, due to insufficient funding and personnel.

He specified emotional and intrasorority problems, saying "I've never had to deal with them personally," and said he felt unable to offer good advice. Bowe said he would like at least a part-time woman professional in the Greek Affairs Office to deal with women's needs, as well as more funding for educational programs on racism and sexism.

Two workshops on racism and sexism were planned, Bowe said, but no volunteers willing to give up their time were found.

The Greek Affairs Office employs three peer-sex counselors, all women working in the sororities. When women asked why this program was not expanded to include the fraternities, Bowe again pleaded insufficient funds.

The Greek Office is a recent addition to the Dean of Students' Office. At the beginning of the hearing, Dean William F. Field said next semester he plans to start working actively with the Greek Affairs Office. Thus far, Field said, he had little chance to familiarize himself with that office or its problems.

These hearings are required by Title IX, a set of guidelines and criteria established by the U.S. Congress in 1972 to eliminate discrimination on the basis of sex in any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance, according to a form prepared by the deans office.

The dean's office has one female and three male professional staff members, and three female office-clerical workers.

Third World asks additional money

By A. TRENEMAN

ORCHARD HILL

Orchard Hill's Third World Center requested $400 from the Orchard Hill Area Government last night to supplement its '76-'77 budget of $2700.

A Third World Center spokesperson stated the Center's programs were only a "skeleton" of original plans because the first budget request of $3300 was not granted earlier in the semester by OHAG.

The additional money is needed to "supplement existing programs," a spokesperson for the Center said.

OHAG sent the request to its Finance Committee for review. Tim Hart's motion to bypass the Finance Committee and vote on the request was defeated.

The Third World Center has spent about $700 this semester on salaries and co-sponsoring two events.

A Third World spokesperson explained that next semester the Center is sponsoring Black History Week, one or two plays, a concert, and a Black Mother's Day program.

"The money needs to be allocated to ensure these events," he said.

The $2700 budget was a hot issue for OHAG for over a month at the beginning of the semester. Members of the Center said they feel the Third World Center "compromised" their budget while other programs did not have to.

All faculty members, chairpersons and head of departments, librarians, and University staff whose jobs relate to academics will be included in today's balloting and in the collective bargaining unit if faculty and staff vote to form one.

Universities in the country that have voted to establish a collective bargaining unit are Adelphi, Boston Univ., Emerson, Hofstra, Oakland, Rutgers, Delaware, Endicott, Fitchburg, Lowell Tech., Roger Williams, and Mass. Community.

Universities in the country that have voted not to establish a collective bargaining unit are New York Univ., Univ. of Miami, Syracuse, Michigan State, Pitt, Foodham, Oberlin, Colorado, Univ. of Vermont, and Villanova.

This is the second time faculty here will be voting on whether to form a collective bargaining unit. Three years ago, faculty here voted down the union by a three to two margin when MSP and the Amherst chapter of AAUP formed a coalition as representative agents.

After the election, the coalition broke and the two groups engaged in seperate campaigns for unionization. The idea of a collective bargaining unit to represent faculty at both campuses was conceived last winter.

Springfield rejects school

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Springfield voters rejected a downtown site for a new technical high school by a two-to-one margin yesterday.

The special referendum balloting on the school site climaxed a year-long struggle over the construction proposal and its site in the city's densely populated and industrial urban core.

Of the 28,935 voters who went to the poll, 19,093 said no to the ballot question while 9,591 were in favor. Officials counted 251 no-votes.

Seven million tons of....

The Amherst Waste Water Treatment Facility now under construction on the far side of the Boyden athletic fields is expected to be completed in April of 1978.

Peter Borowiec, assistant resident engineer, of the project, said the facility will serve the town of Amherst, all the colleges within the town's limits, and parts of Leverett, Shutesbury, Pelham, and Hadley. He added the plant would be capable of being expanded for a regional facility with a little more work.

The treatment facility, with a few modifications, could serve 76,000 people in the year 2025 when it will reach its ultimate capacity, he said.

The construction will cost $10 million with additional money needed if the plant is to be expanded according to Borowiec. This project is funded with 75 per cent federal money, 15 per cent state money, and 10 per cent town money.

The plant is designed for an average flow of 7 million tons per day with the University population contributing a large percentage.

The property originally belonged to UMass which deeded it to the town. The site of the plant is being constructed on four acres.

The contractors and builders are from Grumman Ecosystems. The engineers and architects are from the company Camp, Dresser and McKee. The companies employ a construction work force of 100 men.

Construction began on the project last January.

Jewish authors hit by critic

By SPENCER VIBBERT
Collegian Staff

Critic Irving Howe told a Smith College crowd of 200 last night "Jewish American writers have always felt they must hurry into articulateness if they are to be heard at all."

The author of best-seller, World of Our Fathers centered his speech on the literature that grew out of the immigrant experience in New York's Lower East Side, claiming its roots lay in 19th century Eastern Europe and Russia.

The 56-year-old Distinguished Professor of English at City University of New York characterized contemporary Jewish writers as sharing in sensibility "a forced yoking of opposites...street energy and high culture...always speaking in a rapid, nervous, breathless, voice."

Citing a "third language" born of Yiddish and English, that made this prose unique, Howe said, "Of such uncouth elements is the American language made and re-made."

According to Howe, Russian writers such as Tolstoy and Chekov influenced American Jewish writers as much as Hawthorne and Whitman. As for American Transcendentalism and the glorification of Nature, Howe said urban-dwelling Jews found it hard to believe "God made his home in the woods, or in a tree, or even in leaves of grass."

From the outset the editor of "Dissent" and frequent contributor to magazines such as "The New York Times Book Review, Partisan Review," and "The New York Review of Books", established rapport with the large audience, eliciting laughter throughout his speech, and warm applause at its conclusion.

Howe's most critical remarks were towards those contemporary Jewish writers who, he said, were "painfully ignorant of Jewish culture," finding them guilty of "gross sentimentalism" and "exhausting the credit of their grandfathers' imaginations."

Flu vaccine hits campus

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

He said nothing but bore the pain in silence. "Actually there was little pain to bear," said Jerry Treshinsky, "just a little sting."

Treshinsky, a Biophysics major was among the "first-day" participants of the state-sponsored immunization program held here.

Treshinsky received his Swine flu immunization in the Student Union Cape Cod Lounge yesterday afternoon. "It was quick and simple," he commented, "and everyone involved was friendly."

All brave souls wishing to obtain free inoculation will be able to roll up their sleeves today and tomorrow, from noon to 5 p.m.

A table receptionist in the Lounge will explain the two different shots available.

Persons age 50 and over are advised to obtain a bivalent vaccination designed for protection against both Swine and a Victorian flu and receive a blue consent form. Persons ages 18 to 25 will be given a white consent form to sign. This paper, as was handed to Treshinsky, stipulates that the recipient will have read the available statements about the Swine flu, the vaccine, and the special precautions.

Upon signing, the individual will be instructed to walk to the next table behind the "welcome desk". Here, as Treshinsky recalls, "Swabbies Fran West and Marianne Shea come to wipe a little cotton ball on your arm."

Next on the assembly line nurses Tricia Taupier and Anna D'addario administer the vaccine by way of a specially designed gun that reminded Treshinsky of a "Star Trek Phaser."

Another woman, Robin Moreelo, stands ready with a consoling Band-Aid.

Moving down the line, at the back of the room, Administrative Asst. Debbie Trachy amicably exchanges your form for simple instructions as to care and precautions. She will advise persons between ages 18 and 25 to return for a booster within a month.

Arthur Hyman, assistant director of the program, explained this student oriented program is one of many clinics set up across the state during the six month program. His Western Mass. district covers 101 towns.

Hyman said if the flu does break out as expected, "sometime in January" contact rate would be epidemic and possible complications could result in deaths.

Hyman disputed the single reported Swine Flu death. "That guy was walking around in 20 degree weather for 20 miles," he said.

When asked how the state gets its vaccine, Hyman replied, "It comes to us by way of a Westfield depot, from there it is circulated through 5 sub-depots, of Pittsfield, Greenfield, Northfield, Holyoke and Springfield.

Those allergic to eggs are warned not to take the vaccine and advised to consult their personal physicians.

There have been unconfirmed reports that hint to unpleasant side effects. Arthur Hyman eschews such fears. "Out of the 50,000 persons who have been innoculated in Western Mass., I know of only half a dozen who have suffered any side effects," he said.

He projected that two per cent of all persons innoculated would feel side effects such as potential fever, chills or muscle aches for a day or so.

Anyone feeling they have been unduly injured by the vaccine can sue the Federal Government. An investigation of the program would predictably be undertaken as to possibilities of undue negligence. "But," Hyman laughed, "for us to be guilty of that would demand someone unauthorized aiming the gun at someone's head."

Such a possibility seems outrageously remote with the eight member staff here at Cape Cod Lounge. Four nurses from the Western Mass Public Health department, as well as four volunteer Red Cross and student Health Service nurses, issue innoculations consistently and confidently.

Senior Lynn Forman announced immediately after her shot, "It's a nothing. It stings for a second or two."

The Swine Flu Vaccination Program has been controversial for months. Massachusetts was not among the frontrunning states implementing massive innoculation programs. In mid-October the Bay State launched programs that could reach more than five million potential recipients.

Today's open house was determined a success and many more persons are expected to partake of the clinic's services. Persons eligible for bivalent shots are advised to come early as supply is limited. Said one clinic administrator, "We are using a lot of the bivalent vaccine."

Women concerned over the vaccination due to pregnancy are informed that an advisory committee of the Public Health Service reported, "There are no data specifically to contradict vaccination with the available killed virus vaccine. Women who are pregnant should be considered as having the same balance of benefits and risks regarding influenza vaccine as the general population."

People with a slight fever are urged to delay innoculation for 48 hours.

If children are to be innoculated the administration will inform the parent or legal guardian that "little people", ages three to 17, with chronic illnesses receive a bivalent split vaccination consisting of two separate shots taken four weeks apart. Children in good health receive a split monovalent shot administered in two doses four weeks apart.

Though many have labeled the program a farce and view it as but the vestiges of presidential political actions; there are those who are grateful of the supposed derived benefits of the program. As Jerry Treshinsky told the Collegian, "Though it hurt me more than the nurse standing by me, I think of the vaccination as Ford's last shot at the Presidency, only I hope it is more successful."

'Gospel Fuse' tonight

By KATHE SANDLER

The Voices of New Africa House Workshop Choir, a unique vocal ensemble of over fifty voices from the University of Massachusetts and Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, will appear in concert tonight at the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. free of charge.

The choir will perform with the University of Massachusetts Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Ronald Steele. The work will be Gospel Fuse, a cantata for gospel singers and orchestra composed by Mr. Carman Moore, a young Black composer from New York City.

This work was commissioned by Seiji Ozawa, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and received its premiere in 1975 with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Ozawa's direction.

Artists assisting the choir and orchestra will be soprano Cissie Houston, who sang at the premiere, soprano saxophonist Suliaman Hakim, organist David Jackson, pianist Dr. Horace C. Boyer, and a vocal trio.

The Voices of New Africa House Choir was organized in 1972 by the famous percussionist Max Roach, a professor at the University, as a performance course in the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies. Accompanied by an instrumental quintet of piano, organ, drums, bass and lead guitar, the vocal ensemble performs in a wide variety of styles, including in their repertoire selections of gospel songs, blues, spirituals, jazz, soul, and slave songs such as cries, field hollers and shouts.

Since the choir's organization in 1972, they have not only appeared in solo concerts, but with such well-known artists as Max Roach, Ossie Davis, Reggie Workman, Archie Shepp, Paul Carter Harrison, Dorothy Love Coates, Dee Dee Bridgewater, the Famous Boyer Brothers and the Collective Black Artists Ensemble. One of the highlights of the career of the choir was a successful tour of several colleges throughout the United States. Among these were Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, Virginia Union at Richmond, and Bennett College in Greensboro, North Carolina.

The choir is under the direction of Dr. Horace Clarence Boyer, Assistant Professor of Music at the University. Boyer, a professional gospel singer in his own right, teaches Music Theory and Afro-American Music at the University. Having researched and published several articles on the Afro-American Vocal Tradition, particularly gospel music, Boyer brings a unique and authentic touch to the performance of this tradition of vocal music, both from an academic and professional dimension.

Carman Moore has written compositions for symphony orchestra, ballet, modern dance, mixed media, theater, and film. Among the organizations he has been commissioned to write for are the New York City Ballet, the Anna Sokolow Dance Company, and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, which premiered his composition Wildfires and Field Songs in January of 1975 under the direction of Pierre Boulez.

Mr. Moore has also composed Drum Major (in memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.), for Brass Quartet, Percussion, and Tape; Africa Tears to dramatic poem by Kofi Awoonor for Instrumental Ensemble, 3 actors, dancer, and chorus; and musical score for the play JoAnne! by Ed Bullins

By LU JUANE CROCKETT

If I smiled at you would you smile at me? If I asked you to walk beside me because I feel comforted in your presence, would you do it? If I needed fifteen minutes of your time to express my sorrow, would you be there to listen? I need you and you need me. People need each other to love, to care, to understand their needs.

As I venture to classes from day to day, I don't find too much of this anymore and it seems as though a smile, a friendly exchange of hello, has almost become obsolete amongst the Third World population here at UMass. Many times when I've attempted to speak to a new face with a cheery hello my response has been a cold look, turned away eyes, or no response at all. Everyone seems to be in their own world, with their own friends, apathetic to the rest of the Third World community.

I found out that UMass can be a very frightening place with my friends and family so far away. No one had or took the time to listen when I was troubled, comfort me when I was confused, or encourage me when I lacked confidence. As individuals, we are always longing for someone to help us realize our best selves, to understand our hidden selves, to believe in us, and demand our best. But who really takes that time anymore? Who takes the time to sense the sorrow hidden deep in tearless eyes? Who suffers in silence to ease another's pain? Who rises up in the morning thinking only what to give, instead of what should be given to them? I can't think of very many, can you?

It saddens me to see such severe criticism and exclusion amongst my own people. What is this thing they call separatism, and how did it become so deeply manifested into our community? If someone with brown skin and black features doesn't happen to measure up to what your conception of what "being black" is about, is that any reason not to speak? Just because an individual is not as outspoken, stays to themself, and is perceived as "stuck up", are those justifiable reasons to alienate them. They're still human, wanting to be loved, needed and accepted, just like you.

Do you have any idea how it feels to be over 1000 miles from your home, family, and friends? Can you imagine the lonliness and alienation one experiences when your own people won't even smile, express little, if any, kind gestures, or who give you that irritated, disgusted look when you ask directions? Why is it necessary for brothers and sisters to always cut each other down? Hey ... we're all we've got up here to survive. If we can't take the time to encourage and support each other, who will?

When you see someone who needs a helping hand, would it be so hard to reach out yours? When you pass a brother or sister who looks hurt and troubled, a smile of understanding can lift the burdens of the world off their shoulders. Expressions of love don't cost much, especially when it extends out to so many. Won't you spread yours around? There's someone out there who needs it.

Cuban significance to U.S. Third World

By BRUCE A. ROSE
Mackimmie Humanity House

As we reflect upon our present and past tribulations as Third World people in the U.S., our outlook for the future appears quite bleak. In 1976, the year of the Bicentennial, we find ourselves striving, fighting, and dying for many of the same things we were working for one hundred and two hundred years ago; determination of destiny, freedom, and human dignity. We still seek access to quality education, employment, housing, and medical care. We still find ourselves subject to ethnic and racist slurs, insensitivities, practices, and outright oppression. In the midst of all the contradictions we are urged, persuaded, and demanded to keep faith and trust in the "American system". "Someday", they tell us "things are gonna get better".

What is there to look forward to? Ford is moving out and Carter will be the new tenant on Pennsylvania Ave. But what does that mean for Third World folks here? We'll never fully know until the new circus is over in 1980.

Now even if our aspirations were reached, what would it be like? Of course one never really knows. Suppose we tried to picture in our minds what it would or could be like — a place where we would have decent jobs, solid education, and adequate housing! A place where discrimination on the basis of race or sex has been abolished. A place where the worker is not exploited.

Instead of trying to picture in our mind what it might be like, let's look at a society that has made great advances toward those directions in the last eighteen years.

I'm referring to that tiny but mighty island 90 miles off the coast of Florida; Cuba. For Third World folks in this country, Cuba has a particular significance. For us it is a model to view as an exemplary attempt at the elimination of institutional racial discrimination. Having ejected the imperialists and capitalism as a socio-economic system, Cuba also has rid itself of one of its major tools of oppression under such a system, racism. As an inevitable result of their revolutionary socialist path, racism like all other forms of social injustices has been significantly eliminated. It is true there are minor vestiges of racism in some individuals. These traces are the remnants of the old attitudes not yet completely eradicated in those few not yet totally affected by the revolution and the new consciousness it brings with it. But these vestiges pose no major threat for the future as they have no considerable base of support or enforcement. That is, institutional racism is essentially nonexistent, therefore there is no vehicle for the systematic maintenance and perpetuation of racism. Eventually these attitudes will disappear.

Keep in mind that the Cuban Revolution is very young; less than 20 years old. Yet it has accomplished what the United States of America has not done in 200 years since its revolution. Cuba has shown us all what dignity and freedom from oppression is all about for everyone. And this is one of the reasons why she has posed such a great threat to capitalist U.S.A.

Cuba's elimination of racism has paved the way for many advances for people of African descent there. Blacks in Cuba have equal access to the things in their country that we seek better access to in our country; education, housing, medical care, employment, and more. If we examine why we don't have access to these necessities of life in the U.S. as Third World people we find that the reasons relate closely to the issue of racism. For example, we have difficulty finding a job because we may not have the education for it. But we were discriminated against and could not attend many of the schools and therefore could not get the education we sought. And in continuance of this vicious cycle, we find that we've also been unable to afford adequate housing because we didn't have sufficient employment to pay for it. It becomes quite obvious that racism is not only psychologically disabling but has profound stifling effects on economic freedom and status, social mobility, and intellectual development of its victims as well.

Today these problems do not plague Cuba. Afro-Cubanos all have the true status of "citizen", both on paper and in practice. In fact, Cuba even so much as identifies itself as an "Afro-Latino" people. Fidel himself has said that the blood of Africa flows within the veins of the Cuban people.

As Third World people in the United States look at Cuba and compare and contrast it with the inequities prevalent in this country, we can't help but ask ourselves — Why. Why, with all the resources that this country has, are we not yet considered deserving of the status of HUMAN!?!?

Workshop for Black men and women

On Saturday, December 4, there will be an all-day workshop that we feel is urgent for you to attend. Many people have been talking about the "lack of communication" between the brothers and sisters on campus. It is time that we begin to collectively address this issue because these differences often hinder our struggle for liberation as a people.

The workshop is an initial attempt to bring people together by a joint effort of sisters and brothers on campus who have been working together to plan the workshop. The purpose is to deal with the problems as a community, and not on an individual level. The main topics of the workshop are:

1. Alienation of black men and black women on the UMass campus.
2. How black women and black men must develop our relationship in order to strengthen ourselves for struggle

The workshop will be held from 11:00 a.m. until 5:00 p.m. in the second floor lounge of the New Africa House.

Hilton to lock doors

BOSTON (AP) — Blaming high taxes, a shortage of parking space and increased competition, officials of the Statler Hilton here said yesterday the hotel would close before the end of the year.

Manager Thomas McNamara made the announcement to the hotel's 600 employes after receiving word from Barron Hilton, president of the Hilton hotel chain, that guest service would be phased out next month.

The announcement kills plans for massive renovations.

In a message from Beverly Hills, Calif., Hilton said the Statler's annual real estate tax bill amounts to nearly 30 per cent of the hotel's projected gross annual sales.

A hotel spokesman said occupancy has been running under 20 per cent in recent weeks. The Statler-Hilton needs an 85 per cent occupancy rate to break even, he said.

Plans to spend $60 million renovating the 1,100-room hotel had been reported in January, but hotel officials notified the city in May the plans were being postponed "indefinitely" because of trouble in arranging financing.

The renovations, which would have included tearing down the adjoining Statler Office Building and replacing it with a four-story convention center, were invisioned as a complement to the city's Park Plaza project, to be built nearby.

In his statement from Beverly Hills, Hilton held out the possibility that the Hilton Hotels Corp. might build a new convention hotel in downtown Boston but cautioned that "no specific plans" had been worked out.

"We have great confidence in the long-term future of Boston as a business center, as a major attraction for United States and international travelers, and as a major convention and meeting city," Hilton said.

★ Gilmore to die

Latimer said he and board member Thomas Harrison voted to allow the execution to go ahead because Utah's death penalty law is constitutional and "no factual issues have been presented to the board that shows any reason for changing the sentence of court."

Board member Harriet Marcus dissented, saying the execution should be delayed until after the Utah Supreme Court rules on the constitutionality of the state's death penalty statute.

Gov. Calvin Rampton who stayed the execution pending the board's hearing, said he agreed with the ruling. Under state law, the governor cannot take any further action in the case.

Most of the hearing was taken up by opponents of the death penalty who asked the board to delay the execution until after a court ruling on Utah's untested law. The Utah attorney general's office and the Utah County attorney, who prosecuted Gilmore, appeared to support Gilmore's request to die.

"I'd like them all to butt out," Gilmore said of the protesters. He objected to appearances by an ACLU lawyer, by attorneys representing two other inmates on Utah's Death Row, and by the two court-appointed lawyers who represented him at his trial and whom he fired when he decided not to appeal.

Stores want open

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (UPI) — Two branches of a local department store plan to challenge the state's "blue laws" banning certain Sunday sales in a Springfield District Court hearing.

Attorney Bernard Glazier, of Springfield, said yesterday he would attempt to "show cause" why Zayre department store should not be charged with committing more than 1,300 violations of the law last Sunday.

Glazier said the laws were not being enforced or had been declared unconstitutional in neighboring states and were forcing "Massachusetts to suffer economically."

He said he would ask a court clerk not to issue the misdemeanor complaints requested by the Agawam and Springfield police departments because there is "no local demand for enforcement of the law."

Activities hushed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — South Korea has begun a widespread campaign to supress and divert investigations into illegal Korean practices in the United States, congressional and emigre sources both said yesterday.

The sources said the campaign has three main thrusts:

To remove from the United States any Korean involved in illegal activities.

To concentrate public attention on the U.S. stakes in South Korea and raise the possibility that security may be endangered by an overzealous investigation.

To mount a public campaign to convince Americans that all the illegal acts were the work of individuals acting without the knowledge and consent of the South Korean government and President Park Chung Hee.

Light price ups

BOSTON (UPI) — Massachusetts Electric Co., the state's largest electric utility, yesterday was granted a $15.3 million rate increase by the Department of Public Utilities.

The increase will boost the average electric bill for some 720,000 Massachusetts Electric customers by about $21 a year.

News in Brief

Tax juggling

BOSTON (AP) — Mayor Kevin H. White, seeking to ease the property tax in Boston, has proposed a legislative package that dumps most of the fiscal burden on the state.

Even before he saw it, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said he doesn't "see the prospect of state or metropolitan taxes being approved in 1977 or 1978 by the legislature."

White's plan requires the state to pay for Suffolk County government, veterans benefits, and court-ordered desegregation in the public schools. The state also would have to pay the hospital costs of welfare patients now treated at City Hospital.

Under White's legislation, the state would be barred from creating any new programs at the local level unless it provided money for them.

The Cape Cod land struggle

By GERRY MORTON

On July 21st, in Mashpee, a small township on Cape Cod, nine Native American men and one male juvenile were arrested for drumming at an annual Native American cultural gathering. The event was held at the site of "Twelve Acres". Native Americans hold that the site of Twelve Acres is their land, but local authorities claim that the land belongs to the township.

That night, state, county, and local police surrounded the cultural gathering and began violent harassment with clubs and loose dogs. There was no justification for this police action. The Native American people set up a tent which had been legally sanctioned by the Mashpee town selectmen. Yet without looking into the Native American people's justification for having the tent set up, the police tore it down.

Racial tension has always existed between Native Americans and white residents of Mashpee. However, tension has increased since Native residents have initiated claims for the return of lands taken from them in the 1800's in violation of a 1790 federal act that forbids the acquiring of Indian land without the consent of Congress. The land claims present a threat to real estate owners in the Cape area, and to large business firms dependent on the tourist industry.

They made us many promises, more than I can remember.
But they never kept but one,
they promised to take our land, and they took it.
                    --Red Cloud

Big money interests on the Cape have tried to turn public opinion against the native people by implying to non-native land owners that they will lose their property and their homes to native land claims. This serves to encourage the buried racism that divides all the peoples of Mashpee and the surrounding communities.

This divide and conquer tactic hides the real issue from the people. That is, the right of Native Americans, in this case the Wamponoag people, to self-determination and the right to areas of land that are legally theirs.

Over the last twenty years, money investment on Cape Cod has developed at a rapid rate. This development has not only been at the expense of the Wampanoag peoples but to the Puerto Rican, Portugese, Cape Verde, black and white working people that live among the multi-racial population of Cape Cod. It is clear that the struggle ahead will be a difficult one because it is not in the interest of big business and real estate to recognize the land claims of the Wampanoag people. In most cases those who control the money don't even live on Cape Cod, their only interest in Cape Cod is profit.

The defendents are faced with trumped up charges ranging from disorderly conduct, a misdemeanor, to threatening the life of a police officer, a felony that can carry a sentence of up to thirty years.

The trial of the ten is to take place in the 1st Barnstable District Court, in Barnstable, Massachusetts on December 27th, 1976, at 9:00 a.m.

Support for the trial is needed. People who want more information can contact the Native American Solidarity Committee or the Western Massachusetts Native Americans at 545-0712 or 586-4237 or stop by the office of the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs in Rm. 411 S.U. Bldg.

Crimson man berates columnist

To the Editor:

*While recognizing that Mark Wilding's "Where the boys are" (*Collegian column, Nov. 24) may well have been written with a tongue in a cheek, as a Harvard graduate as well as a person I must take exception to a number of remarks printed therein.

Mr. Wilding proclaims that Harvard men "can't help being rich. They are born into it. Why are they to blame if their fathers are slum landlords, robber barons, or fat-necked oilmen?" Particularly, my personal experience refutes this assertion, I was not born rich. Rather, I grew up on a chicken farm in New Hampshire. My father now works for a construction firm. My mother works as a telephone operator. Like many of my classmates, I picked a lot of corn to help pay my way through Harvard. I also received a generous scholarship, which leads to a general refutation: statistically, over 40 per cent of each Harvard class receives some form of financial aid, and nearly 10 per cent receive full scholarships.

As for Mr. Wilding's comments on "slice(s) of life" and mingling "with the people", I might say with my tongue in my cheek that I have never even seen a pumpkin gabardine suit, let alone worn one. More seriously, Mr. Wilding's readiness to make light of the recent Combat Zone stabbing leads one to two conclusions: 1) Mr. Wilding has never been confronted by a man with a knife; from personal knowledge, it is a terrifying experience; 2) Mr. Wilding apparently feels that such episodes are funny; how many chuckles, do you suppose, would Mr. Wilding's column bring to Andy Puopolo's family?

A specific examination of further remarks, while perhaps educational for Mr. Wilding, would be too lengthy; rather, a contextual criticism serves best.

Mr. Wilding indicates that being expected to live up to something is a burden. From my experience here as a teacher and coach, I feel that many UMass students believe that anticipation of performance and expectation of achievement are unfair demands. Words like commitment, responsibility, exertion, and excellence are rarely used here. Such a negative attitude permeates this entire university, and fosters forms of institutionalized mediocrity which prevent undergrads and administrators from ever approaching their vast potentials. Such mediocrity keeps Robert Wood fearful of student input, as well as compels students to criminally and morally prey on one another.

Mr. Wilding is correct in assigning a special quality to a Harvard education. That quality is the inculcation of the work ethic. Simply, the work ethic supports notions such as the pursuit of excellence, striving as a beneficial process in itself, goal orientation and achievement. By living up to these imperatives individually, good men (like Elliot Richardson) are made. By living up to these imperatives institutionally, a great university is made. Not born.

People like Mr. Wilding do not realize that Harvard and everything it represents are the result of a tremendous amount of human effort; it did not simply fall from the Heavens. Without this realization, people like Mr. Wilding will continue to make boring jokes, maintain their personal and institutional inferiority complexes, sit back and await good fortune's fall from the skies.

To close, I would comment that one of the worst errors one can make is to take oneself too seriously, and not be able to have the last laugh, no matter how tasteless the joke. Therefore, I should like to upgrade the "good authority" Mr. Wilding quotes in his afterthought. As a young lady and I discovered one night during my freshman year, it turned Crimson, my dear Mr. Wilding, Crimson.

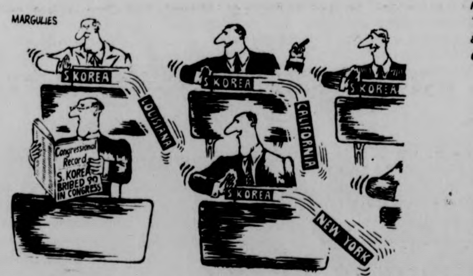
S. Korea: A cause for shame

By BILL RIORDAN



For a long time now America has felt confident about its stature in world politics and in particular as a model for Western democracies. By providing big doses of economic aid, we have become virtually a father to many foreign governments.

One of our children is South Korea. America's involvement in the Korea War and subsequent installment and support of the South Korean government represents a committment of vast degree. It also represents an opportunity to show the East what American government symbolizes. To a sad extent this has been accomplished.

So closely has South Korea followed the American model that it is now a cause for shame. Indeed, like a father spies his own faults and weaknesses in his son, we now witness the embarrassing Americanization of South Korea. For in addition to arms and technology, we also export our ideology and, unfortunately, our morality.

True to style, (the American one) South Korea is now busy peddling influence on a worldwide scale. And in a way both ironic and appropriate, their misdeeds are now being perpetrated at home in the United States. It was recently revealed that several U.S. congressmen and influential businessmen have received gifts and large sums of cash from South Korea in return for promotion of South Korean interests. Lockheed must be proud.

One million dollars was donated to Harvard University for an Asian Studies program. What treatment South Korea will be given in classrooms at Harvard has not yet been established, but if more money is forthcoming it had better be good. True, money speaks, but to see it speaking in a classroom seems especially revolting.

So America's baby turns out to be Rosemary's. We have a C.I.A., they have a K.C.I.A. (30 agents in the U.S.) We have a White House, they have a Blue House. President Park's brand of political repression makes Indira Ghandi look soft. But it doesn't have to continue.

America set up that horrible government and it still has the ability to correct its mistake. Jimmy Carter has occasionally lashed out at the repressive Chilean junta that overthrew the democratic Allende government. Last week, the day after Carter again attacked Chile, 280 political prisoners were released from Chilean jails. It's being hailed as Carter's first diplomatic coup. While the release of 280 of 10,000 political prisoners is only a token gesture, let's hope it is symbolic.

Perhaps America can regain some of the respect it has lost throughout the world in recent years by ending its involvement in the internal affairs of brutal dictatorships. Let's hope it can be so, because as long as we cooperate with murderous regimes, we must endure guilt by association.

Dukakis campaign beginning

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has quietly begun his 1978 re-election campaign, hiring an $18,000 per year political organizer who started work this week.

George A. Bachrach, 25, who went on the political payroll Monday, said in an interview, "I see the governor running against himself, Michael Dukakis" in the election two years away.

Bachrach will begin rebuilding Dukakis' dormant field organization.

The governor, he said, must show voters next year he is a capable chief executive.

"The economy is the key issue," said Bachrach, who will be paid out of political funds Dukakis does not have. He said the governor is "determined to hold the line on taxes."

Dukakis defeated former Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent in 1974, in part by pledging not to raise taxes. In 1975, state taxes increased by nearly $500 million.

Dukakis has not officially announced his candidacy for reelection. But he has said, when questioned, that he will run.

Rationing racing to reality

BOSTON (AP) — Oil and gas rationing, still a year away, will be inevitable if Americans continued their wasteful habits, the nation's energy research chief warned yesterday.

Robert C. Seamans Jr., administrator of the U.S. Energy Research and Development Administration, said the federal government is updating rationing plans in case another embargo is called by the oil exporting nations.

Seamans, speaking at a New England Regional Forum sponsored by his agency, said an embargo was the only development likely to lead to rationing as soon as 1977.

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Vehicles are at a standstill yesterday morning along the Kensington Expressway after a "lake effect" snowstorm dumped up to 14 inches of snow in the Buffalo-area. (UPI)

Archie cries as he parts with his toys

NEW YORK (UPI) — Archie sat beside his wooden sleds yesterday and with bloodshot eyes looked at his 60-inch, battery-powered Packard. A tear made its way along the creases of his cheek and stopped at his white beard.

In an adjoining room, the auctioneer's voice could be heard. "Lot five. Three Aunt Jemima dolls. Estimated value $50 to $75."

It was opening day of one of the largest antique toy sales ever to be held by the prestigious Southeby Parke Bernet gallery, and 66-year-old Archibald Stiles was watching some of his most cherished possessions go to the highest bidders.

Rosalyn Linda Herman of Queens, bought the gem of the first day's offerings, a Jumeau doll made in France in the 1880's.

"She's a beauty; I love her," Herman said hugging the brown-eyed blonde doll which still is wearing her original silk dress. "It's a birthday and Christmas present for me," said the collector-dealer.

Some 200 antique dolls, doll houses, doll furniture, miniatures and carriages were being auctioned yesterday at Sotheby's gallery. More than 400 antique toy pedal cars and Army fighter planes, tricycles, tractors, banks, rocking horses and Zeppelin's are scheduled to go on the block today.

All are part of some 6,000 pieces collected by Stiles and his wife, Emma, over the past 23 years.

"We just couldn't take care of them anymore," said Stiles, explaining that many of the toys were kept in unheated sheds on their three-acre lot in Meyersville, N.J.

A touch of class

We were talking about people the other night, a few friends and myself, and we were discussing class, that intangible aura that pervades too few people in this world.

It's not hard to tell class, either you've got it or you don't. President Ford has it, so does Jimmy Carter, but Henry Kissinger, "fatso," as he was once called by his school classmates, is obese in his manner. The man is, what Jimmy Breslin would term, a "mutt," a no-class bum, a prima-donna without talent. But it takes all kinds to make this world; witness the men in government today.

Tip O'Neill, the next Speaker of the House, has class; Carl Albert, the retiring Speaker, does not. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, the new junior Senator-elect from New York, is Harvard-educated, a professor at that school, but he's a stiff, no class, a bum. The man he beat, Senator James Buckley, reeks of class, but that doesn't make him a winner.

The late columnist George Frazier knew class, in fact, he was class. He was the epitomy of grace, just as those who felt the wrath of his stinging pen were not. Danny Thomas has no class, as George would often write, Thomas was "dizz-gusting," and he was right. After all, any guy that hucks coffee on television for a living deserves a rap. But, ah, Joe DiMaggio, that fabled Yankee Clipper, hucks coffee and savings banks, but class will tell. He makes modern day ballplayers — and Thomas-like palookas selling their wares on televison — resemble street urchins still looking for a pocket to fleece.

Governor Dukakis is far from being the classiest guy on the block, but his predecessor, former Governor Francis Sargent, is; the aging Brahmin exudes class, far and above his humorless successor. But then that's what makes class so discernible, those that don't have it are painfully noticeable, even on their good days.

Carol Burnett, who fought and scraped her way to television stardom, still an image of the - girl - next - door, always a smile on her face, always friendly, always concerned about others. Her contemporaries, of which there are many, are few in character. None, including Lucille Ball, come anywhere near the great lady in class.

Ol Blue Eyes, Frank Sinatra, has a mean streak in him a mile wide, but, still, the guy's got it. Of all the venom he's spewed forth, at the press, at the fans, at everybody, he's always there in the clutch. Always helping out his friends. It's rumored that he told George Raft, the aging movie-gangster, that he could have a million dollars, interest free, and that he could repay Frank if and when he had the dough, during one of Raft's financially troublesome days. If he couldn't pay him back, ah, what the hell, don't worry. Yeah, he's classy, but Dean Martin, that no-talent who hums his songs rather than sings, is an unreliable lout. But Frankie likes him, and that takes class.

Billie Jean King, that non-pareil tennis great has class, Chrissie Evert, yeech, doesn't. Bobby Orr, God's gift to hockey, is a decent fellow, but he's still lacking in class. His multi-million dollar contract may have made him rich, but his personage is a heavy detractor. The kid, and he's still a kid, despite his 28 years, handles a puck better than people. If he could stay on the ice all his life, someone might find a kind word to say about him.

You could go on and on about those with — and without — class. Of those who have it, it is a blessing. Of those who don't, they make up the majority on this world. Some say it's breeding, some say hereditary, others just shrug and say it's simply having more good days than bad. At UMass, there are people with more bad days than good, and that's — "dizz-gusting."

In praise of D.C. ladies

They are the unheralded few who do so much for so few and ask so little. They dish and spoon and ladle and greet and smile. They are the Dining Commons ladies and the time has come to praise them.

These alimentary emmisaries serve up one gastric monstrosity after another, unwitting accomplices to crimes against humanity. But always with a smile and a nice remark in passing. The ticket lady is at the head of the tunnel of horror, counting the stomachs to be led to slaughter. "Hello, how are you today? How was your week-end?" Engrossed in conversation you are inside before you have time to glance at the day's menu. Too late to turn back.

"What will it be today — Lamb riblets or sea food Nuremberg?" Death by firing squad or hanging? What does it matter? And the lamb riblet plops down on the reluctant plate, its meaty section attached to the mesentary of a greasy rim of fat.

"Sauce?" inquires the angelic face behind the counter. "Yes, I mean no." Alas, too late, and the pasty, grey porridge drowns the bewildered lamb riblet. It puts up a momentary struggle for air and then passes from this vale of tears.

On to the Vegetable lady whose countenance has always reminded you of the Madonna. "What's your pleasure?" Two vegetables diverged in a yellow wood, and sorry I could not eat them both, waxed beans and squash, long I stood. And looked at one as hard as I could, then took the other just as fair. Reminded of Frost you take the ice-cold squash and kneel for a moment praying to the vegetable Madonna.

The dessert lady beckons and we find ourselves confronted with another choice. Are these sheep testicles or stewed prunes? The three-day old walnut cake sits obediently like a favorite pet rock. Roll over, play dead. Your stomach growls in protest.

Our D.C. travels take us finally to the salad bar where the cherubic salad lady has just deposited a tray of green and yellow tomatoes. She walks back to the kitchen oblivious to the many looks of astonishment and muted disgust. A Tasmanian wart-hog would turn its back on the crinkly brown lettuce. Shortly the Salad lady returns and prys off a salad dressing lid with a piece of leftover bacon.

Whatever the Dining Commons ladies are paid it isn't enough. They are tireless, congenial, patient, and possess the sense of humour necessitated by their task as food diplomats. Imagine if you will grumpy Dining Commons ladies. The meal would be unbearable. Their show of pleasantry and good humour carries one through half the meal and then it's time for seconds and rather than feel guilty after their show of faith in the food, one gulps down the seconds, no matter how execrable.

The Dining Commons ladies' popularity stems from their compassion. They sympathize with student complaints. For weeks now myself and a bosom buddy have waged a battle for toasted bagels. We have only met with rebuke from a stalwart and uncaring management while the D.C. ladies support us and frequently ask how the battle is going. Their concern in this world of bagelian indifference has made bearable many a breakfast.

So if you should ever chance upon a downcast D.C. lady ask after her health or family and give her a wink. One thing I can promise. Your gesture will replay itself many times over.

Pursuit of inner peace

A most precious birth — you entered life with an innocence and gentleness that guided and enhanced the love forever engrained in your being. We were overjoyed to receive such a gift of beauty and to care for you gave the most meaning to our lives. Again the world was endowed with another pure human spirit to mold and cultivate to its fullest potential.

As a child, you received life gratefully, its little joys and little tears. You were so impressionable; you saw all so simply and so clearly. Your childhood curiosity sparked your quest for knowledge and discovery. Nature held so many secrets that you yearned to uncover. Sincerity and honesty prevailed within your personality always accompanied by smiles and laughter that touched the hearts of all you met.

Inevitably, you longed for the world of adults, and you anxiously set out alone on that trail. Unfortunately, we had no way to slow you down. This world moves so fast that you felt you had to keep up and hurry off to that excitement of independence. We sadly watched you go, fearing in our hearts that perhaps you weren't as strong as you thought.

At first, you loved your new freedom and independence. It was all so strange and exciting, so much to do, so many different people and experiences to encounter. But soon along your road to knowledge and truth you were faced with that inescapable part of life called "suffering". People you cared for began to take more than you had to give, draining your strength. Others would scorn at your good qualities and laugh at your weaknesses. You saw friends fall away from you, hurt and destroyed. Jolted from your peacefulness, you were left scared, frightened and so very hurt yourself. It didn't make sense to you; you couldn't understand why — you faced chaos in a life you had trusted so deeply.

Your world took on darker colors and your own sunshine began to fade. You feared everyone and everything. Now, seeing only the cruelty and coldness, a brutal hardness invaded your once soft and gentle picture of life.

It is here we lost you, as a unique and genuine personality disguised itself in a mask of ugly defenses. You hid behind your own iron curtain, constantly preoccupied with trying to bury your vulnerabilities and deny your insecurities. You were no longer able to seek the truth, you became too blind and too deaf.

Doubting your worth continuously, rationalizing it even more so, you took on many forms. In your restlessness and anxiety, you became one of those who chose to dominate and control, to suck in all you thought could give you strength. You escaped inside books and academics, pretending to be of superior intellect, respected in a world above the other — imprisoned in an image, devaluting the worth of your knowledge. You were among those who withdrew into unpenetrable shells, losing even more touch with yourself and others.

New Times/cpf

Searching a less lonely stronghold, you sought asylum in labeled groups of ethnic, racial, religious and political affiliations. Here you screamed for justice and equality from your oppressors but you waged an unjust and useless war of hatred and hostility. You fought not for true freedom but to release your personal frustrations with an insensitive vengeance. You, oppressively, smothered your own individuality while obstructing the sincere efforts of others in that futile search of freedom. Exhausted and defeated, you staggered away from this hell, retreating to the ecess pleasures of the "highs" of joints and the drunken stupors of alcohol.

You joined those so split and torn, so divided, so categorized, longing for understanding but becoming even more ironically insecure in such a dangerously narrow and limiting world.

Your face has turned cold and harsh these days, the tears of your soul cry to be set free again, your spirit is limping, your wounds are getting deeper and a fearful darkness creeps upon more of your being each day. You reflect on your life, realizing that the road you've been traveling has no destiny. It has been an endless battle between fear and fulfillment. You've been aimlessly searching for the peace you once had as a child but each effort takes you further away from that precious part of yourself.

You are afraid now because you know that you can't run much longer; you must face your faults and confront your fears. You approach that difficult path and begin to strive to overcome those insecurities and vulnerabilities. In the distance, you see us awaiting you as you feel more inspiration to suffer through this ultimate hardship. You are regaining your strength and an inner peace settles upon your soul, calming that painful restlessness.

We warmly embrace you as you feel in your heart that true love for your own being, a beauty of life within you as well as around you. You gladly join us now in our delicate task of preserving the threatened spirit of peace and love in all humanity.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, December 1 — Born today, you are one of those naturally shy persons who has spent a considerable amount of time learning how to conceal his feelings. Thus many -- indeed, almost all but those who know you best -- think of you as a cold, perhaps even a calculating person when, in truth, you are deeply emotional and in the privacy of your own heart and mind are inclined to react quickly and fully to everything around you.

Unadulterated joy, pure sorrow, burning anger, heart-felt contrition: all these are familiar to you, though others would hardly guess it. You are thought of as one who likes but does not love, one who dislikes but does not hate -- which may or may not be detrimental to your life in general.

A reasonable person, you do not hold grudges or try to persuade either yourself or others along lines you or they are not prepared to go. You believe in expansion of personal horizons; you believe in the gradual enlarging of duties and responsibilities but you believe also that nothing should be done quickly, without thought and, most of all, without options. Force is alien to your way of thinking -- and force, as far as you are concerned, includes verbal persuasion that is insistent to the point of wearing another down rather than actually changing his mind.

You do not possess a shred of false pride. When in need of help you will ask for it -- and if you do not ask it is because of timidity, not because you are determined to succeed on your own.

Thursday, December 2

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Take care not to go to emotional extremes as you go about the business of picking up the pieces from yesterday's loss. Be calm.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A friendly attitude toward those who would come to your rescue increases your chances of recovery. Losses are few.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Bluntness of speech may cause you to lose a friend today. Nevertheless, you should end the day happily -- and find yourself materially richer.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Make every effort to hide any contemptuous feelings you may harbor. Rediscover your ability to keep a secret.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Unless you are able to appear casual in the face of unexpected trouble, you may be in for loss. Be tolerant and understanding of the young.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Make precisely the impression you wish to make -- by proving your ability to succeed on your own. Move swiftly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Don't attempt to flatter your way to the top. Gain the attention of those in authority by the quality of your work, not the quantity of your compliments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Present advantages on the employment scene are yours to keep -- if you are wise enough to gain the support of coworkers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Use the direct and honest approach as you go about the business of gaining support for a new and important project. Work piles up at evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — If you fail to defer to another's extensive experience, you may find yourself in new difficulties by day's end. Listen carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A departing friend may take so much of your attention that you fail to notice the arrival of an important stranger. Look up!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Keep in the background today if you expect to escape unnoticed by those who would do you harm. A low profile is a safe profile.

Selection advice on crafts aired

Professional advice on how to select quality in hand crafted items will be provided viewers in the MASS. CRAFT segment of the "Open Door" television series to be aired Dec. 18 at 6 p.m. on Channel 57.

During the show, MASS. CRAFT director Lynn Nakkim interviews Robert Woo, Jacqueline deBoer and Martin Klein, all local master craftspeople, as well as Cathy Abrams, sales manager at Leverett Craftsmen and Artists, Inc. Viewers will hear these experts' opinions about design, function, raw materials, and other aspects of quality in selecting craft items. Each craftsperson explains important features to look for in his-her particular craft.

Robert Woo is a master potter with a studio in Shutesbury. Jackie deBoer is a silversmith working from a Hatfield studio. Marty Klein's blacksmith shop is part of the Leverett Craftsmen and Artist, Inc., facilities.

Besides pottery and smithery, points of weaving, leathercraft, and stained glass will be shown on the screen.

MASS. CRAFT is a state-funded service project intended to aid in the economic development of the Western Massachusetts craft industry. Through the television program, MASS. CRAFT hopes to make residents of the region aware of the outstanding quality of crafts produced in abundance in this area.

Bell a distant second

Heisman belongs to Dorsett

NEW YORK (UPI) – Tony Dorsett of Pittsburgh, the 1976 rushing champion and the only player ever to gain more than 6,000 yards in his career, yesterday was named winner of the Heisman Trophy as the outstanding college football player in the nation.

Ricky Bell of Southern California, runnerup in last year's voting, finished second again and Rob Lytle of Michigan was third.

As expected, the balloting wasn't close as Dorsett won by 1,011 points. The 5-foot-11, 180-pound senior from Aliquippa, Pa., collected 701 first place votes and 2,357 points from the 863 sports writers and sportscasters from across the nation who participated in the voting.

Bell had 73 first place votes and 1,346 points while Lytle was named first on 35 ballots and had 413 points.

Dorsett is the first Pitt player ever to win the Heisman Trophy and only the second eastern player to be so honored in the last 13 years. John Cappelletti of Penn State, now a running back with the Los Angeles Rams, won the Heisman Trophy in 1973.

After finishing a "shocking" fourth last year when Ohio State's Archie Griffin became the first player ever to win the Heisman twice, Dorsett set his sights on winning the award this season. He began on a strong note by rushing for over 200 yards in a game four times during the season as Pittsburgh went unbeaten and earned the No. 1 ranking in the nation.

During his four-year career, Dorsett established 13 NCAA rushing records, including most career yardage (6,082). He gained 1,948 yards this season for an average of 177 yards per game and scored 22 touchdowns.

Bell, the nation's leading rusher a year ago, was expected to challenge Dorsett for the Heisman but the 6-2, 225-pound senior tailback was injured for part of the year and gained 675 yards less than last season.

Bell did have the nation's best single game rushing performance this season (347 yards against Washington State), but he was hobbled by injuries over the last six games of the year and surpassed the 100-yard barrier only once during that span.

Dorsett was the top vote getter in every section of the country, with Bell second in all five sections.

Barnes sent to jail for parole violation

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (UPI) – Marvin Barnes, a talented but troubled forward who was the defunct American Basketball Association's rookie of the year in 1974, was ordered yesterday to serve one year in jail for violating parole.

Superior court judge Anthony A. Giannini ruled Barnes, who has yet to play a game for the Detroit Pistons, violated parole by carrying a handgun in his luggage at Detroit Metropolitan Airport Oct. 9.

Barnes in 1974 was convicted of assaulting former Providence College teammate Lawrence Ketvirtis with a tire iron and given a one-year suspended sentence and three years' probation.

"I'll just have to do my time. I can take the wait," Barnes said quietly after leaving the courtroom accompanied by his mother, Luella, his attorney and several friends.

"It's always a disappointment when you have to go to jail. I expected that much from the people here, so it wasn't really a major disappointment. I'll get my stuff together and go ahead and do my time."

Asked about his future, he said "I'll have to talk with the people in Detroit and see how that comes out. I'll be talking to them shortly."

An admittedly "shocked" Oscar Feldman, general manager of the Pistons, hoped an appeal would be possible for Barnes.

"It comes as a shock to me, needless to say," commented Feldman, a lawyer himself. "I don't know on what basis they found him guilty," Feldman said. "It strikes me as strange that he was found guilty there and he has not even had his day in court in Michigan yet.

"But I assume they used the simple fact he had a gun in his possession as his probation violation," Feldman said.

Giannini said he believed no appeal was possible but gave defense attorney Alton W. Wiley two weeks "to pursue possible remedies" for the 6-foot-9 forward who went to Detroit when the ABA and NBA merged.

"The court finds that there was a carrying of a concealed weapon upon his person. That, in and of itself, is a violation of Mr. Barnes' probation, Giannini said. "It is a law of this state that a law abiding citizen cannot even possess a concealed weapon."

Barnes contended the gun belonged to a girlfriend, Evida Behagen, who was traveling to St. Louis with him. He said he repeatedly tried to get airport officials to check the baggage into the plane's cargo hold because he knew it would show up on a scanning machine.

Barnes said he had a woman in San Antonio, Tex., buy the gun for Behagen, who lived in New York City and wanted protection.

Sports in brief

NEW YORK (UPI) – The New York Yankees, seeking right handed hitting power, acquired slugging outfielder Jim Wynn from the Atlanta Braves yesterday in a straight cash deal.

Wynn's purchase meant the club picked up two long ball hitters in as many days who have a combined major league 573 home run total. Wynn has 290 career homers.

The club announced Monday the signing of Reggie Jackson, who has 283 homers in the majors.

Wynn, who will be 35 years old next March, hit 17 homers, drove in 66 runs and stole 16 bases for Atlanta this past season and batted .207. He led the National League with 127 walks and posted the 10th best on base percentage in the N.L.

A mainstay with Houston from 1963 through 1973, Wynn was sent to Los Angeles in 1974 and spent two years with the Dodgers. The Braves picked him up in 1976.

The Yankees, after signing Jackson, said they would seek a shortstop and designated hitter at the upcoming baseball meetings. Their search for a DH could be ended with the purchase of Wynn.

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) – The University of Southern California completed its sweep of Pacific-8 Conference honors today when John Robinson was named coach of the year and Ricky Bell was tabbed athlete of the year in balloting by conference coaches.

Robinson, who was named to the Southern Cal post after John McKay accepted the head coaching job with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, won the PAC-8 title and compiled a overall 10-1 record in his first season. The Trojans play Big Ten champion Michigan New Year's Day in the Rose Bowl.

DETROIT (UPI) – The Detroit Red Wings yesterday traded pugnacious defenseman Bryan Watson, the most penalized player in National Hockey League history, to the Washington Capitals in exchange for defenseman Greg Joly, the first player chosen in the 1974 draft.

Joly, 22, who been farmed out to Springfield in the American Hockey League this season, was to report to Detroit in time for its Wednesday night game in Vancouver.

JV hoopsters open

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The JV hoopsters, under first year coach Ray Ricketts, will make its seasonal debut tonight with a 6:00 tapoff at the Cage against little known Westover Air Force Base in a preliminary tilt before varsity action.

Ricketts doesn't know what to expect from the visitors, and seems relatively unconcerned about the opposition.

"I'm more interested in how we react to a game situation", commented Ricketts, "and see just how good we are."

The squad has been practicing for a little over a month and in that time has had to acquaint itself to a new system. The seven freshmen and three sophomores have learned that conditioning rates high with Ricketts and should play a major factor in the game. It's a relatively small squad which will rely on tough pressure defense, and a fast breaking offense.

"We'll substitute freely and see what combinations of players can jell together," stated Ricketts, who prefers to witness a running game.

Ricketts will start a lineup featuring three freshmen and two sophomores. The backcourt chores will be handled by 6-foot-2 freshman Willie Morgan, and 6-foot-0 playmaking guard Bob Berman. The front court is not exceptionally big, however it is quick and will be essential for the execution of the fast break. Occupying the forward spots will be 6-foot-4 sophomore Andre Fruneaux and 6-foot-2 freshman Ernest Coleman, while 6-foot-6 sophomore Irv McKnight will patrol the middle.

Coming in off the bench will be 6-foot and 6-foot-1 freshman guards Tom McDonough and Isaiah Bradshaw. Filling in up front will be Wayne Malcolm a 6-foot-2 freshman, and John Degutis a 6-foot-3 sophomore. Dave Saunders a 6-foot-6 center will supply some needed height the frontcourt corps.

Doubles team places fourth in EIBC bowling tourney

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's bowling team continued to roll on to further success this past weekend, as the doubles team of Paul Stutzman and Richard Rosenthal placed fourth out of a field of 13 teams in the finals of the EIBC Doubles competition held at Pace University in New York City.

Stutzman and Rosenthal reached the EIBC Doubles finals by placing fourth in the qualifying round held three weeks ago at the Wilbraham Ten Pin Lanes. In the qualifying round Stutzman and Rosenthal combined for a team average of 183 and had a total pinfall of 2929.

In the EIBC finals, Stutzman and Rosenthal finished slightly below their qualifying average of 183, as the bowlers tallied a team average of 181. However, the UMass finalists bowled well enough to place fourth in the tournament and finished as the top team from the New England region. Finishing ahead of the UMass bowlers in the tournament were: Temple, which won the tournament, Villanova and St. John's University.

"We started the tournament off very strong," said Stutzman. "We were able to win our first four games, but then we lost our next four games."

Each bowler managed to reach the 200 plateau twice in each of their eight strings. Stutzman rolled a 203 in his fourth string and a 200 in his seventh string. Rosenthal was red-hot in his third and fourth strings, as he bowled a 227 and a 206, respectively.

"Overall, we finished 140 pins behind the first-place Temple team, and we were only 43 pins behind St. John's for third place," Stutzman said.

The men's and women's bowling teams return to the lanes this Saturday afternoon, in a Tri-State League meet sponsored by the UMass bowling teams, which will be held at Riverdale Lanes in Springfield.

The men will go up against the bowlers from the University of Lowell, which is currently the top team in the bowlers Tri-State League. The women, who are coming off two weeks of inactivity, will meet the bowlers from Clark University. Starting times of both matches is 12:00 p.m.

New look hoopmen host Penn State

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The setting will be the same, but just about everything else — the opponent, the league, and a few of the faces — will be new as the UMass football team opens its 1976 home season tonight at Curry Hicks Cage.

The new opponent will be Penn State, and the new league, of course, is the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League (ECBL). The new, and until last week unexpected faces in the starting lineup will belong to Eric Williams and Brad Johnson, a pair of sophomores with just two starting assignments behind them.

The Cage will be a welcome sight for the Minutemen, who split their first two games in the Hall of Fame Tournament at the Springfield Civic Center (losing to West Virginia, then beating Harvard).

"It (playing in the Cage) will mean an awful lot to us," said UMass coach Jack Leaman yesterday. "We'll be playing in an area we're familiar with. It'll help them (his players) a great deal — it'll let them play loose."

Leaman was not overly thrilled about his team's performance in the tournament, but attributed it to lack of experience. "We're young, we've got a lot of work to do," said the coach. "We've got to play to get ourselves together. We're starting two sophomores with no experience."

Those two, Johnson and Williams, will be joined in the starting lineup by junior guard Derick Claiborne, forward Jim Town, and center Mark Donoghue.

Conspicuous absentees from that lineup are forward Mike Pyatt, the squad's leading scorer last season, and guard Alex Eldridge, voted most valuable player by his teammates last year.

Pyatt will see plenty of action coming off the bench tonight, as he did in the first two games. The Eldridge saga, on the other hand, is more complicated. He didn't practice with the team Monday, and was a "hopeful" for yesterday's workout. Chances are he will see little, if any action tonight, although Leaman has yet to decide.

Among the many substitutes Leaman will be using this season are guard Chuck Steveskey, forward Steve Mayfield, and center Len Kohlhaas.

All pre-season scouting reports label Penn State as the pits of ECBL competitors. The Nittany Lions sported a record of 10-15 last year, including a nine-game losing streak near the end. But Leaman is still concerned.

"They beat St. John's in a scrimmage, that's all I have to know," said the coach. "They're a good basketball team."

The Lions are led by co-captain Chris Erichsen, a 6-foot-6 senior forward who led the squad in just about every statistical category last year (17.4 points per game, 8.2 rebounds).

The other co-captain is 6-foot-3 guard Kevin Cadle, a high percentage shooter who is being looked to for more production this year. Other returning lettermen are 6-foot-8 center Carvin Jefferson, 6-foot-4 Harvey Wooten, and a host of substitutes from last year and a few freshmen.

Time to change bowl setup

WANTED — A big-time college football team capable of drawing large rowds.

OBJECTIVE — To play a meaningless football game between now and lew Year's Day, before millions of home television viewers.

The season record is of very little importance and you don't even have ɔ win your conference title. Previous national exposure is a must however.

REWARDS — Coast-to-coast television exposure and a bundle of ıoney to take back home.

I suppose there are certain things in the sports world that really must ritate you. Personally, I find nothing more irritating than the way college ɔotball teams are selected to play in the post-season bowl games. It just ewilders me as to how the bowl committees go about in selecting teams, ıd once you see which teams are chosen, you can't help but be cynical.

Why is an undefeated and untied Rutgers football team snubbed from ɔwl competition in favor of second-rate teams like Kentucky and Florida? ust can't see how Rutgers, a team that possesses the longest winning reak in college football be neglected.

What are the selection committees looking for then if they are leaving me of the best teams out in the cold? Obviously they can't be looking for o many true winning teams because most of the teams that participate in ɔwl games are teams that haven't even won their conference title.

Television has now begun to control the section of teams for bowl ɔpearances. With a lot of money at stake for the television networks, the levision executives would rather have the folks out in TV land watch a ell-known team, one that has national acceptance. The television bigıots are no fools, they know which teams will attract the large audiences.

That is why year after year you constantly see on the tube Ohio St., ebraska, Penn. St., Alabama and Texas. These are the teams the people ant to see. People in the South or the Far West could care less about ıtgers because it is a relative unknown.

However, in the long run, there are two factions that get hurt the most der the present system we have. First of all, the fans suffer greatly ıether they know it or not, because they are not seeing the truly best ams in the country that are worthy of bowl appearances.

Then there are those winning teams like Rutgers that suffer greatly, not ly because they don't get any national exposure, but because they don't t a piece of the financial pie that goes along with being in a post-season wl.

n a way it seems ironic that it isn't the truly outstanding teams that are varded for their fine play. Instead it is the second and third-rate teams ıt are enjoying the pleasures of the lucrative financial rewards of bowl nes.

Why should a team like Alabama or Nebraska be rewarded for having diocre seasons? Something smells, and it's probably the present tem.

t just goes to show where our society is and how it operates. It is only big names that reach higher levels in college football. There has to be a ch better method of determining college football's national champion er than doing it through a variety of bowl games.

Why doesn't football adopt the playoff system basketball has adopted in ermining its champion. Let the conference champions play against each ıer until a champion is ultimately determined. This way here, all the ond and third rate teams are eliminated from post-season play.

Of course there are several drawbacks to such a system, but at least it is ɔeginning towards the right direction in reforming the present postason bowl system. Sports just cannot operate under its present system rewarding the losers, it is time to recognize all the unheralded winners.

Wrestlers open home slate

By HEIDI BERENSON

The UMass grapplers take to the mats for their first home meet of the season against Boston University tonight at 7:30 in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

BU is seeded third in New England and is regarded by coach Dave Amato as "one of the perennial powers of the league". He added that the Terriers are starting three former New England champs.

Amato feels that "the experience we gained from the quadrangular match held at URI will be our main advantage tonight, because BU hasn't wrestled a match this year". He added, "If BU is at full strength, we'll have to perform our best to beat them".

The Minuteman line-up is injury-ridden at present. The veteran wrestlers not seeing action tonight are: Kevin Griffin, Bob Spaulding, and Jim Hodgdon. Freshman Gary Barsomian will be out of the line-up also.

"With veteran senior Dennis Fenton back in the line-up," commented Amato, "we will be stronger, especially in the heavier weight classes — 177 lbs. and up."

Some of the members of the junior varsity squad will fill in the gaps created by the injuries on varsity. Amato commented, "I have just as much confidence in them (JV) as I do in the varsity".

At 118 lbs., Larry Pontriant will wrestle against BU's former NE champ, Jeff Lambert. At 134 lbs., Larry Otsuka will wrestle BU's former NE champ Sev Popolizo, and veteran senior Tim Fallon will be pitted against BU's former NE champ, Guy Bercier.

The rest of the line-up is as follows:

126 lbs. Dave Whitney (JV)
142 lbs. Chris Denette (JV)
167 lbs. Steve McCaffrey
177 lbs. Mike Riley
190 lbs. Steve Masiak (JV)

The JV match will begin at 6:45 at the varsity locale. Both matches, varsity and JV, are open to all.

Gymmen start minus captains

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastic team will be without the services of its co-captains this afternoon when the Minutemen travel to Boston to open their 1976-77 season against Boston State.

Angelo Scaderi and Steve Marx, this year's co-captains and star all-around men, will be forced to miss the Minutemen's season opener because of academics.

"Both people have important tests coming up and they have to spend their time preparing for them," said UMass gymnastic coach Dick Swetman. "Scaderi will be sorely missed because he has been our most consistent all-around performer during our pre-season intra-squad meets", Swetman continued.

Even though Boston St. isn't exactly a top power in the world of gymnastics, the loss of the Minutemen's co-captains could make the meet considerably closer than expected. However, Swetman is confident that his gymnasts will win the meet.

"I feel that our meet with Boston St. will serve as a good tune-up for our big home opener against Army this Saturday," Swetman said. "Boston St. isn't very strong at all and with the way our team has been improving, in terms of consistency and scoring, I don't see why we should lose."

Coach Swetman has been staging very competitive intra-squad meets the past two weeks and according to the first-year gymnastics coach, the team has been scoring about 180. The strongest events for the Minutemen have been the vaulting and floor exercise, while the parallel bars have been the weakest event.

"In terms of scoring, vaulting has been our strongest event. However, we also have been very consistent in the floor exercise," Swetman said. "The p-bars have been our weakest event during the intra-squad meets, and with Angelo now out, we may be counting real low scores.

"The team has been pulling together lately and everybody has been working really hard," Swetman said enthusiastically. "Unfortunately, the big things we have to worry about deals with extraneous matters, namely academics. We're going to need those guys as the season progresses and we are counting on

Tips for the cross country skier ; buy good quality equipment

By JIM SWARTSBAUGH
Peleton Ski Shop

You may think of a cross-country ski as a board with a curved end or as a piece of plastic with a fuzzy bottom; but, actually, the cross-country ski is a complex mechanism with a long history and a fascinating evolution.

Originally, skis were made of hickory boards, steamed and bent at one end. Eventually, a groove was cut in the center of the board to keep it from sliding from side to side. Those who skied on these early boards wanted more, however, and they soon were constructing their skis out of more than one kind of wood to provide more than one flex pattern. Hickory was retained for the hard base; spruce was used as a springy core; and beech and birch provided the top layer.

These new skis of different woods and a soft, curved tip could float over the snow and "give" with small obstructions. The stiff body of the ski would support weight and hold wax. The tail of the ski was also flexible to accomodate the bumps the ski passed over. Finally, the average skier had what he needed — a smooth-skiing piece of equipment that could withstand stress.

At this stage, skiers and ski makers suited skis to their own purpose. There were wider skis to support more weight, smoother birch soles for more speed, a balsa or poplar core for less weight.

But wood was breakable.

To combat the breakage problem, Nordic ski makers took their cue from European downhill ski manufacturers who were using fiberglass skis successfully. Nordic ski makers experimented diligently to adapt the materials and processes to produce a light-weight and unbreakable cross-country ski.

Through much trial and error, some factories developed just such a ski. Other ski experiments have been less successful. Unsuccessful adhesion of fiberglass to the wood layers of the ski often caused separation. Other skis were prone to snap at certain stress points.

The wood core problem was finally solved by using a hand lay-up with 78 per cent epoxy resins. Skis produced by this process would hold together, were quite light and would withstand almost any stress without breaking. This combination has proved quite successful for the average ski tourer. Further refinements were made for the racing ski.

Nordic ski manufacturers also borrowed from the downhill manufacturers to produce a fast base for waxing using a synthetic called P-Tex. Most racers are now satisifed with the synthetic-based ski and its waxed performance.

A further development in the Nordic ski is the waxless ski, which takes the drudgery, or the fun (depending on how you look at it) out of applying the right wax for the right conditions. Waxless skis have skied in the Olympics. To some it was a travesty, to the ski industry it was a worthwhile experiment. To the occasional ski-tourer, it is probably a great boon.

Since there are so many different kinds of skis available, the consumer's best bet is to go to a reputable ski outfitter, and trust an expert to put you in the right skis. A good outfitter will want to know certain things about you. He or she will try to match your personality, your size, your weight, and the kind of skiing you hope to do with the ski that best fits your profile. You should, however, be aware of the general categories from which he and you can choose.

As has been said, waxable skis come in both wood and fiberglass. The advantage of the wooden ski is that, in the event the bottom needs to be refinished, you can easily do it yourself with a metal scraper and a minimum of technical knowledge. The synthetic based skis should be refinished by an expert who has the proper tools and technical know-how.

Advantages to the synthetic ski are its relative unbreakableness and the fastness of the base. The well-made fiberglass ski is generally slightly more expensive than the comparable wood ski.

The writer finds that the glass ski performs better in a set track, snce it is faster and has a softer tip. The wood ski is generally preferable in fluffy powder snow.

There are four different kinds of no-wax skis on the market — mohair, diamond glide, the step ski and the fish scale ski. The mohair ski has a strip of mohair attached to its sole. The ski can glide forward over the nap of the mohair, but cannot slip back as the nap digs into the snow. Mohair is being used less and less, however. A great disadvantage is that the mohair can ice up and become completely ineffective. Mohair skis run in the $65-75 price range.

The diamond glide ski utilizes what is called a positive-negative base. The base consists of a series of depressions and rises stamped either on a kicker strip under the foot or on the entire ski bottom. Diamond glide skis can be either wood or fiberglass. The wood runs about $15 less. Two excellent brands of diamond glide skis are the Bonna which are in the $75-$95 range and the Jofa.

The step ski is almost always found in Fiberglass. This ski has a base which rises like a set of stairs from front to back. The step ski is probably the most effective of the waxless skis. It has been on the market for approximately three years. Spalding and Fischer made good step skis which retail for $75 to $80.

Finally, there is the Trak fish scale ski. These skis are noisy and they vibrate. Trak is the only company to manufacture the fish scales. They retail for from $65 to $105.

TM at Ski Week

Instruction in Transcendental Meditation will be offered during the ski season at Stratton with a program flexibility designed to enable participation of Ski Week guests, according to Susan Bradley, an instructor and former director of the Vermont Transcendental Meditation Society.

"Programs such as this, developed for specific groups are being taught throughout the country," said Ms. Bradley. "As special interest groups recognize the universal value of TM in terms of their specific goals, specialized programs are developed. The West Point Military Academy, many pro athletes and teams such as the Philadelphia Phillies, several major corporations including Blue Cross Blue Shield, and the Mad River Valley Ski School are some of the groups offering TM to their students or employees."

Ms. Bradley noted that "Stratton is the first resort to make TM available to its guests. In doing so, they are offering them an enjoyable week vacation as well as a 20-minute, twice-a-day vacation to take home with them."

"The Transcendental Meditation program includes a simple, natural technique which quickly establishes a physiological state of extremely deep rest in the 15-20 minute twice daily meditation," Ms. Bradley stated.

Scientific research into Transcendental Meditation has provided evidence that the technique can reduce blood pressure, oxygen consumption and metabolic rates, improve reaction time, increase stability (measured in terms of galvanic skin response) and improve endurance, all of which are of interest to the skier or athlete as well as others. Similar research supports claims of improved concentration and improved interpersonal relationships.

Cheap skiing

By ROBERT C. SHAFER

More than ever before, students are becoming out-and-out consumer activists at the ski shops and lift ticket booths of America. Saving money, not spending it, has become the ultimate quest — like discovering the five-minute lift line. Indiscriminate buying habits, long notorious for making skiing as expensive and exclusive as shooting skeet, are definitely out-of-style with today's young skiers. The following tips are offered as a primer to the dollar-conscious:

SKI FASHIONS

"Looking the part" is Seventh Avenue's contribution (sic) to skiing. But recently, the "back to the earth" craze has supplanted high fashion with bib overalls, Air Force jump suits and fur-lined Admiral Byrd parkas. While improvisational clothing has restored a measure of sanity to the dollar-mad ski apparel scene, it too can be somewhat impractical from a common sense standpoint — Farmer Alfalfa coveralls, although very anti-establishment chic, are lousy insulators, even when worn over thermal underwear. That's why most ski bums prefer stretch pants, not because they're sexier, but rather because they're warmer and stay drier. (Washing your stretch gear with Woolite or Ivory flakes and lukewarm water can save you a $4 dry cleaning bill.)

When shopping for ski parkas and sweaters, stick to basics and by all means, beware of fancy labels — Jean-Claude Killy's name can inflate prices 20 per cent or more. Down-filled parkas have finally gotten away from the old "inflated-balloon" look of yore. If you're the type who gets chilly in the middle of August, the extra expense might be justified. Public opinion seems to split down the middle so far as hand protection is concerned; half advocate the warmth of mittens while the other half swears by the improved finger-to-pole contact of well-insulated ski gloves.

Polarized sunglasses cut glare and keep eyes from watering during cold days, but many skiers prefer the added warmth of goggles. Different strokes for different folks. If you buy goggles, make sure they have de-fogging vents. (Trappe of Aspen makes goggles that never fog.)

Poor (but pennywise) Howard says: Choosing quality goods the first time around can turn an "expense" into an investment.

A word to the wise: don't accept the fact that burgeoning equipment prices always reflect improved technology. Let's face it, ski magazines and ski shop owners have their own ax to grind. Ski merchandising seems to be emulating the auto industry these days — as a rule, the differences between last year's model and this year's model are mostly cosmetic. Of course, this is not true 100 per cent of the time. Whenever it is, keep an ear to the ground for late-spring, early-fall discount bargains.

If there is a common mistake in choosing which ski to buy, it lies with "overmatching" the ski to one's ability level. Through experience, most expert and advanced skiers know what they want out of a ski. Beginners have more trouble. There is a distinct tendency to outgrow, or outski, the first pair of skis. Some novices try to avert early obsolescence by choosing a stiff slalom ski, which invariably runs away with them. The surest, and least costly way of steering clear of all the pitfalls is to rent your equipment, especially if you're a beginner who skis occasionally instead of routinely. Renting allows one to learn without investing heavily and also afford the chance of "testing" many different brands, flexes, lengths and models before settling on a final choice. For that matter, renting is not such a bad idea for the hot shot shopping for a new ski. Many shops offer "demos" on a trial basis, free, with hopes that, if you like the ski, you'll buy it. Some skiers spend the entire season trying out "demos" without every buying, a neat trick which Poor Howard would never encourage because (cough, cough), it would be unethical.

Because it transmits all body movement to the ski, the boot is without a doubt THE most important piece of personal equipment in skiing. A sloppy fit causes foot movement inside the boot and that leads to two things: sloppy skiing and blisters. A pinching boot will cut off circulation and thus freeze the feet soon after they've left the base lodge. Proper fitting is all-important. It needn't be achieved by getting "poured" into a pair of fancy foam boots with the forward-lean. Expensive models improve skill immeaurably at the higher levels of skiing proficiency, but in the beginning stages, their effect on performance is minimal.

It has oft been said that flat feet are to skiing what height is to basketball. Most skiers don't have flat feet, or, more precisely, a square stance; all seem a little bow-legged or knock-kneed. "Cants" or plastic wedges fastened under the boot will correct this and cause them to stand perfectly square on their skiis. The cost is small but the results can be tremendous.

Few skiers can discern the differences between $10 and $25 poles. The more expensive ones are lighter and better balanced, but on the average, poles only affect performance if they're too long or too short or too heavy.

Bindings are a world unto themselves. Only a mechanical engineer would appreciate the intricacies of the various brands. Whichever one you end up buying, make sure that the ski shop mechanic briefs you thoroughly on adjustment and safety features. Play safe and always have your bindings tested by a special stress machine immediately after each new adjustment.

—SKIING FOR LESS—

If you measure value by dividing the number of runs into the price of a lift ticket, you probably already know the cannon law of all thrifty skiers: avoid weekends and holidays. The cost of everything from skiing to draft beer is normally a third less during the week. If you're a beginner, you'll ski twice as much for less by sticking to the smaller ski areas. By comparison the posh areas with impressive vertical drops seem to be charging by the foot.

The Student Ski Association was originally founded as a consumer service to its members. As such, the Student Ski Card is a veritable moneysaver. Most member ski areas offer $1 off on weekends and half-price weekdays! An avid skier who puts his S.S.A. Card to work can realize $100 in savings during one season.

Other tricks of the trade: many ski areas offer "work-a-day, ski-a-day" plans whereby skiers can earn their lift tickets shoveling snow, packing trails by foot, parking cars or stapling tickets to parkas. Inquire at the ski area office.

Ski club offers many benefits

By CHARLIE HODGMAN

The members of the UMass Ski Club are looking forward to lots of snow and another good season. This is the club's sixth year and they hope it will be the best yet.

The club started out on the right foot this year with a smashing ski sale. The ski club offered a quarter of a million dollars in ski equipment and made a profit of $4700, which will be used to give students a cut rate on ski trips this year.

The goal of the ski club is to bring members the best skiing possible at the lowest cost.

The club offers members many other benefits:

—a fifteen per cent discount on ski equipment at Ski In in Three Rivers, Matts in Northampton and the Sports Store in Amherst as well as at White Cat in Mt. Farms Mall.

—information from the club's experts on buying and trading equipment, snow conditions and where the best bars are in the North Country.

—starting next semester the Ski Club will be running weekend busses to Vermont until the snow melts.

—members usually get a discount on lift tickets. In addition to day trips, weekend trips are also in the planning.

—in an effort to cater to all tastes, the club also offers weeknight trips to Mt. Tom and Berkshire East. These trips leave UMass at 5 p.m. and provide skiers with four hours of skiing for $4, with an option to stay later and party in area bars.

—for the beginner, Berkshire East offers Ski Club members a package consisting of lift ticket, lesson and rental for $9.50.

—over intersession the Ski Club is sponsoring six, one week trips to SKI 93, Sugarbush, Stratton, and Vail Aspen and Steamboat in Colorado. These intersession trips are open to everyone. They offer food, lifts and lodgings for a blanket price.

—during the fall the club meetings serve to familiarize members with the functions of the club, and get them ready for the coming season. They do this with clinics, movies, and all ranges of information. Door prizes are given out at every meeting, ranging from free tune-ups to a brand new pair of skis.

Tonite's meeting will be typical; trip information and sign-ups, a ski maintenance clinic sponsored by Bonnie Ski and Sport of Pittsfield, a feature length ski film, and a pair of skis for a door prize.

The benefits of the club are many and the cost is minimal. The membership fee is just $6 a year and the club is open to students, faculty and employees of UMass and their immediate families.

The Ski Club is hoping for a membership of over 700 this year, retaining its status as the largest R.S.O. group on campus. People may join the club at meetings and at the clubs office located in rm. 309 of the Student Union. The club will also be holding a membership drive in the campus center concourse Dec. 7 and 8 from 10 to 3.

The club caters to both downhill and cross country skiers, and most of the areas the club patronizes have facilities for both. Club members range from first timers to experts with instructors credentials, so it is always possible to find someone of your own ability to ski with.

There's partying if you want it, or solitude and tranquility if that's what you're after, that's the beauty of the sport. No matter what your age, ability, or skiing preference, the club offers good skiing and good times for everyone. GO FOR IT!!!

Sleazing the slopes

By HARRY HEXCEL

Skiing is a sport that usually brings to mind visions of great expense for very little (in terms of time) return. This does not have to be so, if a skiier is resourceful enough, and willing to work a little, he can often ski for free or darn close to it.

Many ski areas, especially local ones, provide part-time employees with seasons passes, or at least a complimentary lift ticket for each day worked. This provides skiiers, especially students, with a chance to ski for free and make money also.

For those who cannot get a part-time job there are still ways to get free skiing. Some areas offer free passes to people who work for a weekend in the fall clearing brush and undergrowth that has covered the slopes during the summer. Many of the larger areas up north offer "pass work" which ususally consists of clearing tables, sweeping floors, or other odd jobs in exchange for a one day pass. Ticket hustling is another ploy, sometimes used, this is the racket of buying and selling lift tickets from arriving and departing skiiers.

You can get a free lesson of sorts, by following a lesson group at a discreet distance and watching and listening to the instructor. Lodging is usually easy to come by. You can always sleep in your car, but by hanging around the lodge and the lounge, you can make a few friends. If these friends have a house they can usually be persuaded to give you a place to lay your sleeping bag, for a couple of dollars or free.

The last component is the most expensive, the equipment, but you can save a lot all the same. By buying last years leftovers, and going to ski sales and ski swaps, it is not difficult to save one-third to one-half off the list price of a set of equipment.

So if you use a little imagination, you can manage to have a good season of good skiing without laying out a lot of money. It's here you just have to look for it.

UMass women skiers work long before snow

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

Coached by new-comer Steve Tonelli, the UMass women's ski team started its official season November 18 with an organizational meeting of fifteen hopeful candidates.

According to Tonelli, the returnees had been doing dry land exercises to get into shape since early October. Those exercises included running and bicycling, but with the recruitment meeting, the women started isometrics and weight training. Tonelli will trim the fifteen prospects down to an eight or ten member squad December 11-12.

This team will spend the weeks from December 20 through intersession at winter camp at Haystack Mountain in Wilmington Vermont. From camp, the women plunge into a five meet slate against Harvard, Merrimack, UConn, and BU. According to Tonelli, BU will be the roughest competition as they have been in the past. Tonelli is unsure of the rest of the teams' strengths as he is "new to the league".

Tonelli, a four-year veteran of the men's ski team here at UMass has worked with the women's team before in intersession work-outs, but never had much to do with the women's league.

The women belong to the . WISC (Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference) League. It's a small group of only five schools including UMass, Boston University, Merrimack, UConn and Harvard-Radcliffe. Each meet is a mini-invitational in which all the WISC teams compete, usually at the host team's practice area. This season, besides the five basic meets, UMass will compete in the Can-Am Invitationals — one in Quebec at the beginning of the season, and a return invitation to the Canadian teams at Wildcat Mountain in New Hampshire.

Each meet is held on a weekend with one big race on Saturday, and another on Sunday. The combination of races is predetermined by the WISC coaches before the season starts. The main ingredients are always some combination of slalom, giant slalom, downhill and dual slalom, however.

Organized team workouts before the snow arrives consist of running, isometrics, and weight training. The women will be working with low weight and high repetition drills to increase their power (ability to do work quickly). When December 20 rolls around, hopefully with some snow, the team will move onto the slopes of Berkshire East and Haystack Mountain to get their skiing legs back with a bit of free skiing. Following, the team will run gates and work on building stamina and a good carve turn. A carve turn is the smoothest turn possible around the gates with the least amount of braking. According to Tonelli, it takes much practice to perfect.

Of the final team, Tonello is sure of five members — all returning skiers. Two co-captains chosen last semester are Kathryn Shinnick, and Catherine Donovan. The returnees who will see action are Nancy O'Hare, Nancy Hayden, and Ann Delaney.

Skiers shape up for season

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

On December 11th some 35 or 4[illegible] men will descend on Haystack Mountain for a one day try-out at making the UMass varsity ski team. It will be an all day session and the stamina of the skier will come into direct relevance.

"We had an organizational meeting in mid-November and everyone who attended was advised to get in the best shape as possible because on try-out day we ski and ski and ski," said coach Bill MacConnell. "Those who aren't in shape won't last the morning."

MacConnell has an incredible streak going as coach of the Minutemen. In the last seven years, the Minutemen have captured either the Osborne Divisional Championship or the New England Intercollege Ski Championship, and in some years both.

Among the teams competing in the Osborne Division are Amherst College, Northeastern, Plymouth State, Boston University and the University of Connecticut. Amherst may provide the Minutemen with their stiffest challenge, therefore creating a natural geographic rivalry.

Beginning December 20th, the team will ski everyday during the week and then have weekends off. On January 4-9, however, the team will be off to Collingwood Mountain in Quebec, Canada for the Can-Am Collegiate Races.

During the regular season, races will be scheduled for four successive weekends, beginning January 29-30. The team will travel to New Hampshire mountains three times and visit Vermont once.

On March 4-6 the New England inter-college Ski Championship will be held in Maine. Only the top three schools from the Osborne Division will qualify for the championship and not always does the top rated school win.

"We've gone to the championship after finishing first during the regular season and not been victorious. On the other hand one year we placed third in the regular standings and won the big prize at the end of the season," says coach MacConnell.

One thing is for sure, look for the UMass ski team to win something.

17 arrested in Puffton

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

Seventeen persons were arrested yesterday on charges of "disturbing the peace" and "disorderly persons" when they attempted to block a forced eviction at Puffton Village Apartments in North Amherst.

About 65 friends, supporters, and observers gathered at the demonstration as Amherst police evicted Jean Cahill.

All 17 arrested were later released under personal recognizance, but according to Cahill the Hampshire County District Attorney said they will face an additional "unnamed charge" when they appear in court December 10.

The persons arrested are: Peter Thews, Jill Holloway, and Anne Shlay, all UMass students. The others are: Dale Melcher, Jim Deweese, Bob Bohm, Dave Russell, Marie Herbert, Jane Fleishman, Charlene Chase, Ralph Daniels, James Sullivan, Craig Tyler, Mary Wentworth, Jim McKay, Vincentt O'Conner, and Jean Cahill.

Cahill said the Puffton management has been trying to evict her since May for keeping dogs in her apartment. She claimed, however, that they were not her dogs but her daughter's and would often stray over from nearby Brandywine Apartments where her daughter lives.

She said the management was aware of this, but wanted her to move because she formed a tenants association in Puffton Village, and was active in the recent rent control referendum in Amherst.

One of the arrested resistors, Peter Thews, a UMass student and member of the Northampton Tenant's Union, said they stood on the front steps of the apartment as an act of "civil disobedience". He said they did not resist arrest, but walked peacefully to the Animal Rescue League van, which the police used to remove them.

As of 9 p.m. last night Cahill's furniture was on the sidewalk on North Pleasant Street across from Puffton Village . Cahill said she requested the movers to put it there rather than store it because "the state would put a lien on it." She added, "since I'm on welfare I couldn't afford to get it back, so the state would own my furniture." She said the other seven people who were evicted from her apartment would take turns throughout the night watching her furniture.

Cahill said she was not informed of the date of the eviction until last night. She said a judge ordered her out in September, but an agreement was reached allowing her to stay until she could find "adequate housing" after the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) intervened.

She lives in Puffton Village IV, which is a section of the apartment complex subsidized by HUD.

She said Hampshire County Sherriff William Lynch then told her he would evict her regardless. The next day, she said, Massachusetts Senator Edward Kennedy wrote her a letter guaranteeing there would be no eviction. According to Cahill, Kennedy said Massachusetts HUD director Kenneth Salk had informed him of her case.

Cahill said she took Kennedy's letter to Puffton attorney Richard Howland asking for an explanation, but he ignored her. Howland refused to comment last night.

Cahill said she contacted Kennedy's office yesterday. She is considering legal action. She said she and her son Scott would stay with friends for the next few days.

Witnesses at the demonstration yesterday said a picket line was formed after police made the arrests. According to one witness people tried to block the moving van which was called in to move the furniture shortly after the arrests. Demonstrators then let the air out of a tire on the moving van.

Motorists on North Pleasant Street last night slowed or stopped to see the 60-foot long line of funiture on the sidewalk, and to read the poster saying; "Police Serve the Rich. We demand Our Rights to Fair Housing."

Trustees prep for faculty union

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The UMass Board of Trustees all but conceded Wednesday that they will soon have on their minds a unionized faculty capable, finally, of exerting hard pressure for long-awaited cost of living increases.

As the board prepared to engage in collective bargaining, anticipating the outcome of an election this week, they authorized UMass President Robert C. Wood to take "appropriate steps" to negotiate pay hikes for faculty and professional staff across the university's three campuses.

The trustees denied they consider the proposed pay hikes are a political move to avert unionization.

The action, approved unanimously by the board, came as the first order of business at yesterday's meeting on the Boston Harbor campus. Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, a trustee by statute, attended the meeting, his first this year.

Student Trustee Paul Cronin expressed dismay at the prospect of higher salaries for faculty because, he said, the students will be the first to feel the "burden" in the form of higher fees.

The governor, Cronin said, "will refuse" to include an increase in the total University budget he submits to the legislature.

It is likely, some observers believe, that Dukakis will simply tell the University to redistribute the existing budget, so that faculty pay increases will have no detrimental impact on the Commonwealth's already troubled fiscal situation.

The board authorized the president "to take appropriate steps to provide compensation adjustments for all.... eligible university faculty and staff at a cost comparable but not exceeding" the new agreement with the Alliance, which represents all Massachusetts classified workers. Included in the Alliance are all University physical plant workers.

The motion goes on to stipulate that any action taken by Wood "shall be subject to ratification by the Board of Trustees".

In other business:

The board laid to rest the controversial MassPIRG funding issue by allowing the research organization to continue receiving a voluntary two dollar charge added to students' semester fees.

Trustee Shaler, speaking for the Committee on Student Affairs, which considered the issue, said four considerations went into the recommendation.

The questions were these: Are MassPIRG's activities different now than they were originally? Is MassPIRG providing an educational experience complimentary to the University? Is the present funding system legal? Is it appropriate?

The committee, said Shaler, was able to answer "yes" to all four.

Trustee Spiller, an opponent of the MassPIRG funding, said he feels "very strongly" that the board action is a step in the wrong direction.

Spiller said he is "not satisfied with the legal opinion on the issue," and he feels there are outstanding liabilities.

As well as being "unalterably opposed to the negative check-off," Spiller said, he feels the organization has changed its function over the years, from research to "advocacy".

"I cannot vote for it (the motion)," Spiller said.

The vote stipulates that if in any semester less than 50 per cent of the students at either campus elect to pay the two-dollar fee there will be no further authorization to continue the funding mechanization.

The vote further states that MassPIRG shall reimburse the Commonwealth for any expense incurred in collection of the payments.

The trustees unanimously approved, and applauded, the appointment of Dr. Mario D. Fantini as dean of the School of Education. Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery told the board the "entire campus" has "full confidence" that the School of Education will be educational and administratively "sound".

"We are very, very fortunate to have Fantini," Bromery said.

Faculty voting low

In yesterday's election on faculty collective bargaining, 46.4 per cent of faculty here voted.

According to Josepn S. Larson, AAUP president and professor of forestry here, this is an unusually low turnout since the average for first day voting is 60 per cent.

Faculty voting at the Boston campus went well over 50 per cent.

Faculty will be voting again today from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 168-172. The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission will begin counting ballots tomorrow at 10 a.m. at their Boston office. Results should be released tomorrow afternoon.

Field, Belkin agree on CC music room

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

Stuart Belkin, a student senator and employe of the Campus Center music room-study lounge, said in an interview yesterday that Dean of Students William F. Field agreed with employees of the facility that there is alternate space for a proposed commercial bank other than the music room-study lounge.

While this would presumably mean that the bank will not replace either the music room or the study lounge, students who fear the loss of one or both have not given up their campaign to keep both facilities in their present locations, according to Belkin.

"The petitioning is over," said Belkin of the petition demanding that the music room-study lounge remain in its present location and that all broken tapes and headphones be repaired. "Next week a handful of employees will meet with Chancellor Bromery to present the petition, which collected 2500 signatures."

"We will solidly demand that the music room-study lounge remain in its present location," said Belkin. "We will not budge on this demand."

"Dean Field," explained Belkin, "brought up the suggestion that the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union Building could be converted into a study lounge. We agreed with his suggestion."

Belkin still holds the view, that to move the music room-study lounge into another building would "take away the last free activity in the Campus Center." "If this (music room-study lounge) gets taken away from us, we (students) won't be getting anything for our money." Belkin emphasized students pay for the Campus Center building.

According to Belkin, there are at present, approximately 200 broken tapes and only six or seven headphones that remain in working order. There is "consistent" breaking down of the tape machine, and many of the tapes which still play are "old and worn," said Belkin.

Thomas Wahl, another employe of the music room-study lounge voiced a note of apprehension. "I'm concerned that I might return in January to find the music room closed, which would cause me the loss of my job," said Wake.

Belkin expressed the firm opinion that "students should be included on a committee to select new tapes." At present, he said, only the employers of the Campus Center buy the tapes.

"The employes invite all students to listen to the tapes we have," said Belkin, "and we'll be glad to assist freshmen and new students to properly use the facilities available."

Belkin, who also heads the Union of Student Employes, stressed that the Union is in "total support" of the petition, and "give its 100 per cent backing."

This moved Belkin to reiterate what he considers the gist of the matter. "The question is this: when we return in January, will the music room still be here?"

"We are concerned," said Belkin, "that the administration, as it has in the past, will take something away without taking students' needs into account. The people working to keep the music room open are receptive to new suggestions of improving the facilities, but no way will we relocate."

Student flute soloist in FAC first to play with ensemble

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

The Fine Arts Center Concert Hall will be filled with the sounds of the UMass Wind Ensemble and the flute playing of Sanaye Sujishi tomorrow night.

Sujishi, a sophomore music history major, will be the first student soloist ever to appear with the Wind Ensemble when she performs Kent Kennan's Night Soliloquy.

"When it's over, I want them (the audience) to have the feeling that they have gotten to know me through what I have played," Sujishi said.

According to Wind Ensemble Conductor John A. Jenkins, Sujishi became a soloist as a result of talent and hard work.

"The fact that she is a sophomore and has been successful in winning the first chair position in the Wind Ensemble and the Symphony Orchestra, and that she was selected to perform this piece, are all indicative of her talent and the hard work that she has done," Jenkins said.

Joanne D. Tanner, a flautist and assistant professor in the Music Department, has worked extensively with Sujishi in preparation for the performance. Sujishi said that playing as a soloist is much different than playing as a member of the band and credited Tanner with helping her to interpret the music as a soloist.

"She is a really good teacher," Sujishi said.

Sujishi said she hoped to attend graduate school and eventually become a professor of music history at a college or university. She would also like to give private instruction on the flute. One thing is clear: "I would always want to continue playing," she said.

Sujishi's performance will open the second part of tomorrow's concert. Anton Dvorak's Serenade in D minor, opus 44 and Commemoration Symphony by Anton Reicha are also on the program.

The concert is free and will start at 8 p.m.

Stockbridge senate endorses boycott

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Stockbridge Student Senate voted unanimously at its meeting last night in the CC to endorse a boycott of teacher and course evaluations in those departments which do not allow students access to this information.

Various senators praised the College of Food and Natural Resources for its policy of openness regarding the evaluations. Plant and soil science Professor William A. Rosenau, senate advisor, expressed "pleasure in student interest in faculty evaluations."

The senate also appropriated a sum of $200 to be evenly distributed among the following Christmas drives throughout the state: Globe Santa (Boston Globe), Gazette Santa (Worcester Gazette), Toys for Joy (Springfield Union) and Toys for Tots (Stockbridge Fraternity, ATG, in cooperation with the U.S. Marine Corps).

Two amendments to the Senate Constitution were passed. The first involves senator attendance at committee meetings, stating that if two committee meetings are missed unexcused it is the interpretation of the committee chairperson that the Senator no longer serves on that committee, therefore not fulfilling his-her responsibilities.

Another amendment requires that all proposed amendments to the constitution must be presented in writing in the senate office one week prior to the next senate meeting.

Cheryl Sylvester, Executive Secretary, read a written statement submitted by George Clark, chairperson of the Ways and Means committee, pleading for help on this committee. Clark hopes that some senators will show interest and should contact him as soon as possible.

The Stockbridge Christmas party will be held Dec. 17th, with the meal being served at 8 p.m. Music and dancing will follow with the group Cutty Sark. Tickets are $2.50 for students and $3 for faculty and can be bought in the senate office, SUB 432. No tickets will be sold at the door.

Resources Judaica

There will be a meeting of the general membership of Resources Judaica today at 4:30 p.m. in SU 407. It will be the last meeting before elections are held Monday, Dec. 13.

Any member is eligible to run for the offices of President, Vice-President, Treasurer, Secretary, or Officer-At-Large. Nominations may be made at today's meeting.

In order to qualify as a voting member, it is necessary to attend two consecutive meetings, election meeting inclusive.

Today's meeting also features a Mezuzah hanging ceremony. The Mezuzah is symbolic of the dawn of freedom.

Resources Judaica is also looking for a programs coordinator.

HRTA dinner tonight

A Hotel, Restaurant, and Travel Administration (HRTA) dinner will be held tonight on the tenth floor of the Campus Center. The dinner is a course requirement of HRTA 276, a food production management course.

The informal dinner will consist of an appetizer, salad and rolls, London broil steak with mushroom sauce, glazed carrots, and risi bisi, which is a rice dish. Dessert will be cherries jubilee, and wine will be served.

A cash bar will open at 6 p.m., and dinner will be served at 7. Tickets are $4.50 apiece and are available at the door.

Woodbury names issues

Robert L. Woodbury

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

Dr. Robert L. Woodbury, acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, addressed the Undergraduate Student Senate last night concerning issues that he thinks that body should consider.

Woodbury stated that he had thought of eight issues that no agencies or policy making groups had considered and said he wishes for the Senate to consider them.

The first issue that Woodbury mentioned was the persistant high level of unemployment for persons between the ages of 16 and 24. According to Woodbury, people must act soon in order to solve this problem. "It seems to me that there is no alternative at this time to some kind of a national youth service," he said last night.

According to Woodbury, the remaining seven issues are speculative but he added that the Senate might wish to reflect upon them for they may be pertinent issues in the future.

Woodbury also mentioned that University employees from the dining commons and residential areas will receive $650 adjustments to their salaries for this academic year and that further adjustments are to be made for the next academic year. He added that these adjustments will result in substantial increases in student fees.

In other business, the senate unanimously passed a motion allowing a Coalition of Black Student Organizations (CBSO) to start organizing a proposal titled "Commemorating an Indigenous American Art Form: Classic Black American Music." The proposal will request the senate to loan the CBSO enough monies with which to sponsor "a two day festival commemorating the achievements of Black American music and those who contributed most to its development, to be held in the Alumni Stadium in May 1977," according to Kwaku Leon Saunders, spokesman for CBSO.

Saunders added that after reimbursing the senate, CBSO would donate all proceeds from the concert to the Duke Ellington Foundation, an organization "whose purpose is to establish a museum and a 'classic Black American music' archives in the home of the late Duke Ellington which would serve to permanently commemorate the massive achievements of those who sustained and developed this great cultural tradition in America under the most oppressive circumstances."

According to Saunders, the festival would feature music by Stevie Wonder, Aretha Franklin, the reverend James Cleveland, the Duke Ellington Orchestra, Max Roach, Archie Shepp, Quincy Jones, and Donald Byrd. He added that this list is tentative as no agreements have been made yet.

Tenants group will incorporate

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Tenants Association (ATA) voted to incorporate itself at last night's general meeting held at the First Congregational Church in Amherst.

The proposal, submitted by Kenneth R. Mosakowski, will be enacted at the first of the year.

A second proposal was made which would provide for the election of a five-member temporary steering committee to be in effect until after semester break and to organize a financial and general structure committee. The motion passed after lengthy debate. The committee will work on educating Amherst residents in such areas as complex organizing, inspection services, legal research and education, spring election coordinators and the press relations.

Permanent tenants should speak for tenants' unions

Joan Logan, a recently burned out resident of Crown Point and a permanent resident of that complex, argued that permanent tenants should be the spokespersons for the tenant unions. She also suggested that Crown Point be used as a focal point.

"Begin with the permanent residents of the complexes, not the transients. The older permanent residents take an interest in their apartments because that's where they always live, they're townies," she said.

ATA wants to have 10 to 15 candidates in each of the new eight precincts (which Amherst is now divided in) that the group can support.

This spring, all 240 precinct seats of the Town Meeting, Amherst's town's legislative body, will be up for election with each of the eight precincts electing 30 members.

"Even if you live in Puffton Village for three years, you have a right to decide what's going to happen to you in those three years," said Vincent O'Connor, an advocate of permanent legislation for Amherst.

ATA plans to accomplish its goals by creating new voter lists for each new precinct, organizing a petition to bring out the Town Clerk to register the voters, holding open discussions on issues, actively supporting candidates who favor their views and drawing up petition articles for the next Town Meeting Warrant.

UMass proper is covered in Precincts 3 and 4. Amherst College is in Precinct 5 and Hampshire College is in Precinct 8.

Advice was given to the 14 members present on collective rent withholding. In order to conform to Massachusetts General Law, a tenant must prove that his apartment does not conform to minimum standards given in the Sanitory Code. A certified report of the housing inspector gives a rent withholding legal credibility.

The ATA maintains that collusion of these inspection reports is frequent in Amherst and the occasional certification of violations is due to an educated tenant who can use "subtle" pressure on the inspector.

ATA recommended being on the scene when the inspections are being held, taking notes, asking questions and being armed with the facts, including a copy of the state Sanitary Code.

Fire Department kept busy

Library scares follow tower fire

By PAUL BRADLEY and BERNIE DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

A fire of undetermined origin last night caused considerable smoke damage to the 18th floor of Washington Tower and forced residents to evacuate outside into sub-freezing temperatures. Police reported there were no injuries.

A half hour after the Southwest fire started, two false alarms within fifteen minutes of one another resulted in the near total evacuation of the University Library.

The Amherst Fire Department responded to an 8:46 phone call from a resident of the Southwest Tower with four pump trucks and 2 ladder trucks.

The fire started and was confined to the laundry room on the floor, according to Lt. George Bowler of the Amherst Fire Department. He said that some cardboard boxes stored behind the clothes dryer apparently ignited due to some faulty wiring. UMass police are investigating the exact cause of the fire.

Bowler said that the dryer was "not well vented" which also could have led to the blaze.

Residents of the 18th floor reported heavy black smoke filling both corridors of the floor shortly after the fire broke out. The smoke spread to the upper floors when residents opened fire doors to escape from the 18th floor.

Bowler said that the laundry room was heavily damaged by smoke and heat and that the hallway on the side of the laundry room was "considerably" damaged. The rooms on the floor received only light damage, he said.

Bowler said that water was piped up to the 17th floor through the steampipe system and hoses were then run to the 18th floor where the fire was quickly extinguished.

Residents were allowed back into the dorm at about 9:30 last night.

James V. Borkowski, student supervisor at the library, said the first alarm in the library sounded about 9:15 p.m. indicating a fire on the 27th floor of the building. The Amherst Fire Department sent one engine to the library and discovered the alarm to be false.

The second alarm sounded ten to 15 minutes later from the 16th floor according to Lieutenant Kerth Hoyle, fire and safety officer at UMass. Firemen, who stayed at the library 23 minutes, found this also to be a false alarm.

Hoyle approximated that "probably 80 to 90 per cent" of the people in the library were evacuated during the alarms. Borkowski said things were confusing at first, but were back to normal by 10 p.m.

Five students given continuances, pay court costs in larceny cases

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

Five UMass students were given continuances for three months and charged $25 in court costs at Northampton District Court yesterday on charges of shoplifting from the University Store.

Each submitted to a sufficiency of facts to warrant a finding of guilty before Judge Edwin Dunfey.

Charged with larceny under $100 were: Deborah Savage, William Lane, David A. McKay, Caroline N. Boyle and Eric M. Wall.

Boyle, McKay and Wall pleaded not guilty at arraignment Nov. 16.

At that time, four UMass students who pleaded not guilty were continued one year without findings and assessed $100 each in court costs by Judge Alvertus J. Morse.

Savage, charged with taking two art instruments valued at $4, gave up the items to a security guard at the store when she was stopped, according to court testimony.

Lane, according to testimony by a security guard, initially said he had not stolen a $4 pair of sunglasses. He took two guards through the store to where he said he had left the glasses. The guard claimed Lane took the glasses from his pocket, dropped them on a shelf and declared them found.

Defending Lane, Atty. Ellis Landset of the Student Legal Services Office here, told the court that Lane admitted his guilt. He said the defendant needed the glasses for a chemistry lab. Landset also said Lane was under University Health Services care at the time and was medicated.

McKay was charged with taking two amplifier jumper cables valued at $2.98.

Boyle, a security guard testified, was seen with a tube of skin preparation and when stopped, admitted she had taken the item. She gave the guard some toothpaste and makeup valued at $4.42, the court was told.

Wall was charged with taking $23.45 in record albums but, his attorney said, Wall had intended to pay for the items after speaking to friends outside the store.

In the past, Judges Luke Ryan and Alvertus Morse have heard the cases of UMass students charged with shoplifting.

Majeed in concert

By GLORIA MONTGOMERY

Speaking of what's in store for the University community on Friday night, Charles "Majeed" Greenlee, featuring Beaver Harris, is to appear in concert at Lumumba Hut in New Africa House at 8 p.m. Mr. Greenlee is one of the most significant trombonist in America to date. What follows is openly intended to stimulate further interest in a brother so highly creative yet so inadequately acknowledged in his art.

Dating back to the 40's, Majeed was doing his thing with such great personalities as Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, Joe Guy, Bill Doggett and Dizzy Gillespie who greatly served to influence not only his musical development but also his enthusiasm for the survival of a unique style. Majeed has worked with such great composers as Benny Carter. Majeed says "From Benny Carter I learned about the subleties and nuances of orchestration, improvisational and ensemble playing.

As the 40's approached an end Majeed spent a lot of his time and energy developing his musical form being greatly influenced by the music that Charlie Parker was playing during this Be-Bop era. On occasion Majeed would sit in sessions in Detroit until Mr. Parker would show up for the date.

The Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra is where Majeed temporarily found a home which afforded him with the opportunity to play along with such renowned Black musicians such as John Coltrane, Paul Gonsalves, Jimmy Heath, and Ruby Williams, all of who were in the saxophone section and Majeed of course in the trombone section along with the great J.J. Johnson and Matthew Gee.

At the outset of the 50's Majeed performed with the original Gene Ammons Band which consisted of Sonny Stitt, Bill Massey, Junior Mance and Eugene Wright. The Gene Ammons Band was one of the most popular bands in New York City for many years. During the early 50's Majeed played with the Duke Ellington Band. "This was a most significant opportunity" Majeed states, "as it is the ambition of every musician in his field to play with the late great Duke Ellington.

Gilmore to be shot at sunrise Monday

PROVO, Utah [UPI] — Fourth District Judge J. Robert Bullock yesterday ordered Gary Gilmore shot at sunrise Monday.

The judge refused to consider an "unauthorized appeal" filed by one of Gilmore's former lawyers and told the condemned man he would forward his complaints about the traditional methods of execution in Utah to prison officials.

"I don't want to wear that silly hood on my head and I don't want to be seated in a chair," Gilmore told the judge.

"I don't want the hood and I want to stand."

Bullock offered to delay the execution for 30 days if Gilmore would waive a state requirement that the death penalty be carried out within 60 days of sentencing.

"I waive nothing. I waive none of my rights. I have caused no delays," said Gilmore, who was sentenced to die Oct. 7.

"Unless you request to set it more than 30 days and less than 60 days from now, I'm going to set it for Dec. 6, 1976, at sunrise," the judge said.

"I don't request anything," Gilmore replied. Bullock refused to consider an appeal of Gilmore's first degree murder conviction and his death sentence filed by Thomas Jones of Salt Lake City, one of four lawyers he has fired in the past month.

Jones told the judge he was appointed by the Utah Supreme Court and had never been released as Gilmore's lawyer and thus could file the appeal.

Bullock interrupted him. "I had a call from the Chief Justice. The court has issued an order this afternoon relieving you of the duties."

Jones countered that he was still the attorney of record when he filed the appeal Tuesday and it was still valid. Bullock told him he'd have to take his arguments to the Supreme Court.

After the hearing, Jones said he would review the high court's action on his status as Gilmore's lawyer before deciding whether to pursue the appeal.

The American Civil Liberties Union previously announced it would postpone any federal court action on Gilmore's behalf until after state courts considered Jones' appeal.

The U.S. Supreme Court took no action yesterday on a similar appeal filed, on behalf of Robert Excel White, a Texas murderer who has asked to die in the electric chair on Dec. 10.

Gilmore stood in the courtroom and said Jones no longer represented him.

Violate Blue laws

Police charge two stores

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — After a district court clerk cleared the way, police charged two department stores yesterday on 14 complaints of violating Massachusetts Blue Laws.

The Zayre department store chain argued unsuccessfully in court here that Sunday closing statutes should not be entorced because voters overwhelmingly approved repeal of the laws in a nonbinding referendum Nov. 2.

"We believe we are dealing with laws that are likely not to be around much longer," said Bernard Blazyer, Springfield attorney representing the stores at a preliminary hearing. "They're not viable."

The court clerk rejected the firm's argument and told police to file the complaints immediately. The managers of the Zayre stores in Springfield and Agawam face court arraignment next Monday.

Zayre wanted to keep four of its 35 Massachusetts stores open last Sunday because of competition from nearby Connecticut businesses, a Zayre spokesman said.

An Attleboro store opened without incident but one in Fall River stayed closed under threat of police action.

All four were located near the borders of Connecticut and Rhode Island where Sunday openings are allowed.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Angola enters General Assembly

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — Angola was admitted as the 146th member of the United Nations yesterday by a 116-0 vote of the General Assembly, with the United States abstaining.

Although 28 countries were absent, the U.S. absention-in protest against the continued presence of Cuban troops in the former Portuguese African territory-stood alone.

Angolan Foreign Minister Jose Edoardo dos Santos flew from his capital of Luanda to be present for his country's induction.

Before yesterday's end, the Security Council planned to recommend Western Samoa for admission as the 147th member.

Israel gives OK to border troops

BEIRUT (UPI) — The United States has secured Israel's consent to allow troops from the Syrian — dominated Arab peacekeeping force to police the border between Israel and Lebanon, sources said yesterday.

Palace sources close to Lebanese President Elias Sarkis said a force of Arab peacekeeping troops "will take up position along the Israeli border" next week and patrol the area where Israeli forces are on the alert to prevent the return of Palestinian guerrillas.

Figures say less are jobless in Mass.

BOSTON (UPI) — Massachusetts' unemployment rate dipped to a two-year low in October, dropping three tenths of a percentage point to 7 per cent, state employment security officials reported yesterday.

Division of Employment Security Director John Crosier said the rate was the lowest recorded since July of 1974.

At the same time, Crosier noted, the national unemployment rate continued to climb hitting 7.9 per cent, up from 7.8 per cent in September.

The director cautioned, however, that the state figures are not compiled in the same way as the national figures and, in fact, the employment picture in Massachusetts is less favorable than the figures indicate.

U.S. delegates ripping off homeland

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Most of the 13 members of a congressional delegation now visiting the African nation of Lesotho are taking $75 a day in U.S. government funds despite getting their food and lodging bills paid by the host country, Scripps-Howard News Service reported yesterday.

The news service also said all but two of the members either flew to the southern African nation first class at State Department espense or on "a luxuriously equipped Air Force jetliner with their relatives and aides getting a free ride except for nominal food-and-drink charges."

Harvard stabbings blamed on police

BOSTON (AP) — The city's top police officials were directly responsible for the recent stabbing of two Harvard football players in the Combat Zone, a representative for businesses in the Boston's adult entertainment district charged yesterday.

At a news conference, Debra Beckerman also charged an unnamed elected state official is part-owner of a Combat Zone bar where many alleged prostitutes and female pickpockets congregate.

"We accuse the Boston police command with direct responsibility for the murder of the Harvard athlete," Beckerman said.

Mass. company wants Gilmores' money

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — A Massachusetts based insurance company yesterday filed a civil suit against condemned murderer Gary Mark Gilmore, seeking to recover nearly $46,000 in payments it made to the family of a man Gilmore admits killings.

Commercial Union Assurance Companies said it has paid out $44,818.80 in workmen's compensation benefits to the family of David Max Jensen, 24, Montpelier, Idaho, and $1,000 in funeral benefits.

Northeastern governors meet Carter

ALBANY, N.Y. [AP] — Gov. Hugh Carey and other members of a new coalition formed to press a case for the economically depressed Northeast are hoping for a meeting next week with President-elect Jimmy Carter, a Carey aide said yesterday.

Carter responded favorably this week to the request for a meeting with the Coalition of Northeastern Governors, said Walter Xicinski, Carey's chief staff representative to the coalition.

The coalition, which Carey chairs, includes the governors of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Vermont, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and New York.

MEXICO CITY: Jose Lopez Portillo, (wearing sash) waves to crowds after he became the 60th president of Mexico at inaugural ceremonies yesterday. Both Portillo and outgoing Pres. Luis Echeverria, walked among the crowds for short distances during the after-ceremony parade. (UPI)

Mexican peasants given land

MEXICO CITY [AP] — Jose Lopez Portillo was sworn in yesterday as president of Mexico as his predecessor, in one of his last acts, awarded to Mexican peasants titles to 1.1 million acres of land that had previously been expoppriated.

Outgoing President Luis Echeverria also ordered a new expropriation of 8,668 acres of land, to be split up into 60,200 small plots for peasants' homes, the Agrarian Reform Ministry said.

The ministry did not specify the locations of either the newly appropriated land or the land for which titles were awarded.

The Associated Press erroneously reported that the 1.1 million acres was land newly expropriated. The error was caused by a mistranslation of a government announcement.

Belles lettres

Dear DVP,

I have been very worried about reading about the recent charges that you have racism and sexism in your committee. At first I was sure that these were only the nasty lies of bad people. However, you can imagine how hurt I was when, after further research, I found that you were not so innocent.

When you brought Eldridge Cleaver here, you told me he was black. But some people are telling me that he is not of color. Now I don't know what to believe. But I think you have insulted the Third World very much. You probably could not make up for that even if you brought Muhammad Ali here.

And that isn't all. When I listen to famous people lecturing, I'm usually listening too carefully to what they're saying to remember whether they were male or female. But after I checked the records, it turned out that there really haven't been any female speakers. You say "but there are no distinguished women around now that Madame Curie is dead". But this isn't true, DVP. There's Yvonne Wanroe and Martha Pitts an' Juan Mari Bras an' lots more. I know, you say that no one will come to hear such good speakers. Yeah, I guess that's probably true.

I've thought about it, DVP, and I've decided that you probably just accidentally forgot to bring women here, an' that you've just been getting bad advice. But, I've got a real good idea for fixing up this whole mess. How about inviting Farrah Fawcett-Majors here!? That would solve all your problems.

Sincerely,
Irma

Dear Southwest,

I am presently a freshman, oops, freshperson, who is new on campus. I would like to get involved with some responsible groups here. I was reading the student newspaper yesterday and I saw the article on your new censorship board. You know, the one made up of representatives from the Gay Alliance, the Woman's Center, and all the other sex groups. It sounds very interesting and I would like to join.

I know I'm new around here, but I think I've had some relevant experiences. I was a homeroom representative to the student council in high school and helped write the dress code. I went to church regularly and was tops in my Sunday school class. For my extra-curricular activities, I was in Boy Scouts for seven years, and got three merit-badges in citizenship.

I am just worried about one thing. Though I've never done, well you know, "it", I don't think I'm gay. But I like all sorts of clubs, so I'd even join the Gay Alliance as long as there isn't any hazing. I haven't seen too many bad movies either, but I could study. My minister said I have a strong sense of what's good and what's bad, so I think I'd catch on pretty fast.

In sum, I think that being a member of the censorship board would give me lots of awareness, and really raise my consciousness. It would be very fulfilling to teach others about what's bad and good too.

Sincerely yours,
Ralph

Dear Orchard Hill,

We are a group of students trying to form a group to promote awareness of Belgian culture on campus. We feel that Belgian life has been too long overshadowed by Holland and other cultural imperialists.

We have heard that your government is very progressive, having given over thirty per cent of your budget to such things as your Woman's Center, your Third World Center, and various gay liberation projects. Therefore, we would like to petition you for funds for our group. These funds would be used for several things. First, we would like to set up a Belgian Center. Students could come by just to rap on Belgian culture, issues of concern to Belgians, social and sexual morays in latter day Belgium, etc.

Then we would like to establish a Belgian speakers program. DVP has failed to schedule any Belgian lecturers in the last 16 years, so we must do this ourselves. This would be the initial step in instituting a Belgian Studies major at the University. Eventually we would like to establish our own residential college, perhaps borrowing one of your dormitories.

In any case, we are confident that you will be sensitive to our needs to be aware of our cultural identity, and to the urgent need to combat Dutch elitism.

In struggle,
Jean-Pierre

The tuned out piano

By JIM SCHPEISER

Aux barricades, mes amis; friends, UMies, lend me your ears! The battle is being fought on all fronts today and everyday, on all fronts; eastern, western, northern, and psychological.

This writer, an amateur plunker of keyboards, has discovered yet another incident of hideous discrimination among musical instruments at this university. According to director of Campus Center operations Dudley Bridges, my favorite Steinway grand has been subjected to physical attacks and other defamations of character in recent years. This brown and battered Steinway is currently locked behind a sickly green screen that separates Earth Foods from the Student Ballroom.

Bridges complains that the Steinway was completely renovated two years ago, yet already it has lost its top and has been scratched. One of his associates on the eighth floor adds that if the piano is left in the open for as much as four weeks, "we might as well take it to the junkyard". The Campus Center administrators explain that pizza and cokes are spilled on it, and people bang on it.

In conclusion, this piano, like the infamous grands in the Fine Arts Center and the towering organs down there, is kept under lock and key.

In the past couple of weeks I've dropped in through the ballroom and played with this Steinway, to the entertainment of Earth Foods people and passersby (I hope). Well, some liked the music. Today, when I discovered it back in the closet, I was ordered out and couldn't defend myself with the necessary permission slip. Yes, a permission slip is required, like the one your mommy used to give you when you went on a field trip because you might hurt yourself.

But what of the piano's feelings? Alone it sits, covered by a sickly green cloth, in darkness, until the pros come to play (Gil Scott Heron and all). Granted they need an instrument which is perfect as possible. But the question as always is money — most of the good pianos at this university, the grands, are locked up because the state feels that they will fall out of tune under unskilled hands. Myself included. Answer: if Earth Foods comes up with tuning money, I and other musicians can play in the light of day, not in some fluorescent basement. Or maybe the Campus Center could loosen up, yuk, yuk.

Blatant cynicism

To the Editor:

I give three cheers to William Mahoney in regards to his letter of the 1st of December berating Mark Wilding's column of November 24 "Where the Boys Are."

Now Mr. Wilding, yours is an entirely different story. You seem to condemn the Harvard students in general in your cynical column. Your cynicism is also evident in your December 1st column "In Praise of D.C. Ladies." Mr. Wilding, your choice of words in your columns is excellent, but I begin to wonder if the position of Collegian Columnist has gone to your head. Apparently you do not realize when your cynicism has gone too far. Or maybe its just that you can't see past your pencil.

Or maybe it is that I'm reading you entirely wrong. Could it be that you are trying to say that things are bad right now but that you are going to aid the "D.C. Ladies" in their daily task of cooking three meals for some 9800 students now using the meal plan? Or possibly you have come up with some ultra-fantastic solution of how to improve the general quality of the food served and possibly titivate the overall appearance of the meals without increasing the costs of the meal plan to astronomical proportions.

I think not, Mr. Wilding, because from what I have seen of your work, you prefer to stand off to the side and sneer at the objects of your journalistic attacks and verbally abuse them with your cynicism to the point of self satisfaction.

I realize that many people look to your column for a touch of humor to break up the "boredom" of the days remaining in the semester. But your blatant cynicism is definitely out of place as are you for submitting these columns to the Collegian for publication. I am not suggesting that you should leave the staff of the Collegian, but I wonder, have you ever thought of writing a comic strip?

Crown Point fire preventable

To the Editor:

The Amherst Tenants Association deplores the conditions that led to the destruction of 16 units at Crown Point Apartments in the horrible fire there on Sunday night.

The rapid spread of the fire was preventable. It was only through a combinatimn of luck and the heroic efforts of the firemen and a few neighbors that no lives were lost in the tragedy.

A number of factors contributed to the rapid spread of the fire and to the injury of at least two people. There were no effective fire walls in the building, no smoke detection systems, no fire call boxes, no fire extinguishers, only one access route into the complex, and no access for the fire equipment across Route 9.

We feel that it is negligence on the part of the owners of the complex and the Town of Amherst to have allowed these conditions to exist.

We insist that the Town inspect all apartment buildings for possible health and safety hazards and that all apartment buildings be required to be protected with call boxes, smoke detectors, fire walls, adequate second exits, and adequate fire equipment access routes.

The Town is responsible for ensuring the safety and well-being of all of its citizens. It is essential that the selectpeople, the Inspection services, town officials and citizens take immediate action to prevent future inexcusable fires such as this one. The Town must act now before any more property or lives are lost.

We urge the citizens of Amherst to work with us and the Town on this and the many other housing problems that exist in Amherst.

Off Amherst Towing

To the Editor:

I've been at UMass for three months and have yet to hear anyone speak highly of Amherst Towing. They've been mentioned in connection with assault, breaking and entering and larceny, in both the Collegian and around campus. Last week they forceably entered my car, breaking the lock. The Clerk of Courts in Northampton refused to issue me a formal complaint against them, so I need some support. I want Amherst Towing off UMass, and I'll need a class action to do it. If you've been victimized or know someone who has, spend a minute to call me at 253-2779. Make some noise.

For a laugh

While I was sitting here trying to think of what to write about, two of my friends came back to the dorm from the Cape. They had seen Betty Ford in Hyannis. I tried to think of some funny things to say about the Fords; but Ford jokes are on the way out so I had to think of something else.

My sister and her boyfriend gave me a ride back here after Thanksgiving and we brought along Leonard for the ride. Leonard is three years old, and very cool. He had never been on a long trip before so we were showing him various sites. When we came to the Holyoke mountains I said, "Hey Leonard, aren't those mountain's great?" In a serious tone he answered, "I know, I made them."

I miss seeing little kids around campus. I see my Head of Residence's kids sometimes; the youngest of which has taken on the endeavor of making up a new language. She said that she's going to make up the spoken part first, then do the written part afterwards.

I love the way children get so serious about their projects. When and why does that point always come when we have to "grow up" and be serious about projects that don't really interest us?

Tonite, I went around the corridor asking people what they could remember about their early childhoods. It turned out to be a long session of story telling with a lot of people involved. I haven't laughed so hard in a long time.

We learned that one of the guys in the hall lived in Portugal until he was nine. He lived on a farm next to the ocean without running water or electricity. He told us about the hard time he had learning to milk a cow when he was seven. One time he was standing on a cliff looking at the ocean when a goat charged up from behind and butted him off the cliff. They ate that devil for Christmas dinner that year.

Most of the people here remembered childhood accidents. One girl was playing "rocket" with her two brothers when her parents were at the theater. One brother propelled her through the air, the other was supposed to catch her. The propeller propelled too hard and bounced her off the ceiling and the floor. The "rocket" woke up in intensive care.

When Mike was little, he was going to his grandfather's birthday party in the car and carrying the cake. When the car turned the corner, out the door went Mike and the cake. But he ended up the hero because he saved the cake. (He was okay too.)

We talked about dreams. Most people couldn't remember dreams, but could remember nightmares or wetting the bed. When Brian's father woke up his little sister Molly, he asked her how her dream was. She answered, "It wasn't a good dream, it wasn't a bad dream, just smooth black."

Barbara's family used to have picnics on the living room rug and watch "Lassie". Her brother wouldn't eat gingerbread men or animal crackers because he was afraid he'd hurt them.

A lot of kids that were the youngest in their families were exploited by their older brothers and sisters for fun. Gary had big ears and they always made him act like a monkey. Rick used to steal his little sister's bottle and his mother could never figure out why his sister always cried.

The stories went on and on. I could fill an anthology with them.

Ford jokes are passe now, and I don't think I'll be able to bear four years of peanut jokes. I'd rather laugh at my friends anyway. Wouldn't you? Just ask them about their childhoods.

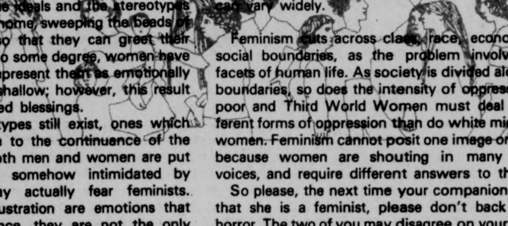
Feminists are human too



What is a feminist?

I have watched persons, both male and female, who have suddered when a woman tells them, "Yes, I'm a feminist." Sometimes they will look surprised and say, "But you don't act like them." For many, the term "feminist," or "Women's Libber," or just "them," conjures up images of bitter, angry hard women who have rejected those persons who do not agree with their point of view.

It's time to start destroying those stereotypes.

For the past few years, many of us have concentrated on breaking the ideals and the stereotypes that place women in the home, sweeping the beads of sweat off their brows so that they can greet their husbands with a smile. To some degree, women have broken the molds that represent them as emotionally weak and intellectually shallow; however, this result has also had some mixed blessings.

Unfortunately, stereotypes still exist, ones which may do serious damage to the continuance of the woman's movement. Both men and women are put off because they feel somehow intimidated by feminists, or they may actually fear feminists. Although anger and frustration are emotions that feminists often experience, they are not the only emotions of which they are capable. By furthering these stereotypes, the frustrations and alienation of feminists from other persons only intensifies.

I think we have to realize that feminists are not the robots that so many people make them out to be. I know feminists who have husbands and children and love them both. I know feminists who really enjoy the company of men. There are feminists who enjoy putting on skirts when they go out. And I know men that I might also call feminists.

To be a feminist doesn't mean to preserve a certain image or to act in a certain way; that's a game that anyone can play. Feminists are those persons who have a firm committment to the eradication of women's oppression. However, their methods of dealing with the problem, and their personal lifestyles, can vary widely.

Feminism cuts across class, race, economic, and social boundaries, as the problem involves many facets of human life. As society is divided along these boundaries, so does the intensity of oppression vary; poor and Third World Women must deal with different forms of oppression than do white middle class women. Feminism cannot posit one image or solution, because women are shouting in many different voices, and require different answers to their cries.

So please, the next time your companion tells you that she is a feminist, please don't back away in horror. The two of you may disagree on your attitudes and beliefs but I doubt that you have any reason to fear her. You may even like her. She is, after all, only human.

foreign affairs

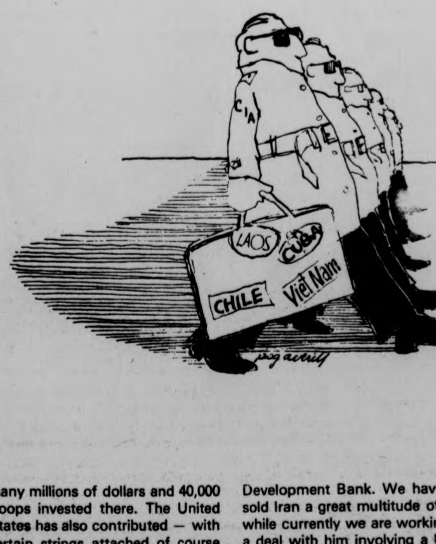
Foreign intelligence: Following our example

By GREG BRYANT

The federal authorities are currently investigating the presence of foreign intelligence agency operations in this country. This seems rather odd, considering all the covert operations our C.I.A. has pulled in other countries. But apparently they have become bored with that unresolved investigation and thus feels it must blaze new paths of righteousness.

The countries under investigation include Iran, Chile, and South Korea. Each of these countries has sizeable numbers of its people — including political exiles and those newly naturalized as U.S. citizens — residing within this country. Many of these peoples' civil rights have been thwarted by the foreign intelligence agencies of those countries under investigation, despite the fact that they are on American soil.

To make matters difficult though, the investigators are hampered by diplomatic immunity, ambiguous and untested statutes, and federal-state considerations. Primarily though, they are impeded by the economic and political "commitments" the United States has to these countries. In South Korea, for instance, our government and American corporate interests have many millions of dollars and 40,000 troops invested there. The United States has also contributed — with certain strings attached of course — millions of dollars to the Chilean junta, yet indirectly through the World Bank and Inter-American Development Bank. We have also sold Iran a great multitude of arms while currently we are working out a deal with him involving a United States built nuclear reactor.



Foreign intelligence operations taking place in this country first came to the attention of most Americans this past September. On the 21st of that month Orlando Letelier, who was foreign minister under the Chilean government of President Allende, was blown to bits in a bomb blast in Washington D.C. Letelier was a strong opponent of the current junta in Chile.

While in exile he worked at altering the economic support given this repressive regime by corporate interests in the United States as well as Western Europe.

A short time before his death, Letelier was warned that DINA agents (Chilean secret police) were thought to be circulating in this country. There is little doubt that DINA did in fact have a very direct role in his assassination.

Meanwhile "our friend" the Shah of Iran has also seen fit to keep tabs on Iranian exiles and students in this country. In a recent interview on CBS's "60 Minutes" the Shah admitted to these facts. With regards to Iranian students studying in the United States the Shah stated that SAVAK (Iranian secret police) was "Checking up on anybody who becomes affiliated with circles, organizations hostile to my country, which is the role of any intelligence organization". (Our CIA and FBI would more than amply be able to identify with such logic).

Similarly, Iranian critic-poet Reza Baraheni, who now lives in exile in New York City, has been organizing opposition to the Shah's repressive government. He has also been warned about possible SAVAK attempts to eliminate him.

Now you really can't blame these governments for doing such things in this country considering the fact that they are merely emulating the tactics of our own intelligence agencies. The fact that our CIA helped install the Shah and the Chilean junta and is working in close cooperation with South Korea's CIA only goes to show you that something is rubbing off on them.

I don't know about you but this scares the shit out of me. Yet in all honesty I don't feel the investigation will amount to much. The United States (i.e. the government and corporate interests) just has too much to lose if the economic "cooperation" is disturbed.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Thursday, December 2 — Born today, you are an overly generous individual who must be on constant guard against giving away too much of either material possessions or spiritual energy. Always willing to lend others an ear for their troubles, a shoulder for their tears, you may find that a great deal of your time — time which could be spent in the gainful pursuit of your own career, your own personal relationships, and so on — is taken up with the concerns of others. You will be greatly rewarded for your interest in others and but the reward will be in terms of moral satisfaction, not material goods. For this reason, you will have to deny yourself the pleasure of helping others on occasion and concern yourself with your own future.

Your generosity is not only a matter of mental or physical effort or contribution to others; it is also a matter of general expectations. You will ultimately grow out of the notion that you will receive in accordance with your giving; eventually, it will come to you that you cannot expect from others the kind of response you yourself are capable of. It will require some sad adjustment of attitudes on your part, but once you realize that your reactions are exceptional, that your response in terms of care and aid is not the rule, you will be happier for a lessening of disappointing episodes.

Not one to keep things to yourself, you are not a secret "do-gooder." In fact, you like people to know what you can and will do to help them, and, on the other hand, what you refuse to do, what you cannot do, either by choice or circumstance.

Friday, December 3

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This is a day for increasing health, wealth, and wisdom. Don't hesitate to share with others good news from abroad.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Take your time discovering the circumstances underlying another's decision. It could make all the difference.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Bold action may be necessary if you are to be able to take advantage of new possibilities for gain. Don't hesitate to make a change.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Limitations on your present activities make it necessary that you determine precise goals soon. Waste no time on self-pity.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Make no effort to anticipate another's reaction to your present behavior. Stick to your own principles for best results.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take care that in embroidering the present situation on the employment scene, you don't make your involvement appear to be accidental.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Opposition to your plans for the day may result in a complete change of schedule. Adjust your time and talents accordingly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Though you may not be in the driver's seat, you may be able to steer the course — from a behind-the-scenes position of strength.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Please another and you will please yourself. A guarantee of happiness is built in to the service you do a loved one.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Make sure your own house is in order before you attempt to reorder another's. Chances of renewed success are great.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Set aside some time so that you can entertain your own thoughts. You may well come upon the solution to an old problem.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Recent moodiness may have caused results occurring at this time on the employment scene. Don't expect great gains; be satisfied with little.

bluebird forecast

By ROB HENEREY

Riding our trail today could be like trying to ride a horse gone wild and happily butting its head on every tree. It could be a joy-ride if we keep our eyes open, except when what gets butted is alive and hurting. So we better tame our animals. Then we can still ride fast, and feel our hearts thump, but no one will get hurt. Last but not least, then we can keep our aim straight and wise.

The Sun, key to our monthly willing-purpose, is in the Sign of the Archer Centaur — Sagittarius. The Moon, the key to working out that purpose in our feeling-reactions, is in the Sign of the Ram — Aries.

Ali adament: To star in movies, not ring

ATLANTA (UPI) — The champ was in great form.

It was Muhammed Ali at his best, alternately clowning and bragging, then throwing in a serious note on occasion just to keep his listeners off balance.

Ali, in Atlanta for some of the filming of his movie, "The Greatest," was taking time out to help a couple of old friends.

He was plugging a financially-troubled hotel owned by seven blacks, including former State Sen. Leroy Johnson, the man who helped him get back into boxing after he had been barred for more than three years for refusing to serve in the armed forces during the Vietnam War.

And he was plugging a new Sports Hall of Fame being established, in part, by home run King Hank Aaron.

"What we have here," said Johnson, "Are two of the greatest sluggers in the world — Hank at the plate and Muhammad Ali in the ring."

Ali couldn't resist responding to that introduction. "It's hard to be humble when you are the greatest like we are."

Ali used the occasion to repeat his insistence that his boxing days are over.

"The worst thing I could do would be to go back into the ring," he said. "Why go back? I got out of boxing with my looks and my brains intact. I'm a movie star. And, I have a few million dollars in tax-free bonds."

Muhammad Ali claims his long-held image as a braggart has been an act.

"I fooled you people for 10 years. I'm not really cocky. I'm a humble fellow. I had to act like that to sell tickets...I always got a kick out of those fellows who would tell me how much they disliked me, how they hoped I'd get my brains scrambled, then wonder where they could get tickets for my next fight."

Ali said he's been approached about handling a couple of Olympic boxing champions — we wouldn't identify which ones. But he added that he isn't interested.

No need to worry, Bird won't change

NORTHBORO, Mass. (UPI) — Will success change Mark Fidrych, named yesterday as American League Rookie of the Year?

No way, says Fidrych, whose on-the-mound antics earned him as much publicity as his 19 victories for the Detroit Tigers.

"I'll still be talking to the ball and doing the same things next year. Why change? I'm doing all right," said the curly mopped sensation in an interview from his Northboro home, where he plans to spend most of the winter "hanging around with my buddies."

The 22-year-old righthander said he had no immediate reaction to the honor because "it hasn't hit me yet. I haven't accepted the fact that I've been named."

Fidrych just now is facing the reality of what has happened since last year this time, when he was pumping gas in a local filling station. He was invited to the Tigers' spring training camp in 1976 after compiling an 11-10 mark with three minor league teams the previous season.

"I thought they probably would send me to Triple A ball but they said they wanted me to play for them," said Fidrych, who was nicknamed "The Bird" because of the way he claws at the pitching mound with hands and feet.

And play he did, compiling a 19-9 mark and 2.34 earned run average while helping the Tigers to their best seasonal attendance mark in several years.

Following his first-year success, Fidrych became involved with the William Morris talent agency, for whom he makes special promotional appearances. But every chance he gets, Fidrych returns to his parents' home 50 miles west of Boston.

"I did a little hunting in the Detroit area after the season with former Tiger Jim Northrop and some other people and then came home," said Fidrych, dressed in his usual outfit of blue jeans and colored tee-shirt. "I'm not going to do that much this winter. I've got to have a little time to myself."

Life in Northboro still is quiet for Fidrych, despite his newfound fame. The townfolks know him too well to make a fuss over him.

"They all treat me the same way. When I go to a bar, I still pay for my own beers. And my friends don't ask me to buy their beer. I just pay for the limit I can drink."

He could afford to buy the local bar after negotiating his three-year contract with the Tigers.

Now that he is known around the league and is well paid for his pitching, Fidrych could feel more pressure heading into his second season. But, as usual, he tosses off such thought like just one more cold beer.

"I don't worry. All I want to do next year is win one or two more games than I did this year. But whatever happens, happens."

The question; then, is not whether success will spoil Fidrych but whether the new clown prince of baseball will give a success a different meaning.

Worse than Maine

JV hoopers bomb Westover

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The men's JV basketball team, in what can be classified as an "all-time" mismatch, overcame an initial case of "cage fright" and proceeded to humiliate an undermanned Westover Air Force Base, 129-35 last night.

UMass basketball fans hadn't witnessed a rout of this proportion since February 23, 1974 when the varsity trounced a hapless UMaine squad 108-38.

UMass basketball fans hadn't witnessed a rout of this porportion since February 23, 1974 when the varsity trounced a hapless UMaine squad 108-38.

Mesmerized by a taunting crowd, Westover came into the game minus its two starting guards, and a 6-foot-6 forward. It's 6-foot-4 center, Doug Ford, was hard-pressed all game underneath the boards, and was unable to control his defensive boards. The Minutemen parlayed the height advantage into numerous second and third chance hoops, leading to its phenomenal 65 per cent shooting average.

"We played as a team and really hustled," said Ray Ricketts after his first coaching victory at UMass, "They'll be ready when we play a better calibre team."

After initial sloppy play, the Minutemen became aggressive and moved into a devastating full court press which led to a string of 22 unanswered points in three minutes to ice the game seemingly before it had begun.

Freshman Ernest Coleman (10 pts., 14 rebounds) led the starting quintet in scoring and was one of six UMass hoopsters to score in double figures. Phenomenal bench work from Isaiah Bradshaw (nine for 11 shooting) and heady floor work from reserve forward Wayne Malcolm (19 pts.) lead to a 36 point bulge, and a 55-19 halftime score.

The halftime break proved to be of little help to Westover as the JV's combined a torrid running attack with outstanding shooting to run off a 21-6 spurt and up its lead to 50 points, in the first seven minutes of the second half.

Finally with 6:07 remaining in the game, guard Bob Berman converted the first of a one-on-one situation catapulting the hoopsters over the 100 point mark to end any suspense which may have remained in the debacle.

"We had a lot of fun watching such a good team," commented Westover coach Mike McNichols, "We were missing a few players tonight, (seven players dressed). We'll give a better showing next time."

The JV's next game will be on Dec. 7 at the Cage, as UMass hosts Maine Central Institute.

Women's Swimming

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The UMass women swimming team will seek its fourth consecutive win of the season in a meet opposing a formidable New Hampshire team at 7 p.m. tonight at NOPE gym.

Head coach Eve Atkinson and her swimmers are confident, but are also wary of New Hampshire. Atkinson feels that it will be a close meet, but she is confident that her swimmers will be 4-0 after the meet. "New Hampshire enters this meet unbeaten also, but this will not deter us from winning," she said.

Diving coach Doug Forsythe echoed the optomistic feelings about the team by saying that "our divers have dove well, and I don't see any reason why they shouldn't continue."

Divers Linda Schuld, Patti Sheerin, Suzy Strobel and Karen Mastrobattista are facing a strong UNH team this time around. Their main stumbling block to a sweep on the one and three-meter boards is New Hampshire diver Dina Bailey, who has done as well as a 151.2 off the one meter board

Coach Forsythe added that "I think we have the advantage of the home boards — it is our pool and we are familiar with it."

Coach Atkinson cut down the length of the practice session yesterday, hoping to rest the swimmers before the big meet. This team will meet the University of Maine this Saturday at 1:00 p.m. at NOPE gym. Timers are also needed for all home meets. Anyone that is interested can contact Atkinson at 545-2845. Swimmer Rachel Mack, a fine backstroker, will be watching from the sideline until next semester, as she is not a full time student right now (Continuing Education).

A very big step forward can be taken by the UMass swimmers in defeating New Hampshire tonight. Every meet is important, but this is the first big "confidence-builder" of the season for Atkinson and her swimmers.

Celtics sink Sonics

BOSTON (UPI) — Four free throws by Jo Jo White and two by Sidney Wicks in the last 44 seconds Wednesday night gave the Boston Celtics a 107-103 victory over the Seattle Supersonics.

With the score tied 97-97 and about two minutes remaining, a Tom Boswell stuff put Boston up by two points, but Fred Brown tied it on a long jumper. Wicks again put Boston ahead with two free throws, but Brown again evened it up, 101-101.

White and Wicks each made two more free throws to make it 105-101.

When baseball's free agent draft was completed, the Red Sox became the first team to sign one to a contract when they inked Minnesota reliever Bill Campbell. Because they had gotten an early start it was expected that more free agents were on the way.

"Who will the Sox sign next?" asked the fans. "Will it be Gullet or Grich?"

Unfortunately for the Red Sox fans, it was neither. Gullent went to the Yankees and Grich ended up with the Angels, along with Joe Rudi and Don Baylor. That didn't bother Red Sox fans too much because the Angels are in another division.

But then the Yankees went out and landed the biggest prize of them all, Reggie Jackson. The former Oakland A's outfielder took the Yankees $3 million over reported higher offers from Montreal and San Diego.

"They'd name a candy bar after me if I played in New York City," Jackson once said in reference to the Baby Ruth candy bar named for Babe Ruth. Jackson had also told a national television audience during the playoffs this year how great a city New York is, so it is no surprise that he ended up there.

So where does that leave the Red Sox? Does the team that finished 17 games behind the Yankees last year have a chance to catch them next season?

Methinks so.

First of all, Reggie Jackson is no superstar. He has never hit .300 in his major league career. Granted, he is probably the premier home run hitter in baseball now that he has a comfortable short porch to swing for in Yankee Stadium, but just compare his career to that of Carl Yastrzemski and then come back and tell me if he is worth $3 million. I bet Jim Rice has a better season in 1977 than Jackson, because along with hitting home runs and driving in runs, Rice will hit a lot better than .260.

Don Gullet is supposed to be a big boost for the Yankee pitching staff, but he has never won 20 games in his career, which by the way, has been plagued with injuries. The Yankees other million dollar pitchers, Jim Hunter and Ken Holtzman, didn't win 20 games last year either, so it appears George Steinbrenner is paying a lot of money for each win they post.

I'm not trying to say that the Yankees will not win a pennant. If their players all have good seasons like they did last year, the Yankees will be hard to beat, especially now that they have so much depth with players like Lou Piniella, Elliot Maddox, Jim Wynn, and Carlos May on the bench.

But it's hard to repeat. Just ask the Red Sox. Anything can happen over a course of a season. Just think back two years ago when everyone conceded the pennant to the Yankees after they had acquired Hunter and Bobby Bonds. Nobody gave the Red Sox a chance. But they proved everybody wrong and went out and won a pennant.

The Red Sox have a good team. I don't think they will finish 17 games behind the Yankees this year. In order for them to recapture the pennant they lost last year, certain things are going to have to fall into place.

Luis Tiant has to continue winning. Bill Lee and Fergy Jenkins must come back strong from injuries. Rick Wise must pitch like he did in 1975. Dwight Evans must play up to his potential.

Too many if's perhaps, but if they work out, the Red Sox will be right in the thick of things next season.

"I am as happy as I can be in regards to the meet today, however we're still going to need a little more work in preparing for our big home meet against Army this Saturday," Swetman said. "Even though we did win handily, we did look sloppy at times, and those rough spots will have to be smoothed out."

"Speaking as coach and for the team," Swetman said, "I hope Angelo has been hitting the books because we are really going to need him for Army." Scuderi also has been hindered by academics.

Lions squeak out OT win

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The UMass basketball team combined a ton of mistakes, poor foul shooting, passing and rebounding, to hand Penn State a last-second 72-70 overtime victory in the opening game of the newly-formed Eastern Collegiate Basketball League last night at the Cage.

The Minutemen, who had numerous chances to put the game away, just never played well enough to win it. The last chance came with UMass holding a 70-68 lead with 56 seconds left in overtime. But Penn State's Steve Kuhn, the game's high scorer with 19 points, intercepted a Jim Town pass, and went in alone for a stuff to tie the score.

Mike Pyatt missed a short jumper for UMass with seven seconds left, and Penn State rebounded. Freshman guard Tom Wilkinson went in on a three-on-one fast break and laid it in. It was Wilkinson's first basket ever in a Penn State uniform, and a stunned crowd of 4200 drained out of the Cage.

"We didn't deserve to win," said a bitter UMass coach Jack Leaman after the game. "It's our first league game and we don't get ready. Unless we get some discipline and some pride we're not gonna be a good basektball team."

The loss took the luster off a dynamic performance by guard Alex Eldridge. From the time he got sent in six minutes into the game and received a standing ovation, all eyes were on the junior guard.

And he didn't disappoint. Eight seconds after entering, Eldridge slapped a ball that was headed out of bounds at midcourt to Mark Donaghue under the basket for an easy layup. In all, he came up with an incredible nine steals and provided some of the night's most exciting moments.

"We have to have him (Eldridge) in there to be a good basketball team," said Leaman.

It was Eldridge who ignited a surge which brought the Minutemen back from an eight-point dificit (63-55) with 5:02 left in regulation time. A Donoghue layup, a Town stuff after an Eldridge steal, a Derick Claiborne layup after a Town steal, and jumpers by Pyatt and Town jumpers put UMass up by two before the Nittany Lions' Chris Erichsen sank two foul shots to send the contest into overtime.

Town led UMass with 17 points and 10 rebounds, while Claiborne added 16 and Donoghue had 14. Penn State's Walt Young had 15, and Jeff Miller had 14.

The Lions jumped out in front early, while UMass was shooting 35 per cent in the first half. The Minutemen trailed by 22-13, and 34-22 before a late surge, including five straight points by Donoghue, closed the gap to 36-31 at the half.

UMass finally took the lead five minutes into the second half on a Town jumper that made it 42-41. With the score even at 49, Penn State ran off eight straight points and threatened to run away, leading by nine with six minutes left.

Eldridge had a chance to play the hero role with 11 seconds left in regulation time. With the Minutemen stalling for one last shot, Eldridge suddenly broke for the hoop and drew a blocking foul from Miller. But Alex blew the front end of the one-and-one and the game went into overtime.

Donoghue had a similar chance in overtime. With the Minutemen up by two, the center went to the line for two shots, and missed both. That was followed by Town's errant pass and the Lions' win.

The Minutemen shot a dismal 38 per cent from the floor, but an even more disappointing 64 per cent from the foul line. Penn State countered with 44 per cent from the floor.

Terriers pin hurt grapplers, 35-14

By HEIDI BERENSON
Collegian Staff

The UMass Minutemen were bitten by the Boston University Terriers 35-18 last night in a wrestling match held at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Part of the loss can be attributed to the fact that some of the key grapplers are on the injury list. Veterans Bob Spaulding, Jim Hodgdon, and Kevin Griffin, and freshman Gary Barsomian were out of action.

The best performance of the match was displayed by veteran junior Tim Fallon. Fallon pinned BU's Guy Bercier, the former New England champ.

The two other pins of the match were executed by Larry Otsuka at 134 lbs., who trounced upon Steve Hart, and Dennis Fenton, who displayed the excellent form that earned him his past three NE championship titles.

"I thought that we looked bright in spots, and I was pleased at the way the match went," UMass coach Dave Amato said.

Minuteman Larry Pontriant was pinned by former NE champ Jeff Lambert. "Larry was nervous at first, but then he really started to come on," Amato said.

Keith Dixon of UMass lost to former New England champ Sev Popilizo in the 142 lbs. class. Dixon was up two weight classes from 124 lbs. and did a "decent job" according to Amato.

Wrestling the former NE champ Bercier, "Tim Fallon threw the move of the night, and had a great move when he pinned him (Bercier)", Amato said.

Amato commented on Dennis Fenton's winning pin: "Dennis went out and did his usual great job, the job that he does best — winning". Fenton pinned BU's Paul Davis.

The remainder of the results are as follows: At 126 lbs., Dave Whitney was beaten by BU's Jeff Madden.

At 158 lbs., Bruce Rhodes was pinned by BU's Cliff Wayland.

Mike Riley lost a close match to BU's Gil Hoy, 4-3.

Lofty male gymnasts down Boston State

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — A strong individual performance turned in by Steve Marks along with consistent performances by his teammates, enabled the UMass men's gymnastics team to soundly defeat Boston St., 184.35-155.75 yesterday afternoon at the Boston St. gym.

Marks turned in an impressive score of 49.15 as an all-around performer for the Minutemen, averaging over eight points on each event. His fine score earned him top honors in the dual meet. Not only did the UMass co-captain earn top overall honors, but he also turned in the highest score of the day, with a 9.25 in the vaulting competition.

"Our performance today is just about what I expected it would be," said an elated coach Dick Swetman following the meet. "All week long during our practice meets we have been scoring around the 180's, so I knew more or less how we would score today."

"However, what makes this win really gratifying for us, is that we scored in the 180's without the services of our most consistent all-around performer Angelo Scuderi," Swetman said. "I am really encouraged by our performance and I think we will score even higher once Angelo returns," he continued.

The Minutemen also received some strong efforts from Dave Kulakoff, who scored a 9.05 on the sidehorse and from John Forshay, who was credited with an 8.6 score on the floor exercise.

Marks, who was questionable as to whether he was going to perform yesterday because of academic problems, also was the top scorer for the Minutemen on the parallel bars with an 8.15 and on the longhorse. Paul Marks was the Minutemen's top performer on the high bar, as he recorded an 8.15, while Mike DuMuro was high scorer on the rings with a 7.4.

Mama
I'm the mama now
they cling like the children you dared me not to have they cling mama like children

when they cry mama
they come running to me as if the tears will stop when I kiss their cheek and tell them it won't bite or scream
when they cry they come running to hold my hand hold me down mama and I can't tell them no
I can't let them down like you let me mama like you mama

Mama
I'm the mama now
they beg like children for the sweet thought for the yes in my smile for the vague nod that acknowledges them mama for what they can strip from they beg and I never say no not like you at all

Elmwood Posh Appointments

Eating Around Town
The Elmwood Inn
104 Russell Rd., Hadley
584-6813
Luncheon served 11:00-4
Dinner 4 p.m.-10:00
Weekends 'til 11:00
closed Mondays

The Elmwood Inn is poshly appointed and romantic, decorated in muted gold, with the golden color carried over by the trim of the dinner plates. Assorted interesting paintings ornament the walls, and the secluded round booth in the corner of this restaurant would make a perfect scene for a tryst. Contemporary cut glass water goblets and cocktail glasses add a sparkle to the tables.

The garden salad included with meals looked like it had seen better days, and the soup bowl it was served in should properly have had an underliner. Fresh cantaloupe or citrus salad is served complimentarily as an appetizer.

Appetizers of large curd cottage cheese in a crock, giardiniera, and pickled chile peppers are included with the meal, and, the uninitiated beware; these peppers are designed to bring tears to the eye, but are pleasant if the palate is prepared. Shrimp Cocktail ($2.50) is large shrimp, tails on, in a silver dish. Marinated sweet and sour Herring ($.75) is not often found elsewhere, and is an interesting change.

Several dinner specials were on the menu, some of these were: London Broil ($4.25), Roast Duck ($6.95), Baked Lobster Casserole ($5.50), and Salmon Steak ($6.50). Beef, Chicken, and Seafood dishes are represented in various manners and price ranges on the regular menu, ranging from $3.75 for Yankee Pot Roast, and $6.95 for Baked Crabmeat with Cheese Sauce, to $7.50, for Filet Mignon, Sirloin Steak, or Roast Prime Rib.

Veal Cordon Bleu ($5.25) was a good sized serving of two pieces of tender veal, breaded and fried. Sandwiched between the veal were a slice each of cheese and ham, but the use of more cheese and a more flavorful ham would have improved this dish.

Coquilles St. Jacques ($5.50) were bay scallops, and mushrooms in a bland uninspired white sauce. Two vegetables are served family-style at each table, and selections of the evening were carrots, and Ratatouille. The Ratatouille contained a thick tomato puree with body, and was nicely put together.

Dessert here was above average. Pecan Pie was crisp, with a tender crust. The Strawberry Parfait topping was like a preserve, thick with berry halves, although for some reason the parfait was constructed with peppermint stick ice cream, after strawberry was specified. When coffee is ordered, a silver coffee server is placed on the table for refills. The luncheon menu included sandwiches, changing daily specials, and a good representation from the dinner categories.

Reservations

Laurie's Later Lines

After a very satisfying first experience with "The Jolly Bull" Restaurant last year, a recent weeknight visit there failed to achieve the previous standard of excellence. The Steamers and broth included with the $6.95 Lobster Special were wilted and cold, the butternut squash (substituted for the promised corn-on-the-cob) had to be sent back to be reheated, the lobster itself, though passable also seemed to have taken a detour between oven and table, and (the last straw!): after4 diners at our table unanimously chose the chocolate mousse after having it listed by the waiter as one of the included dessert choices, four re-orders had to be made. There was no chocolate mousse to be found.

A Bawdy Ballad of Behan

Ibsen's PEER GYNT Replaced by
Behan's THE HOSTAGE

The University Ensemble Theater, U. Mass. Department of Theater, has announced that the production of Peer Gynt, scheduled for December 9-14, will be replaced by Brendan Behan's The Hostage on the same evenings. Curtain time will be 8:00 p.m. in the Frank Prentice Rand Theater, Fine Arts Center.

Although the University Ensemble Theater regrets the cancellation of Peer Gynt (it is hoped that the play will be presented next season), The Hostage promises to be an equally exciting theatrical adventure. It is a rousing comic play that both entertains in the style of an Irish music hall, and addresses the Anglo-Irish political dilemma.

Behan's own life experiences are the source of much of the play's content, from the terrorist revolutionaries to the carousing, drinking and dreaming that puts the focus clearly on the ragtag collection of people, not on politics. The ballads, bawdy songs and jokes, and folk dances provide an intriguing contrast to the real-life drama of the Irish troubles. Brendan Behan has been called "the living, breathing soul of modern Ireland," and The Hostage is a play as passionate and brimming with life as its author.

The University Ensemble Theater has contacted season subscribers by mail, informing them of the production of The Hostage and options available when returning tickets. Those who have already purchased tickets for Peer Gynt may either: replace them with tickets for The Hostage on the same night; exchange them for The Hostage on an alternate night; exchange them for tickets to any of the four remaining University Ensemble Theater shows this season; or obtain a refund for the cost of the Peer Gynt tickets. Even when exchanging for the same night, it is necessary that Peer Gynt tickets be turned in before tickets for The Hostage can be issued.

Tickets exchanges may be done through the mail, by sending the tickets to: University Ensemble Theater, 112 Fine Arts Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma. 01003. Refunds, however, may be requested only in person at the box office, Monday through Friday, 1-5 p.m. The box office is located in the lobby of the Rand Theater, Fine Arts Center. Mary Lou / Wendy

Mary Lou Williams
Composer, Arranger,
Pianist

Mary Lou Williams, composer, arranger, pianist...for over forty years a unique figure in the world of American musical giants, will be heard in concert on Friday evening, December 10 and on Saturday evening, December 11, in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, together with Dizzy Gillespie, Jo Jones, James Moody and Ron Carter. Sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, this Evening of Giants, is the third event in the Council's Celebrity Series. Both concerts will begin promptly at 8 p.m.

Called by critics "The History of Jazz," Mary Lou Williams is the only major Jazz Artist who has lived and played through all the eras in the history and development of Jazz. Refusing to be imprisoned by either style or tradition, Ms. Williams has absorbed and distilled all that she has heard from the Spirituals and Ragtime to all the modern idioms, and the result in her playing and compositions is an authentic compendium of the entire sweep and development of this American musical art-form.

Possessed of a strong, swinging left hand, Ms. Williams first gained wide recognition for the power, as well as the musical subtlety, of her playing. It has often been said that "She plays like a man," — but men are complimented if they are told that they play like Mary Lou Williams. During the Swing Era, Miss Williams wrote and arranged for all the Big Bands, including those of Benny Goodman, Jimmie Lunceford, the Dorseys, Cab Calloway, Glen Gray, Louis Armstrong and Duke Ellington. Always an experimentalist herself, Ms. Williams developed into an expert modern pianist of exceptional taste and scope. Among her compositions are The Zodiac Suite, which she scored and played with the New York Philharmonic in Carnegie Hall, the occasion marking the first time that Jazz and the Symphony met; In The Land of Oobla Dee, Hymn In Honor Of St. Martin De Porres and Mary Lou's Mass first performed by Ms. Williams at an actual liturgy in St. Patrick Cathedral, New York City, in 1975. This work also forms the basis for the series of dances, also known as Mary Lou's Mass, by choreographer Alvin Ailey.

A truly remarkable human being — and she will be with us for two days in December — Mary Lou Williams — "American Treasure" — the greatest living maker of truly American music. Tickets for the "Evening of Giants" concerts are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and at all Ticketron outlets. Priced at $7, 6 and 5, for the general public — one-half price for UMass—Amherst students

Concourse (next 2 weeks)

Wendy Waldman does not merely sing background harmonies or chug on a rhythm guitar. One of the most formidable all-around musicians on the scene, Wendy can and does do it all. Her ample vocal range and instrumental prowess (she accompanies herself on piano, guitar and dulcimer) are complemented by a strong sense of arranging (she writes her own string and horn arrangements) and a prolific bent for composing. She's written over 200 songs — evidence that would seem to indicate it all comes easy, which only makes her accomplishments that much more impressive.

Wendy Waldman will be appearing in concert this Friday night, Dec. 3, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are $3 at the door and $2.50 in advance, available on the Campus Center Concourse.

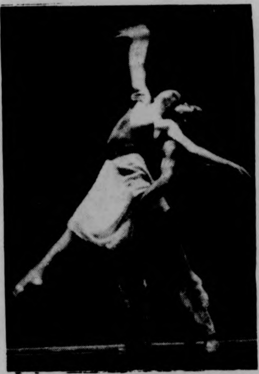
Ellington & Classics in Dance

by Ann Murphy



The Music and Dance Depts. presented the "Lebow Concert" in memory of Howard M. Lebow, an artist who was tragically killed in January 1968. This fund raising event was held in the Fine Arts Center on November 18 and 19.

The Howard M. Lebow Scholarship was presented to Marshall Fine, a member of the University Orchestra.

A mixture of classical and contemporary jazz filled the first half of the program. The University Jazz Workshop accompanied the dancers most memorably with a Duke Ellington Medley, the most 'swinging' of the program. They also played two pieces "Abebe Bikila" and "Secrets of the African Boobob" which sounded too much alike.

The dance "The Waltz You Swang for Me" was not totally effective because the movements were very repetitive. The dancers looked like they didn't know what to do with the floppy brim hats they were wearing. Their timing was off in certain places when they were leaping, but it was a picturesque sight with pastel chiffon-like costumes.

The music of Duke Ellington sparked up the medley of six jazzy dances. "Caravan" had a very fast tempo which maybe was too quick because it was hard to distinguish when the first dance ended and the second started except for the music.

"Come Sunday" was the most aesthetically beautiful piece, danced to the singing of Walter Howard. His voice crisply wailed and extended to electrify the dancers. Peggy Atkinson and Richard Jones were superb in this slow duet, acting like frustrated lovers. Their movements were in perfect harmony. They wrapped their bodies around each other and Jones lifted Atkinson up over his head a few times. Atkinson matched Jones' precision in this one.

"The Twitch" was a cute jitterbug-like ensemble in which they exaggerated their movements comically in a fast-stepping number.

Linda Buckley performed a solo, accompanied by a Duke Ellington poem read by Horace Boyer. The words of the poem were not easily heard perhaps due to some technical problem. Buckley carried it off well enough that this difficulty didn't matter.

The music of the last dance is the Duke Ellington favorite "Take the 'A' Train." The dancers came out in a line resembling a train and they moved in alternating lines. The energy transmitted in this one gave the audience a happy feeling with memories of the great Duke Ellington.

The second half of the program featured the University Symphony Orchestra. Many people in the audience left after intermission. Maybe they had come just to see the Jazz Workshop and dancers or they didn't realize that the orchestra was going to play.

Michael Dukakis

On the Line and Under Fire

The man is an enigma is he a maverick legislator with innovative ideas -

or an elected accountant balancing books not rewriting pages ?

by Gregg Wilson

It has been barely two years since Michael Dukakis assumed the reigns of Massachusetts state government and despite the high visibility accorded to the state's highest office holder, Dukakis remains an enigma to most Massachusetts citizens. He is, as the astute William F. Buckley noted in Holyoke last week, a modern day paradox, "the liberal conservative, big spender, big taxer, who is personally austere."

But if that definition leaves you still perplexed, fear not, it seems Dukakis can be most anything, depending on your perspective. He seems self-assured to one, cocky to another. He is reserved or cold, serious or humorless, frugal or cheap, energetic or compulsive, depending on the observer.

He has spent the past two years rejecting the pomp and circumstance of the gubenatorial office. His daily trolley ride is no longer a topic of discussion; his disdain for the carrot of patronage apparently accepted by his legislative adversairies on Beacon Hill; and his unwillingness to joust with their boisterous leadership now too well worn subject for political columnists.

And yet remarkably through those two years the former Brookline legislator seems to have remained true to his own independent and highly developed sense of self. A strong impression of idealism is still noticeable through his often too realistic view of where the state can or should go.

If anything, Dukakis has altered his style. The office has reduced him from a maverick legislator with innovative ideas and programs to a mere political bookkeeper. An elected accountant whose main charge seems to be balancing the books rather than rewriting the pages.

During his first year in office he was confronted with an astronomical budget deficit and the uncomfortable position of having promised no new taxes. Now as his second year comes to a close, and the front page is one again vacant of presidential election rhetoric, he finds himself in that uncomfortable position again.

His charge: to right the wrongs of another administration over which he has no control — that of Boston's own Kevin White. He has again stated that there will be now new state taxes. Joe Six-pack just turns the page. To him it's an all too familiar scenario.

It seems the modern day prerequisite for holding political office in Massachusetts is a PhD in economics, and an ability to see all political problems as economic problems and deal with them accordingly.

Talking with Michael Dukakis, as I did last week, one finds the conversation dominated by references to "projected revenues, spending reductions, austerity, tax relief and fiscal responsibility." Talking with Governor Dukakis is like being quarantined in a room with an enthusiastic business major, everything is seen through the colored lens of efficiency.

Dukakis is the first to acknowledge the stranglehold business has over the state's econony.

"There's an old rule in this life of ours which says that when you get up to your ear in hock you shouldn't be surprised if those who lend you money begin to squeeze you. It's unfortunate," Dukakis stated, "but they control our destiny."

The State Street bankers and investors have more than squeezed the state, they have virtually threatened to strangle its bond sales unless the governor and the legislator prove that they can manage their affairs responsibly.

Responsibility has come at the expense of increased regressive taxation, and at times on our ride to the Yankee Pedlar Inn in Holyoke, where Dukakis was taping Firing Line with William F. Buckley, the Governor seemed little more than a squawk box for the business community's financial mindset. "We must sort out the priorities, eliminate administrative layering and unnecessary expense," the governor echoed.

As the conversation left the state's financial plight I asked Dukakis what prospects he saw for increased funding in the University of Massachusetts system in his next budget. Presently the University is operating on a $108 million allotment.

More than Dukakis wanted, it was a product of the legislative maneuverings of UMass president Robert Wood. Wood, who is a sometimes mentioned Democratic primary opponent of Dukakis in 1978, has had great success in overriding the Governor's UMass budget proposals in the past two years. Buoyed by these victories he has now requested an increase to $124 million.

"Robert Wood is unrealistic to think that the state can afford such an increase or that the Legislature will approve it," Dukakis stated. "We see no prospect of anything more than level funding for the University next year."

"If the president and The Board of Trustees keep sending up budgets above our requests they are inviting cuts by those who know less about the needs of the University. What they do is invite blunt and very dangerous cuts," Dukakis cautioned.

Dukakis also criticized the administrative layering in the University system, and as a parting shot at Wood he stated, "I don't think we need hundreds of thousands of dollars spent on the president's office either." Dukakis was referring to a nagging thorn in the University's side, Wood's luxurious suite of offices at One Washington Mall in Boston.

Gone are the days when budget cutting statements would bring an avalanche of catcalls and criticisms from UMass student leaders. Dukakis apparently faired well in his April 1975 meeting with the UMass community in the Student Union Ballroom.

Then it seemed the rowdy crowd of over a thousand would not let him escape alive. Now as students settle down to exams just one more time, Dukakis seems safe from the political barbs students once hurled his way.

It follows that the University does not occupy a space on a list of "critical needs" cited by the Governor. Earlier in the interview he said that if additional revenues do accumulate, an unlikely possibility, that they will be channeled into the state pension system, which is currently unfunded.

Next on the Duke's list is what he termed "a most critical need;" the state's antiquated correctional system. Still pressing, he said, is the state's medical assistance program which is threatening to cause another deficit this year.

There was no mention of state employees who are also pressing for a larger slice of a dwindling pie.

But from a political standpoint Dukakis would be wise to channel any additional revenues into some form of tax relief, even if it was only a restoration of the dollar exemption on the meal tax.

This levy, which is nickel and diming taxpayers to death, is a constant reminder of where the word "Taxachusetts" originated.

"But you're getting too hypothetical when you start projecting increased revenues and possible tax reductions," Dukakis warned. "I see very little prospect of increased revenues before 1978."

It's a bleak possibility which the Governor's re-election turns on Dukakis will apparently face only token opposition in the Democratic gubernatorial primary in 1978. A sometimes mentioned serious foe, Secretary of State Paul Guzzi, is apparently vetoed efforts to run him against the Governor. The youthful Guzzi does not want to risk his political future in a bloody and fractionalizing primary encounter with an incumbent.

Still the polls show that Dukakis has an high unfavorability rating with the voters. He will be remembered for imposing a half-billion dollars in new taxes, not his budget balancing act. It's a fact that he will not be able to avoid, despite his Curley-like claim that he was a "victim of circumstance."

The governor is a prime target for a strong republican opponent, possibly the nationally renown Elliot Richardson.

Politically Dukakis still suffers from the lack of a base in the Massachusetts electorate. He lacks the charisma of a Kennedy, a characteristic so important to cultivating and maintaining a committed voting bloc. His attack on social services has cost him the liberals, his disdain for politics has cost him the regulars. His only basis for re-election is a fragile advantage called incumbency.

Michael Dukakis, a handsome man, who was once seen as a leading left liberal, a maverick who has come to symbolize the new politics. As the Bicentennial comes to a close he faces an uncertain future. Dukakis has spent the past two years on a trolley ride through the state's economic archeology, a job which has received little fanfare. Six years ago when he began to run for governor he was dubbed a modern day Don Quiote jousting at the wind.

His 1974 encounter was anything but quixotic, his 1978 encounter may be just that.

The Disc Prescription

Doctor's Orders
by
Mario "DOC" Barros

Tom Moulton is proving to be very active these days. As most disco-philes know, he is one of the best at mixing and arranging disco music. His past works include the magnificent TRAMMPS' "Where The Happy People Go" LP and the Fantastic Four's "Night People" LP.

Released a couple of weeks ago, the "Street Talk" LP by the Bob Crewe Generation is also "A TOM MOULTON MIX." He mixes two of the better cuts on the LP which are "Menage a Trois" and "Free" which he blended nicely into "Keep On Walkin' ". Hank Cicala did the work on the title cut; "Street Talk". The LP is well conceived and has a real broadway feel to it. All cuts are written and produced by Crewe himself and Crewe also does some nice vocal work on the album. "Welcome to My Life" is a strong number that is also sneaking onto some area playlists. The album is on Elektra-Asylum and is worth picking up.

Moulton also did a nice job on "Sorry"b—w "That's The Trouble" by Grace Jones on Beam Junction records. Both are strong disco cuts on the same disco disc and I'm hard-pressed to pick which is better. This record is breaking locally and across the nation. Ms. Jones reminds me of a Carol Douglas-Gloria Gaynor type of singer but she's not an immitator.

Being partial as I am to funky jams I've picked up on a disco disc that's been floating around for a couple of weeks. It's by the Whole Darn Family and the two cuts are "Seven Minutes of Funk" and "Ain't Nothin' But Something To Do".

They're both good movers, with "Ain't Nothin' But Somethin' To Do" the better of the two. Now commercially available in 7 & 12 inch pressings it's worth a listen. It's on Amherst records.

Also hot off of the press is the new Bobby Womack LP entitled "Home Is Where The Heart Is", on Columbia. The music is nice and the LP features a couple of nice remakes in "How Long (Has This Been Goin')" and "We've Only Just Begun". The latter is my personal pick because it features Womack and Peggy Young who Mr. Womack says we "will be hearing from in the future". Another nice slow cut is "One More Chance on Love", my only complaint on this one is that Iwant to hear more of Ms. Young who teases in the background amidst the nice mixture of horn and string in the background. Womack's voice is strong throughout and is especially evident in "Standing in The Safety Zone", the monster on the LP. It's a strong mover that ends with a nice break (yes, breaks usually come in the middle, but this one's at the end.) Womack's vocals are -as usual- bordering on the raucous but they're still full of that soulful, melodic quality that entrances the ladies.

"Home Is Where The Heart Is" is a celebration of Mr. Womack's return to Muscle Shoals studios in Alabama and of course the back-up musicians are the famed Muscle Shoals Horns along with Brotherhood, another horns group.

Sheer Lunacy

Orchestra Luna
Live at The Rusty Nail,
Sunderland

They've played in this area four times already this semester, including last night. If you haven't yet seen 'em, you got one more chance tonight at the Rusty Nail, and if ya miss Orchestra Luna this time, you've blown it, buster; it's your loss. And don't expect to get by by having someone relay their show to you.

"But what are they like?"

"They're, uh...well, they play...uh, uh, they sound like...christ! I don know, ya gotta see 'em yurself."

What they are, actually, is one directionally-ultimate version of rock-theatre, with say, Alice Cooper, The Velvet Underground, and The Tubes all encompassing the other dimensions of rock-theatre. What Orky Looney does is combine a series of always exciting, usually funny, and often surreal five-minute musicals with a series of always exciting, usually incredible and often spacey rock 'n roll. The themes of these mini-musicals range from disturbed students in a "Special Class" to a parody of "Teenage Punk," and covers a lot of ground in-between and beyond.

Orky Looney is actually two--two--two-shows-in-one, and there ain't a weak link in the group. One show is composed of "The Luna Band," which is one of the best space-rock aggregates I have ever seen or heard. To my ears, they can cut ELP, Yes, or even Pink Floyd down to synthe-size. On drums is Ace Holleran, the Keith Moon of the underground. Bob Brandon isolates himself behind a wall of three keyboards, all of which he excels at. Chet Cahill (sounds like a bowler or something) reminds me of anything but a bassist, until he plays. And watch especially Steven Perry, 20-year old guitar wizard from Concord. If there is any way this kid can miss out on superstardom, then there is no justice in the music world. I've seen this band four times, and each time Perry's got a new set of sounds to dazzle my eyes and ears and fry my brain. This time he's got a racing car. I thought I was at Indy.

Fronting the band are "The Luna Players", and they are equally phenomenal. I can't quite figure if they're four frustrated actors turned singers or four frustrated singers turned actors. The wide-eyed Karla DeVito, the sultry Liz Gallagher, and Don Knotts-look-alike', Peter Barrett comprise three-fourths of the players, and watching them is both thrilling and a lotta fun, but it's Rick Kinscherf who steals this aspect of the show. Like Perry, Kinscherf is gonna be a star, as soon as he pin points which talent he wants to pursue. He can sing, act, dance, write great music, lyrics and intros, ad lib, and is a natural comedian with a quick and imaginative wit. Plus he can contrive a look dumber than that mutt on Mickey Mouse.

Orchestra Luna started in Boston a few years ago, are popular as one of the New York Scene bands, and have one good-but-unrepresentative LP on Epic. But their real show lies and lives on stage; they must be seen to be believed. They deserve Big Time. And if you don't catch 'em tonight at the Rusty Nail, you're a bigger fool than I thought you were.

—Philip Milstein

Furthermore:

Orchestra Luna is a highly innovative, creative, powerful, and dazzling musical juggernaut. The energy and conviction they exude in dramatizing the manifold aspects of human experience through their performances makes for a very exhilirating experience. The music never fails to make use of every opportunity to punctuate or dramatize the compositions, and this music is a panidiomatic collage that ranges from delicate, restrained accompaniment to roaring, gut-wrenching rock, and these various musical elements are utilized and juxxtaposed to form music of incredible dynamism. This is a band you have to watch; their stage presence, musicianship, inventive material, and above all, their energy demand your attention. The dramatic sketches they employ add a new dimension to music at a time when creativity is for the most part nonexistent in rock circles. You must see them. They deserve to be rich and famous. They're at a club in Sunderland on route 47 (whose name I'm sure you can guess in a minute) tonight

RESOLVED: GO SEE THEM

Roy Ayers
Daddy Bug & Friends
(Atlantic)

This is a hip album. Perhaps not the sleeper of the year, but a record that bears checking out by anybody with a taste for 60's type jazz, with a Latin feel. An anthology album of material that stretches over the past ten years teams Ayers up with Herbie Hancock on accoustic piano, Ron Carter, Joe Henderson and more. Maybe Ayers has not come through well on some of his other studio ventures, but the two mallet vibist is strong and sincere on this one.

I Was A Maniac Brainchild

Hall & Oates
Bigger than Both of Us
(RCA)

This is as splendid a shimmering example of rock R & B as you can hope to find in 1976. The exceptional promise and high points of Daryl Hall and John Oates' three previous albums is summed up and exceeded on this, their latest release. From the quality of the songs, through the production, to the performance, a standard of excellence and finesse is maintained that puts most albums to shame.

Hall and Oates, along with Steely Dan, are the two cornerstones of rock in this decade. Like the Dan, this group is the result of two somewhat disparate individuals. John Oates looks more like a rough country rocker, more at home on a stage with the Eagles than his very fashionable partner, Daryl Hall. He, like Bowie and Robert Palmer whom he resembles, is deep into blue-eyed soul. And it is from this unlikely fusion that Hall and Oates produce tender and technical music for us all.

The similarities to Gamble and Huff's Philly Sound cannot be overlooked. The lush string arrangements that counterpoint the vocalizing that are hallmarks of that Philly Sound are heard here also, but Hall and Oates are not copying, merely using something of the same skeleton to build upon. Just as the resemblances are apparent, the differences are also. Hall and Oates are into a harder, more technological sound. The intelligent use of synthesizers and searing guitar are their own trademarks, having nothing to do with Gamble and Huff.

The fourth cut, "Do What You Want" plays both resemblance and difference to Philly so effectively that it sums up the whole argument. With a guitar solo, the best heard on AM radio since the Eagles' "One of These Nights", that is a tongue sliding sourball lick by Christopher Bond, Hall manages to vocalize an equally acrobatic bar.

Perhaps the cover is best able to sum up the dichotomies and direction this band is taking. Conceived and designed by Hall, it shows the band 'at home' in a Metropolis-like city of the future. Outside the buildings are gigantic VU meters, and inside the pair relax around a TV from 1980. Slightly ahead of its time, the music still has its organic side as evidenced by the bottle of wine on the table.

So if this album proves what you already knew; that Hall and Oates have been listening to some of the finest soul around, it should also make some of those Philly bands, particularly the O Jays, listen up. There's music for us all here.

Hot Tuna
Hoppkorv
(Grunt)

This is good, clean, straightforward, hard-driving rock 'n' roll music. It is competently played, performed, and sung. If you're looking for good music to party and dance to, or if you need music that won't offend anyone's rock 'n' roll sensibilities, then is a nice basic disc.

Unfortunately, however, it is the very competence and simplicity of the music which is the major failing of this recording. By the time you're a quarter of the way through the flip side, you've realized that what you're hearing is the previous cut with only a few variations. It starts to become rather flat and boring after listening to the record three or four times.

If I knew that this basic stuff was all Hot Tuna could do, then I wouldn't be harping on this flaw, because there is definitely a need for this kind of music and they do it as well as anyone. But they can do a lot more, as evidenced by "Watch the North Wind Rise", the only semi-acoustic piece of the album. It's an excellently-played, beautiful song. So why is it the only one of its type on the whole disc?

Obviously the group has the talent to produce a far more varied album than this, but the fact barely comes through except for this one piece. This is not to say, however, that the other songs are mediocre. Quite the opposite. Most of them are very good, especially on the first side. But it's the lack of variation that bothers me, especially knowing that Hot Tuna can do so much more than what comes across here. They should have put one or two more flowers among the rockers. Hoppkorv is quite good for what it is, but not nearly as good as it could be. (B+)

—Cliff Skibinsky

BRYAN FERRY
Let's Stick Together
(Atlantic)

Bryan Ferry, self proclaimed leader of Roxy Music, becomes the first member of the band to take advantage of Roxy's temporary spilt with his third solo album, Let's Stick Together. Like past individual efforts, Let's Stick Together is all old material ranging from early-middle Roxy Music tunes to cover versions of other people's hits.

There is no doubt that this album is fun, but I really wonder what's the point of it all. Ferry has the capacity to write enough new tunes rather than relying on songs like the title cut or "Shame, Shame, Shame." The new versions of "Casanova" (Country Life), "Sea Breezes" and "Chance Meeting" (now its third version!) aren't equal to the originals. They're nothing but re-makes and re-models. But I guess Bryan Ferry is no fool either because he manages to pull the whole thing out. A major factor is the band he's surrounded himself with. This band has balls, composed of Chris "I'm Legendary" Spedding on guitar, "John Wetton on bass, Chris Mercer on sax and Roxy's Paul Thompson on drums. Mel Collins, Eddie Jobson, David O'List and Phil Manzanera are here and there too. The title track and "Shame, Shame, Shame" are bruisers, quite punchy and rhythmic. "Chance Meeting" always does it too, I just love the eeriness to it. Bryan's performance is as usual — cool and aloof. Sometimes he sounds like he has illusions of Elvis or lord knows what. If there's one thing you got to admit, he never fails to do something interesting whether it's Roxy crazyness or less challenging stuff like Let's Stick Together. (B)

The Roister Doisters present the Bay Colony Production Co. play Shakespeare on Shakespeare tonight at Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. and continues through Dec. 4.

If you didn't reserve your tickets, you won't be catching the Madrigal Dinner in the CCA. This is a one-of-a-kind event now in its sixth year. Featuring fine food and music, the elaborate work on the Auditorium transforms it into a mideveal banquet hall. So next year make sure you get tickets early.

Wendy Waldman makes her annual appearance at UMass tonight at 8 p.m. in the SUB. Is there any doubt that she will do as well as before?

The University Bands Concerts is in the Concert Hall in the Fine Arts Center, at 8 p.m.

There is a wide field of film fun tonight. First and foremost is Diary of a Mad Housewife. The book was funny, the film is grim, but Carrie Snodgrass' performance was topped only by Gena Rowlands' for capturing the edge of insanity. At Gamble Aud. Mount Holyoke College, at 7:30. Lighter fare is available with Guys and Dolls, shown at the main lecture hall, Patterson Hall, at Hampshire College at 7 and 9:40 p.m. And if that isn't your cup of tea, you can always check out Pink Flamingoes and Freaks, two films about which the less said the better, shown at 8 and 10 at Merrill Center, Amherst College. The last time I saw Yellow Submarine was at an afternoon matinee with 300 children who sang all the songs. It might be too much to hope that everyone seeing it at 7, 9, or 11 p.m. in Mahar will do the same, but few movies have been more appealing to a wide audience than Yellow Submarine. It's All Too Much.

Saturday 4

Hampden Student Center Theater is the site of Tales of Joy, a new play by Jeff Cramer and Scott Greenberg, at 8:30 p.m.

Martus warns of evaluation boycott

By D.A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

Jay A. Martus, co-president of the Student Government Association (SGA), announced a student boycott of faculty course evaluation forms at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting.

Martus said the SGA is requesting this boycott because it feels information on the evaluations should be made available to the students who supply the information.

"We are not taking a stance against any department for not showing the forms," Martus said. "We'd like to know the real story about what's going on with these forms."

Martus went on to encourage Faculty Senate members to do what they can in their individual departments to make the forms available to students.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said that the decision to share the evaluations with students is up to the individual faculty members. He added that an individual department cannot decide to make the forms available to students because it is illegal according to a state law.

Martus pointed out that faculty and course evaluations are open to students on the Worcester campus.

Last night Bromery said, "The University in general cannot be an agent in providing this information.

"Students are asking for a double standard," he said, since student records cannot be shown to any one but the student.

However, Jim Starr, a staff attorney for the Legal Services Office recently said in a statement, "The professor evaluation is not personal to the professor, it did not originate in her-him, and yet it is information to which she-he as well as certain others have access.

"For these reasons, it is not data or information which has been traditionally defined as being confidential personnel information .. it is not information which belongs to the professor personally," he continued.

The statement came from a report on course and teacher evaluation forms prepared by the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER).

According to Bromery, the solution to the problem would be to have each student fill out two evaulation forms. One would be included in the personnel record of the faculty member, and the other would be made available to students.

Professor George N. Sulznes reported on the Board of Trustees meeting which took place Wednesday. He said the Board voted favorable on a cost of living adjustment in faculty salaries.

This adjustment, he said, would consist of an $850 increase to the base pay of faculty salaries, but an increase of only $500 in their paychecks.

Sulzner said, "This is complicated because we are dealing with classified staff and changing job qualifications," for the staff. He added that faculty members should not expect more money in their paychecks before Christmas.

The Board of Trustees also voted favorably on a five year capital outlay program, the joining of the Leisure Studies Program with the Landscape Architecture Department, a tuition waiver for teaching assistants and foreign graduate students on the basis of needs, and to reaffirm the negative check system for MassPIRG.

The Program and Budget Council of the Faculty Senate presented its annual report. The purpose of this council is to advise in the campus budget process and to review budget proposals before they are approved by the administration. The Space and Calendar Committee also presented its annual report. The purpose of this committee is to determine the academic calendar.

Results pending in faculty elections

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Staff at the state Labor Relations Commission in Boston are today counting the ballots from the two-day election to determine whether or not faculty will unionize here, and University administrators are considering the possible consequences.

If faculty decide to unionize, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said, "the University just must go on; it will just have to be a different structure."

"The thing is the administration is going to have to act more like managers than academic 'administrators'," Bromery said last night. "The difficult thing is we have only industrial models to work from," he said.

Bromery said the most significant change will be in 'mind concern.' "There is going to have to be collective thought. Just look the word up in the dictionary. Union means people as a group and not as individuals."

"The biggest thing is that there has to be a new cohesive communication between faculty at Boston and here," said Bromery.

"I can't see faculty senate and union existing together," Bromery said. "It would be a real inconvenience."

"Actually, I don't know what unionization is going to mean for myself and the Amherst campus. We're all in twilight zone since the negotiations are going to be conducted through the president's office and Board of Trustees," said Bromery.

Talking about reorganization of higher education in the Commonwealth, Bromery said the unionization of UMass will probably make some form of the reorganization easier. Bromery said the unionization of UMass would have some kind of impact on what the reorganization will be like.

"The union groups people together and reorganization will be easier because of it," said Bromery.

"The whole thing with the union is that you're losing the flexibility of dealing with individuals. You have to work with 'groups'," Bromery said. "But remember, the votes haven't all been counted."

The results of the unionization elections both here and at the UMass Boston campus will be released later today. The Labor Relations Commission was scheduled to begin counting the ballots at 10 a.m. this morning.

Faculty and staff at both campuses voted the last two days to decide whether to have a union, and if so, to choose between the American Association of University Professors and the National Education Association as their representative agent.

Faculty at Amherst would be represented by an Amherst branch of AAUP or the NEA'a Massachusetts Society of Professors.

Boston faculty would be represented by a Boston branch of the AAUP or the NEA's Massachusetts Teachers Association.

'Stacking' up the Grad Senate

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Q. Would you explain, briefly what the Graduate Senate is?

A. The Grad Senate is one of the four governance units, senates, on campus (graduate, undergraduate, faculty, and the PAUMA senates). They are recognized by the trustees, viv-a-vis the governance documents.

Q. When, how often, and where do you usually meet?

A. The senate meets weekly on Monday nights at 7, somewhere in the Campus Center, except for the first Monday of the month, where there's a conflict with the Graduate Council of the Faculty Senate.

Q. What activities and programs do the Grad Senate sponsor?

A. We don't have an RSO. We sponsor many organizations which are themselves RSO. We give money to the Transit, the Collegian, the child care system, Outfront, and numbers of other groups. They may be services, like child care or off-campus housing or CAOS, or special projects; projects for women in graduate school, political projects.

Q. How is the Graduate Senate funded?

A. We collect the Graduate Student Tax, $13 per semester. It's substantially less than the undergraduates' tax. It's a fee that graduate students pay on the same basis as the Undergraduate tax.

Q. How many grad students are there?

A. In the vicinity of 5000. Graduate students are organized mainly around departments rather than dorms. We have a program called revenue sharing which disperses a maximum of $200 per semester, to graduate student organizations within departments.

Q. How many people are involved in the Grad Senate itself?

A. There are four officers, and presently 65 senators.

Q. How does one become a senator?

A. You are elected in your department by other graduate students. You get one senator for every fifty graduate students who pay the Grad Student Tax, up to a maximum of three senators per department and any number of alternates the department may choose to elect.

In addition we recognize Prince House. This is a group of graduate students who live on campus.

Q. Do you feel that the Grad Senate has an effect on the average grad student?

A. It's hard to say. We determine, for example, how much the fee is, so in that sense we have an affect on what the graduate student pays. We affect what services are available by choosing which groups to fund.

In many cases RSO groups and services are available to graduate students, whether or not we fund them. Part of that is because graduate students also pay the Campus Center fee. Many RSO groups have space in the Campus Center, so in a sense graduate students, by paying are contributing, at least to the rent of the building.

We've talked only about money issues up to now. There are other, very important functions of the Graduate Student Senate. One is, as a governance body, to take positions on issues.

For example, we're working on the administrative withdrawal procedure. There was one inacted by the trustees, last summer, I believe, which affects graduate students and undergraduates. But it was by accident that it came to include graduate students. It was originally intended to affect undergraduates only. Or it had been intended to include graduate students but by accident they forgot to bring it before either the graduate dean or to tell Gage, who at that time looked at it and whose understanding was that it applied only to undergraduates, or to tell us in the Grad Senate.

So we in the Grad Senate, in conjunction with the people in the Faculty Senate, are working up an alternative motion, for graduate students, which the Graduate Student Senate will pass as a primary responsibility motion and send to the Trustees.

The Wellman Document specifies that each of the Senates will have a certain area of primary responsibility.

The faculty had it in terms of academics, to select what new courses are and what faculty standards are. Students have primary responsibility for regulations pertaining to them, and ways in which student monies are dispersed. That will change then, the conditions under which a graduate student can be administratively withdrawn, from the conditions which presently exist.

Q. It sounds like the graduate students are in a minority and that they lack rights, is this true?

A. We're one of the invisible populations on campus. The student affairs area, which administers financial aid and placement, among other things, had traditionally been quite insensitive to either our needs or our existence.

I've met with administrators time and time again and said

"Look, we're here." Student Affairs and Financial Aid, Placement are all supposed to be responsive to graduate students' needs and responsible for providing services. We never got too far with that. The Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Robert L. Woodbury, has talked with us and seems to be more responsive than they have been in the past, I haven't seen any action though.

My role often here, where I'm dealing with those kinds of issues, is having always to be sort of the big-mouth-bitch who has to remind people ... and repeat it, so whenever these people see me come into a room, they'll think graduate student. I'm the only one who's making those noises.

The other thing I wanted to mention about what the senate does is its place for graduate students to talk to one anther from different departments. Too often, graduate students talk with and meet only students from their own department. There are very few programs that bring graduate students together. So we try and spend some of the time in our meetings in just open talk; you know, what's going on, what's happening in your department.

Barbara Stack

Q. Do you find a lack of response, or apathy in grad students?

A. There is a lack of response, and you can call it apathy, but I think there's a structural reason for it. Graduate students are expected, in many departments among traditional academic people, to make a very great sacrifice during their years as a graduate student, to put all their energy into their years as a graduate student, it's supposed to be real dedication, so that anything that they seem to be doing that's outside of their academic world is seen to be irresponsible, that they're just fooling around, and they're not doing what they should be doing, that's one.

Two, it furthermore seems trouble making. It's part of the apprenticeship system where you work with a small number of faculty, you're supposed to make them feel like they're "in the know" and you're going to learn from them, and that you don't have any interests of your own, that they know best what's for you.

Therefore if you're politically active and you claim there are certain issues that the graduate students' positions differ from the faculty positions, that's suspect. It gets people into trouble; there have been a significant number of graduate students who have been politically active and have suffered pretty severe consequences. It's not often overt acts like saying, "you've done this, this is bad," but like a little less good recommendations, or your work could be seen as less good, or they won't get a key assignment that they want. Things are very strange that way, it's not cut and dry as much as undergraduates expectations are. It's much more subtle for graduate students. It can be in terms of student research, how hard it sort of pushes to get you a job ... it's a long haul and you never really know how you stand.

Part of the dynamic is that you need people to say, "Yeah, you're doing okay." If that's being withheld, you really feel very insecure. That's the reason many people drop out, and partly the reason why women don't make it, which is a fact. Because the faculty is male.

The faculty tends to see women as less serious and less talented than men. So women have to work twice as hard to create the same impression. And even if they are seen as as good, men really don't know how to respond to them in the ways they relate to other men, who they can take under their wing and sort of act as mentor for.

So women have a much roughter time. It's gone from 37 to, currently 38 per cent of graduate students are women. Fewer percentage of that 37 finally get their degree, fewer percentage of those people actually get funded, with TA's and RA's (teaching and research assistantships), fewer women in the graduating class. More women proportionately, than men, are going for their masters as opposed to their doctorates. Therefore when they go out to look for that teaching job there are fewer women looking. You get a much smaller proportion of women teaching in the lower faculty ranks.

The system continues to weed out women, so you have some ridiculous figure like two per cent of professors are women. It's something that begins in early schools, is accelerated through high school, where women tend to be encouraged in different areas, or discouraged more than men in certain areas. Undergraduate education does, so that at the entry level there are fewer women entering.

Q. What's your position in the Grad Senate, and how long have you held it?

A. I'm Secretary of the Grad Senate. I was elected last May, I believe. Last year I was President, the year before that I was Vice-President, and the year before that I was a senator. This is my fifth year as a grad student and as a person in the senate.

Q. Why did you step down from the Presidency?

A. There hasn't been a case where someone's been elected two years in a row. Though I think I could have run and won. I certainly wouldn't want it again. There are lots of reasons why not.

First of all it's an incredible sacrifice, in terms of the time. I couldn't do that, stay with that for more than a year.

There was also someone else coming along who I felt would be really good as President, who I wanted to work with.

I knew a whole lot and I knew it would be much easier if I brought what I had learned as President to the Executive Committee, as one of the officers, rather than trying to tell them everything I knew in one day.

I guess I was intrigued, I didn't want to drop it yet, I still wanted to see how things turned out, see what we could do with another year of building on it. And I never got it together to find anything else to do.

Q. What are your responsibilities as secretary?

A. The responsibilities don't go with the title. What happens is, people get elected, those who end up officers sit down together and say, "well what needs to be done, what does each of us think we're good at, what does each of us want to do."

So what I'm doing now as secretary is very similar to what I had done before when I was vice-president. My primary responsibilities are things like elections and materials that go out for elections, committee appointments, doing all the paperwork.

I also read the committee minutes. We don't have many internal committees; we have the Executive Committee and we have the finance Committee, but we make appointments to the Committees of the Faculty Senate. And each of the principle administrators on campus, the Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and the Provost have advisory committees, which seek graduate students.

All those appointments of graduate students are processed by the Graduate Student Senate, as official representatives of graduate students, so that they (the committees) can't just pick out an arbitrary graduate student and call that student representative. The way things end up when administrators pick their own graduate student is they pick people who are sympathetic to their own cause, graduate students who may be working for the administrator.

I also do all of the advertising, sort of Outreach efforts. I do projects which are really not part of my job description. This is the second year of a special program for graduate women. I am part of a body that meets and makes decisions and does the work. I mean you could say that I don't have to do it but I'm a liaison with the senate, and I'm interested in it and I know a lot about graduate students. That takes up a lot of my time.

Earth Foods reopens today

By RICHARD E. BARRELL
Collegian Staff

Earth Foods will reopen today after being closed Wednesday by the assistant director of the Campus Center for violating University health regulations.

Bernard F. Wilkes, Jr. said the staff of the vegetarian restaurant had done a fine clean-up job and is now in compliance with University rules.

Wilkes said he inspected all Campus Center food service areas on Wednesday with George H. Reed Jr. of the Environmental Health and Safety Division of the University Health Services.

Hardest hit by the inspection were Earth Foods and the People's Market alternative grocery store, both in the Student Union.

Wilkes said "spot checks" of all eating and food preparation areas are a part of his job. "This is the first chance I have had this semester for Mr. Reed and I to make these inspections," he said.

They will be made more often in the future, he added.

Wilkes said he ordered Earth Foods to close after its noon meal on Wednesday. After reinspecting the operations Wilkes found Earth Foods in compliance with health regulations.

He cited poor organization in the kitchen area, a general lack of cleanliness in the kitchen, and lack of aprons and hair nets as the major reasons for closing Earth Foods. He also cited a lack of places for employes to store personal belongings such as coats and books, a problem he also found in the Bluewall kitchen, he said.

At the People's Market, Wilkes said he found a general lack of cleanliness, conditions which he said are now remedied.

Floors and refrigerators need to be cleaned more often, said Wilkes. He said the market's handling of fresh fish, uncovered bread and open cream cheese are examples of improper food handling.

Specifically, unwrapped bread was being handled by customers, and fresh fish was being frozen for storage, Wilkes said. These, he said, are unsanitary practices.

Wilkes said he asked the People's Market to discontinue selling bagels and cream cheese since they are sold in the Hatch and the Coffee shop. The policy of the Campus Center is that priority for sale of items be given to those who contribute to paying Campus Center deficit fees. The People's Market does not contribute, according to Wilkes.

Wilkes, who asked Reed to accompany him on the inspections to provide expertise, said training for student food handling employes must be instituted. He said the administration should place a higher priority on funds for this purpose.

Wilkes said he is working with Reed to obtain training for student employes. Both men said they feel food handling on campus must be done carefully, since large numbers of people are in a small area, and the possibility of contagion from those students who might be exposed to contagion while doing laboratory work exists.

According to spokespeople for both Earth foods and the People's Market, efforts to comply with Wilkes' and Reed's findings are in effect.

Nancy Kern, speaking for the People's Market, said the staff got together to remedy the complaints.

Larry Geller, spokesperson for Earth Foods, said employes would work harder to complete necessary cleaning. Both said they expected no problems in complying with the regulations.

Jack McGill, food service director for the Campus Center, said few violations were found in the Hatch, Bluewall, and Coffee Shop.

"We make our own regular inspections", he said, "and spend about 30 per cent of our time cleaning."

McGill said lockers or some other secured area is needed for Bluewall employes to store their belongings.

Presently, employes store their things in the kitchen. Reed cited this is unsafe and unsanitary, and suggested we put in lockers, McGill said.

Cleaning requested by Reed and Wilkes in the Bluewall will be done during intersession, McGill said. "We will be cleaning duct work and steam cleaning the Bluewall's beer-soaked rug," he said.

U.S. defense appropriation to increase

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

A U.S. Department of Defense spokesperson told a group of about 50 ROTC students and faculty yesterday that despite the Carter Administration and a Democratic Congress, next year's defense budget will be "at least $120 billion," an increase of $8 billion over this year.

Speaking in the Campus Center, Donald G. Sanders said that his "overriding responsibility" as Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs in the Senate is to "secure passage of the total defense budget."

Sanders said President-elect Jimmy Carter has recently begun to see that it is "illusory to think there are huge chunks of money lying around that could save billions" if they are cut out of the defense budget.

"Carter and his advisors will take a more realistic view," he said, adding, "I don't think you can take five or seven per cent out without hurting national security." During his campaign for the presidency, Carter said he would cut the defense budget by five per cent.

Sanders also said that due to the high cost of maintaining active armed forces, "there is a more important role coming for the reserves and National Guard; if there's another war they better be prepared to go." This doesn't apply to ROTC students, because they are part of the inactive Obligated Reserves System.

Sanders repeatedly stressed the importance of keeping pace with the Soviet Union. He said if pension allocations are subtracted from our present defense budget, the "Soviet Union's military budget exceeds ours by 50 per cent." More weapons would protect us from intimidation as well as attack, according to Sanders.

One listener questioned the value of the low-flying B-1 Bomber because "the Russians will just develop low-level radar." The U.S. has already developed low-level radar. Sanders said, "Some of those airplanes are going to get through."

Another listener said the arms race would "eventually bankrupt both countries," and someone asked if "the military pushes these things just to stay in business." Sanders told him, "our military leaders are responsible people."

Sanders said the U.S. could save money by pulling troops out of Europe and Korea, but added this was for the State Department to decide. "We don't make foreign policy, we enforce it," he explained.

Before going to the Department of Defense in 1975, Sanders worked for the Atomic Energy Commission as a Senior Program Analyst for the study of security of privately-owned nuclear power plants. He said he worked on a study which concluded that it is industry's responsibility to protect privately-owned nuclear power plants from terrorists.

Ex-sports editors win top positions

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Ronald J. Arena, 20, was elected editor-in-chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian last night in the campus paper's annual election.

Arena, a junior journalism-English major from North Attleboro, said he was looking forward to a "busy, demanding year" as editor-in-chief.

Robert J. Higgins, 21, of Cohaset, was elected managing editor, and Anthony P. Armelin, 21, of Revere, won business manager.

Filing the remaining spots were Bernard T. Davidow, a 20-year-old journalism-English major from Trumbull, Conn., who was unopposed in his try for news editor; William A. Sundstrom, an 18-year-old CAS major from Storrs, Ct., was elected executive editor; and Judith M. Van Handle, 20, a junior Communications Studies major from South Hadley was elected sports editor.

Jay A. Saret, 20, of Newton, was elected photo editor and Mark A. Leccese, 18, a journalism-English major from Burlington gained a second ballot victory as Fine Arts (Below the Salt) editor.

In the only election held for a non-editorship position, Melanie J. Johnson, 21, of Simsbury, Conn. was elected women's coordinator.

"I am looking forward to the coming year," said the victorious Arena, last night. "I feel I can do a lot for the paper in the coming year."

The election for editor-in-chef took two ballots after none of the original three candidates secured more than 50 per cent of the vote the first time.

The candidate with the least amount of votes, Mary L. Brown, was dropped from the balloting.

In the second ballot, Arena defeated Gerald F. Rogers by a vote of 66 to 42 to capture the top position.

Higgins said last night he was looking forward to his managing editor job as a "big challenge." He said he would like to "open the paper up for more creativity as well as get more people involved."

Armelin related his new job as business manager to his major of marketing, saying that he planned to approach the job from a marketing standpoint rather than a strictly business angle.

"I'd like to get the business office and the ad department into the promotion part of the business, getting into the promotion of ad sales," he said.

Armelin said he wanted to stress that he wants a harmonious relationship between the editorial and business parts of the paper.

One of the major points of Davidow's speech was that he would like to try to incorporate more national and international news on the first three pages, traditionally reserved for primarily campus-related events.

He also said he would be instituting a system of mandatory weekly meetings with his assistants.

The only editor who announced their assistants for the coming year was Leccese, who said E. Patrick McQuaid and Deborah Schafer would be helping him in his job as Fine Arts Editor.

Van Handle was the victor in a race that had the most candidates — sports. She soundly defeated all three opponents on the first ballot to become the only woman on the new board of editors.

That situation may change, however, if one of the proposals of the new women's coordinator becomes policy. Johnson, in her acceptance speech, proposed that the women's coordinator be given a vote on the board of editors.

The closest election was that of executive editor, where Sundstrom defeated Lisa E. Melilli by only four votes. Sundstrom said after the election he was sorry it had to be so close, but that he was very happy to have been elected.

Field predicts CC fee rise

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

Dean of Students William F. Field predicted that the Campus Center fee will probably go up next fall semester due to a cost of living and bonus salary increase for Campus Center employes.

Field said last night at the Board of Governers (BOG) meetigg that the increase could be absorbed by profit oriented offices on campus, such as the Hatch and Conference Services, but that some increase for students is likely.

In other action, BOG member Lyon Miller resigned and the board heard comments on the Campus Center pet policy.

The policy is arbitrarily enforced, according to William Staub, a student and dog owner at the University. Staub said he has been "bothered everyday this week," by campus police and the Campus Center Dog Catcher, and was arrested today for walking his dog "Radio" through the Campus Center.

"This dog is on a leash and doesn't bother anybody or any food", said Staub. "He's always at my heels.I'm responsible for him".

Staub said unleashed dogs in the Campus Center come up to Radio in the Campus Center concourse, "and they're the dogs who should be taken out of the building".

The BOG has approved the current dog policy and put it into effect, but it promised to form a task force to look at the problem and perhaps create a leash law in designated areas of the building for dogs and other animals on leashes.

According to Campus Center Manager Bud Wilkes, the People's Market and Earthfoods will continue to operate normally because health violations in those food preparation areas have been cleared up. "They will continue to operate on their normal schedules today", said Wilkes.

Also on the Board's agenda is the search for a new director for the Campus Center. An organizational meeting will be held this morning at 8 in Whitmore Administration building. The meeting is closed, and only members of the Director Search Committee are allowed to attend the meeting. More than 200 names are to be considered for the position.

HRTA class celebrates the end of a semester

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

Seventy University students stood by and watched as their Cherries Jubilee was set ablaze before them, a fitting end to their "Flaming Finale" dinner last night in the Campus Center.

The dinner was the culmination of Professor Frank Lattuca's Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration 267 class, "Quality Food Service Production Management."

The dessert of Cherries Jubilee was set aflame before being served amidst and applause of those in attendence. It consisted of cherries with thick corn sauce ladled on ice cream, which was served in a champagne glass and, for the "finale", flamed with warm brandy.

How good was the "Flaming Finale" dinner? Worth the price, $4.50, if you ask me. The London-broiled steak was slightly hard to cut (I didn't have a steak knife) but still tasty.

The Carrots a la Orange, the sauce of which, according to one of the student chefs, is made from grated orange peals, was cooked to perfection. So was the Risi Bisi, rice mixed with peas, ham and parmentoes, and baked with garlic.

According to Lattuca, HRTA 267 is offered every semester. This semester there were 90 students enrolled in the course, which has the sole requirement that students attend the lab sessions, held four times per week in the Chenoweth Laboratory.

"HRTA is not a mere cooking course," Lattuca stressed. "The thrust of the course is showing students how to plan, organize, and work together in serving the public," he said.

"During the semester, the cooking is in fairly small quantities in a lab," Lattuca said.

"The semester was a very good one," beamed Lattuca, "because many students had the necessary ingredient, and that is enthusiasm."

"You've got to enjoy serving other human beings and seeing their comfort," he said. "If they (students) can't do this, they aren't for the industry of serving people."

According to Lattuca, two other courses in the HRTA field of study include HRTA 156, the basic course, and HRTA 311, for students desiring additional practial experience, including Russian service, French service, buffet service, and other finer points of guestronomy.

The dinner began with appetizers of "shrub", a combination of apple cider and lime sherbert, and garden salad, which is Boston lettuce with chicory, onions, tomatoes and cucumbers. The salad and shrub were very good, and, as Lattuca pointed out, would make a refreshing appetizer or dessert on a hot summer day.

By the way, the Cherries Jubilee was terrific.

NEAG president terms director as ineffective

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

James West, Northeast area director, was criticized last night as being ineffective in meeting area student needs, by Northeast Area Government (NEAG) President John Weisse.

Weiss accused West of attempting to co-opt area funds without adequate input from students at the NEAG meeting.

West established the N.E.-Sylvan Business Committee last month. The committee was set up with the proposal that for every cent the N.E.-Sylvan Area Office puts towards certain programs for the N.E.-Sylvan area, each area government would match that amount.

Feeling that West, "says cooperation but means co-option" in regards to the pooling of committee funds, Weisse said he was discouraged by the results of the meeting of the committee last week.

Several members, Weisse among them, said that the programs have been pre-selected by West and his staff and therefore did not allow student input for the actual spending of their funds.

Two members of the body said that representatives from NEAG should attend all meetings of the N.E.-Sylvan Business Committee to monitor proceedings and report back to the body about any spending that is proposed which should receive student input.

There will be a general election held in the Quad to fill the position of president of NEAG, due to the resignation of Weisse, announced last weekend effective the end of the semester.

Nomination papers are available from room 103 Johnson House or room 406 Thatcher House, and are due Dec. 9. The election will be held Dec. 13 in Northeast Area dorms. Job descriptions will also be available.

It was announced at the meeting that Lewis House is sponsoring the movie, "The Last Detail", on Sat., Dec. 4, in the Student Union Ballroom.

The last NEAG meeting of the semester will be Dec. 9 in Thatcher House at 6:15 p.m. and is open to all Northeast Area Residents.

3 receive larceny charges, probation

By E.S. KENT

Two UMass students and one Springfield resident were tried yesterday in Northampton District Court for shoplifting from the University store.

All three, charged with larceny under $100, were given continuances without findings, put on three months probation, and assessed $25 in court costs by Judge Edwin P. Dunphy.

Theodore P. Stein, 66 Townhouse Apts., Amherst, was accused of taking two magazines, each of which cost $1.50. Stein failed to appear for arraignment so a warrant was issued for his arrest. He did appear for trial yesterday.

James D. Laster, 318 Kennedy Towers, was charged with taking a duffel bag worth $12.95 from the store.

Springfield resident Joseph L. Spinks, a non-student, was accused of taking a $1.95 duffel bag.

So far this semester, 125 persons have been caught shoplifting from the University.

It's room choosing time

The following is an explanation of the upcoming residence hall room choosing procedures and the first half of a listing of the dormitories at UMass to aid students contemplating a move:

Room Choosing in the residence halls will be held next week and will follow this schedule:

Monday — Students who wish to remain in the rooms they are currently occupying may sign up with their Heads of Residence on this day.

Tuesday — Students who wish to move to available space within the residence hall they are currently residing in may sign up with the Head of Residence on this day.

Wednesday — All students wishing to move to a residence hall other than the one they are currently residing in may sign up with a Head of Residence on this day.

Friday — All students currently residing off campus who wish to move on campus for the Spring 1977 semester may sign up with a Head of Residence on this day.

Students should not sign up for more than one room. By doing so, students are taking the chance of not receiving any of their choices.

Any questions concerning Room Choosing should be directed to the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore, 545-2100.

The campus offers many alternatives within the system. Most of the information included was received from Heads of Residence in each dorm. Further information and answers to questions regarding room choosing policies and dorm policies should be directed to them, and their numbers are available in the student directory.

The list was compiled by the staff of the Office of Residential Resource Management, and any information regarding the list or its accuracy should be directed there. For all students that are thinking about moving, we hope this list will be valuable to you, and any student who may be remaining in his-her dorm, this could be a helpful guide to the resources available to you.

Room choosing is Monday the 6th thru Friday the 10th of December, so this weekend would be a good time to start thinking about next semester and where you're going to live.

The Life and Times of Frederick Douglass

On Monday, December 6, 1976, Frederick Douglass comes to Amherst by way of the Center for Racial Understanding, the Malcolm X Room, and the Five College Lecture Fund Committee. Arthur Napier Burghart will give a live performance of the outstanding Black spokesman of the 19th century. Burghart shares with you his Bicentennial gift to America.

Arthur Burghart, a man of many talents, is an actor who has appeared in motion pictures, repertory theatre, both on Broadway and Off Broadway plays. "Cotton Comes to Harlem" and Network motion pictures are to his credit. He has performed in a variety of plays like: Baraka's "The Slave", "Dutchman", Shakespeare's "Richard III", "King Lear", O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh", "Emperor Jones" and many many more.

Douglass, born into slavery, named Frederick Augustus Washington Bailey in Tuckahoe, Maryland in 1817. At eight he was sent to Baltimore to work for one of his master's relatives. In 1837, he fled from his owners to avoid capture he dropped his two middle names and changed his last name.

At a meeting of the Massachusetts Antislavery Society in 1841, Douglass told what freedom meant to him. The audience was so impressed that the society hired him to lecture about his experiences as a slave.

During the early 1840's, Douglass protested against segregated seating on railroad trains by sitting in cars reserved for whites. He had to be dragged from the white cars. Douglass also protested against religious discrimination. He once walked out of a church that kept blacks from taking part in a service until all the whites had finished participating.

"Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass", an autobiography, was published in 1845. Douglass feared that this identity as a runaway slave would be revealed when the book was published, so he went to England that same year. In England, he continued to speak against slavery. He also found friends who raised enough money to buy his freedom. Upon his return to the United States in 1847, he founded an antislavery newspaper, the "North Star" in Rochester, N.Y.

Douglass charged that employers hired white immigrants before they would hire Black Americans. He accused even some abolitionist businesses of job discrimination against Negroes. He led a successful attack against segregated schools in Rochester.

Arthur Burghart's stimulating live performance will take place in the Southwest Center of the Performing Arts at 8 p.m. It is free and open to the public.

The Center of the Performing Arts is located in the Southwest Residential College, Hampden Student Center at UMass, Amherst. For further information call Ken Hale at 545-0472.

Boston Conference on repression

A conference on "Repression and Resistance of Third World Communities in the United States" will be held today and tomorrow, sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee and several other New England and Boston community groups.

According to the organizers, this "Bicentennial" year has been marked by events, exhibits, and festivals stressing the "melting pot" nature of our society, but this year is no different from other years when efforts by people of color toward community and justice have met repressive responses. The conference will be held tonight at the Church of the Convenant, and tomorrow at Arlington Street Church, both in downtown Boston. Speakers, workshops and cultural events will be featured.

William Worthy, journalist, columnist for the Afro-American newspaper and author of "The Rape of Our Neighborhoods," will speak tonight, at 8:00, giving "An Overview of Repression in the United States." In "The Rape of Our Neighborhoods," Worthy provides a timely investigation of the widespread practice of institutional expansionism, revealing ways big business, government agencies, hospitals, universities, and churches are guilty of destroying viable neighborhoods with plans for new and unneeded facilities. In his book, Worthy uses his own experience as a springboard, telling how he and a small group of persistent fellow tenants fought a five-year battle to prevent their New York apartment building from being replaced by a 27-car parking lot for Columbus Hospital employes. To prove this wide-spread expansionist trend, Worthy documents other community battles throughout the country. Worthy will speak at the Church of the Covenant, corner of Berkeley and Newbury Sts. (Arlington MBTA stop), Boston.

"Bacchanal, Parts I & II" will be performing by the National Center for Afro-American Artists Ethnic Dance Companies, under the direction of George Howard, tonight at 10:00 at the Church of the Covenant, corner of Berkeley and Newbury Sts. (Arlington MBTA stop), Boston and tomorrow afternoon at 3:00 at the Arlington St. Church, corner of Boylston and Arlington Sts. (Arlington MBTA stop), Boston.

Workshops will be held tomorrow at the Arlington St. Church, corner of Boylston and Arlington Sts. (Arlington MBTA stop) at 10:30 to noon and 1:00 to 2:30. Topics include unemployment, social service cut-backs vs. military spending, political opposition to desegregation by busing, police surveillance, Native American land cases, sterilization abuse, undocumented workers, and Puerto Rican independence.

Sponsors of the conference include Third World Jobs Clearinghouse, the Black Ecumenical Commission, Packard Manse, Tchuba, Melvin H. King, state representative, and the American Friends Service Committee.

Shomberg fights NY Library

The New York Public Library has been charged by a citizens group with intending to shut down the Schomberg Center for Research in Black Culture, one of the world's important repositories of Black history.

The group, the Citizens Coalition to Save the Schomberg Center, accuses the NYPL of gradually whittling away the research institute's staff, part of an overall plan to eventually close the center entirely.

In the past year, two major staff members — the archivist and the acquisitions librarian — have been summarily dismissed, despite the objections of Schomberg's curator Jean Blackwell Hutson.

In May, 1975, archivist Laurore St. Juste was refused renewed tenure, although he had been with the center two years. A native of Haiti, Mr. Juste was director of the Haitian National Archives for more than 20 years.

After receiving his dismissal, Mr. Juste filed a complaint with the New York Human Rights Commission, charging the NYPL's all-white administration with racial discrimination. A decision in the case is pending.

Keith Kern, Schomberg's acquisitions librarian, was dismissed this May with less than 24-hours advance notification. Employed at the center for two years before his discharge, Mr. Kern has extensive knowledge of resources and materials in African, West Indian and Afro-American history and literature.

He has also filed a complaint with the New York Human Rights Commission. However, in addition, Mr. Kern has filed a complaint with the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, charging the NYPL, its director, John Cory, and its head of personnel, Willaim Wilkinson, with refusing him tenure because he defended Mr. St. Juste. Both men were fired with no reasons ever presented.

Expanding his personal complaint, Mr. Kern also charged the NYPL with continually discriminating against the 50-year-old Schomberg Research Center and its employees in allocating funds, employment practices, and maintenance of the building.

The Library Guild, Local 1930 of District Council 37, AFSCME, AFL-CIO, has taken up the defense to the two employees by filing grievance petitions with the American Arbitration Association.

Soweto leader to speak at S.U.B.

Tseitsi Mashinini, the 19 year old organizer of the Soweto student uprising will speak at University of Massachusetts-Amherst next week. Mr. Mashinini, the former president of the Soweto Student Representative Council, will speak on the "Revolutionary Role of Black Students of Azania" at the Student Union Ballroom at 2:00 p.m. on Wednesday, December 8, 1976.

All the world is aware of the national uprisings in Azania of last September. What was never clear from the reports of the western news media was just who were these young Africans who seemed so unafraid of the lethal military force of the Afrikaner army? Who organized and kept the demonstrations going despite the murderous response from the police and army? Where, since all black political leadership was supposed to be in jail or exile, did the skill and militant leadership of the demonstrators come from?

The answer to all these questions are beginning to emerge: a new generation of young black students acting within an organization called South African Student Organization (SASO), patterned after the American student movement of the 'sixties,' under a program of "black consciousness" was the agent of the uprisings. Only now is the story of the courage, dedication and sacrifice of these young people being told. (Over three hundred students were killed, some no more than ten or twelve years of age.)

Currently on tour of the United States are Jeff Baqwa and Tsietsi Mashinini of SASO. They will only be here for a few weeks, and represent a unique opportunity for American students to get a first hand picture of conditions and events in South Africa during and after the uprisings.

Tsietsi Mashinini is the symbol of the uprising. A young student, he was president of the Soweto Student Council where the uprising began. He became a legend as he travelled from township to township organizing demonstrations. He also became the subject of an intense nation-wide manhunt, the top priority for South African security forces, but was never caught. He was hidden by the black community, and his series of escapes from police traps and continued work became a focal issue between the students and the white authorities.

Black Man Black Woman Workshop

On Saturday, December 4, from 11:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m., on the 2nd floor New Africa House, there will be a workshop to deal with the relationships between Black men and Black women on campus sponsored by the Third World Women's Center and Afro-Am Society. The purpose of the workshop is to begin to bridge the gap of communication that many people have expressed concern about. This has been fostered by disunifying elements on campus and in this society

THE PURPOSE IS NOT TO PROVIDE A SITUATION WHERE INDIVIDUALS WILL BE PERSONALLY ATTACKED AND OTHERS WILL SIMPLY VENT THEIR EMOTIONS. We hope for the workshop to conclude with people pooling ideas for constructive actions to be taken. This workshop has the potential of being a positive and viable tool if the community actively participates.

Appeal sought by Gilmore's mom

SALT LAKE CITY (UP) — Garv Gilmore's mother yesterday asked the Utah Supreme Court to stay her son's execution until she can appeal to federal court.

A petition signed by Bessie Gilmore of Milwaukee, Ore., was filed with the state's highest court less than four full days before Gilmore's scheduled execution at sunrise Monday.

"Bessie Gilmore, mother of Gary Gilmore, hereby petitions this honorable court to stay the execution of the death sentence imposed upon the defendant Gilmore now scheduled to be carried out Monday, Dec. 6," the request said.

"Said stay of execution is sought in order that the undersigned petitioner may file and pursue a petition for writ of certiorari to the U.S. Supreme Court seeking a review of the order of this court dated Nov. 10."

That was the day Gilmore appeared before the five justices and convinced them to quash an appeal filed by two of his fired lawyers so he could die.

The motion was filed by Richard Giauque of Salt Lake City and Anthony Amsterdam of Stanford University Law School, who has been representing opponents of capital punishment before the U.S. Supreme Couut.

The move by Mrs. Gilmore was the first of several legal actions expected from anti-death penalty forces, who described the Gilmore case as "a circus."

Officials of the American Civil Liberties Union met with local lawyers and conferred with attorneys in New York and Washington throughout the day, trying to decide whether to go to the U.S. Supreme Court or the U.S. District Court for Utah.

Soviet leaders promise no tests of Carter's ability

PLAINS, Ga. (UPI) — President-elect Jimmy Carter has been assured at least twice by Soviet leaders that they will not test him the way they did John F. Kennedy, a spokesman said yesterday.

Carter press secretary Jody Powell said outgoing Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, just back from Moscow, called Carter Wednesday to relay personal assurances that ther would be no tests from Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev.

Powell said Carter had received "a similar message from other sources." This presumably was a reference to Averell Harriman, former ambassador to the Soviet Union, who as in Russia this fall. Harriman visited Plains Monday.

In 1961, after Kennedy became president, he faced a Berlin crisis and a clash with Soviet premier Nikita Khrushchev in Vienna - then later, the placemeet of Russian missiles with atomic warheads in Cuba. Kennedy said afterward he felt Khrushchev believed he could take advantage of the young president.

Carter had no appointments or public appearances scheduled yesterday. He will hold his third formal news conference as president-elect at 2:30 p.m. EST.

Powell confirmed that Carter would nominate Thomas B. Lance, Atlanta banker, probably as director of the Office of Management and Budget.

In keeping with his often stated intention of making nominations to "clusters" of related offices, Carter also may announce nominations for treasury secretary, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors and assistant secretary of state for economic affairs.

It was learned that A.W. Clausen, 53, a Republican and chairman of the Bank of America, may be nominated to the treasurv.

His acceptance, however, may depend on Carter's statement that he will impose on his appointees tough standards of financial disclosure and prohibition of the "revolving door" practice of officeholders going back and forth between industry and related government posts.

Roll back possible for steel price hike

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The steel industry apparently raised prices to "jump the gun" on possible future price controls, but may have to roll them, back because of weak demand, the White House inflation monitoring agency said yesterday.

"There is some probability that this price increase will not be completely effective," the Council on Wage and Price Stability said.

But the council, issuing a preliminary report on the 6 per cent price increases that took effect Wednesday, drew no final conclusions on the impact of the price hike or what might be done about it.

President-elect Jimmy Carter and some members of Congress have, expressed concern that this, the second increase in five months, would raise the nation's steel bill $500 million in 1977 and boost consumer prices for cars and household appliance.

President Ford has made no comment about the increases. In a potential signal of what a true increase for steel might be worth, he council siad the most competireitive product, reinforcing bars, has risen only 0.5 per cent

Arabs and Israelis wait for Carter to take office

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — A flurry of peace signals from the Arabs and Israel flagged hopes for a Mideast settlement as the United Nations took up the problem once more yesterday. But observers say the name of the game if "waiting for Jimmy Carter."

U.N. sources said the Arabs were readying Mideast settlement proposals for the General Assembly that are much less abrasive than resolutions of recent years, when the primary Arab goal was to isolate and attack Israel.

Statements in recent weeks by leaders of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syria and the Palentine Liberation Organization, as well as by Israel, the United States and the Soviet Union, have raised strong expectations that 1977 will see a serious new effort for a Mideast settlement.

The optimism has been strengthened by the ending of the Lebanese civil war and of the U.S. presidential campaign, both which helped freeze peace negotiations for more than a year.

U.N. diplomats say much of the peace talk seems designed to impress U.S. President-elect Carter about the good intentions of the two sides.

The Arabs especially seem convinced that only the new administration can work out a peace settlement. The U.N. sources say at least part of the Arab "peace offensive" is designed to win over Carter.

In an interview published yesterday by the semiofficial Egyptian newspaper Al Ahram, Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy called on the United States and the Soviet Union to convene the stalled Geneva conference on the Mideast in the first quarter of next year.

"The invitation should be accompanied by definite proposals for achieving an overall settlement," he year.

The invitation should be accompanied by definite proposals for achieving an overall settlement," he said.

His statement came a few hours after Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin was quoted in an interview with France Soir as saying he expects a major Mideast peace initiative next year.

Rabin said Israel is ready to work with its Arab neighbors "on any aspect of economic co-operation" even without a formal settlement, and that Israel is ready to make territorial concessions to the Arabs.

The "peace offensive" began in October at an Arab meeting in Riyadh, where the Saudi rulers brought Egypt and Syria together.

Sadat promptly announced to newsmen and visiting U.S. congressmen that he was ready to return to the Geneva talks without preconditions.

News in Brief

House investigation asked

BOSTON [AP] — A dozen member of the U.S. House including Rep. Paul E. Tsongas, D-Mass., have formally asked the House Committee on Ethics to investigate reports some representatives accepted gifts from South Koreans, his office reported yesterday.

A spokeswoman said the 5th District congressman joined in signing the letter late Wednesday and sending it to the chairman of the Committee on Ethics, Rep. John J. Flynt Jr.

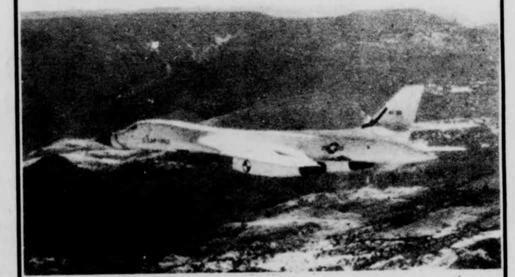
The letter followed reports the FBI was questioning a senior member of the South Korean embassy on allegations the country used money, gifts and campaign contributions to win friends in Congress.

B-1 gets Ford go-ahead

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Ford administration yesterday announced its expected decision to go ahead with the controversial and costly B1 bomber program, but included a provision allowing Jimmy Carter additional time to decide on full production.

Air Force Secretary Thomas C. Reed told a news conference that contracts totaling $704.9 million have been let for the first three production models of the airplane as well as "longlead" items for another eight.

Carter has said he wants to review the program before deciding whether to go ahead.



B-1 Bomber

Terrorists bomb club

FRANKFURT, West Germany [UPI] — A West German terrorist organization said yesterday it bombed the officers club at a U.S. Air Force base injuring 18 persons because it was a staging area for CIA operations.

The organization, which called itself "Revolutionary Cells," also said in letters sent to Western news agencies that it attacked the Rhein-Main base Wednesday because the United States stored atom bombs there and is carrying out poison gas experiments.

The letter said the U.S. base is "a nodal point for the American military bases in Europe, Asia and Africa."

Idi loves Jimmy

CHICAGO [UPI] — Idi Amin, Uganda's military ruler, said he loves President-elect Jimmy Carter, wants good relations with the United States and is prepared to be king of both Scotland and America if the people "want me."

The comments of the controversial Ugandan leader were contained in a telephone interview conducted by columnist Bob Greene and published in yesterday's Chicago Sun-Times.

Amin also announced plans to visit the United States and thinks Carter should pay Uganda a return visit. He advised the president-elect to get rid of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Greene quoted Amin as saying:

"Well, I would like you to pass on a message to the American people. Tell them that I want to have very good relations immediately with President Carter in power.

Mayor indicted in Revere scandal

BOSTON [AP] — Revere Mayor William G. Reinstein and six others were indicted yesterday by a Suffolk County grand jury on charges stemming from the construction of Revere's new $15 million high school.

The others are David Borans, Revere purchasing agent; Robert F. Tobin, chief deputy sheriff of Suffolk County; an unidentified former public official, and three persons identified only as nonpublic employes, according to court sources.

The indictments were ordered sealed until their arraignment Friday before Superior Court Judge Arthur Mason.

Reinstein, 36, mayor since 1972, faces multiple counts of conspiracy, perjury and conflict of interest, the sources said.

"I am completely shocked," Reinstein said in a telephone interview from his home. "I am completely innocent. My career has been ruined."

"This is going to be my last fight, but it will be a fight long remembered," said Reinstein, an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Congress this fall.

Sources said the charges stemmed mainly from the furnishing, electrical appliances and wiring of the new school, which was completed in 1974.

Charges of irregularities in the school's construction came initially from a member of the Revere City Council during Reinstein's 1974 re-election campaign.

Judge charged by Mass. Bar

BOSTON [AP] — Special District Court Judge Margaret C. Scott has been named in more than 40 incidents of alleged improper judicial action in a report by the Massachusetts Bar Association, says the Boston Evening Globe.

The association sent the report in the form of a letter yesterday to Chief Justice Edward J. Hennessey of the state Supreme Court for action if warranted.

Judge Scott was reported on vacation and unavailable for comment.

Hennessey has widely circulated among Massachusetts legal circles his plan to establish a permanent nine-person judicial review commission comprising three lawyers, three judges and three laymen.

The chief justice is expected to name the commissioner later this month, and have it begin operations Feb. 1, on cases of alleged improper judicial behavior.

A bar association spokesman said Attorney Hiller Zobel was retained last September to develop the report involving Judge Scott.

"A letter has been transmitted to the chief justice on the matter," he said. "It is not a filing. It is not accusatory. It just sets forth certain information which has come to our attention."

The spokesman said the next step is up to Hennessey and the high court to determine if the report warrants further action.

Carter will huddle with N.E. governors

ALBANY, N.Y. [UPI] — President-elect Jimmy Carter will meet with seven Northeast governors next Thursday to hear their proposals for federal help in revitalizing the economy of their region, Gov. Hugh Carey's office announced yesterday.

Carey, chairman of the seven-member Coalition of Northeastern Governors, said in a statement that Carter would meet with the governors yesterday afternoon at the Blair House in Washington.

The governors, all Democrats, have drawn up an agenda of federal actions they deem necessary to put the Northeast on an equal economic footing with other regions.

The coalition includes Govs. Brendan Byrne of New Jersey, Ella Grasso of Connecticut, Philip Noel of Rhode Island, Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, Thomas Salmon of Vermont and Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania.

The coalition last weekend sent Carter an outline of their proposals, which were drawn up at a meeting Nov. 13 and 14 in Saratoga Springs.

A major part of the coalition's plan is the creation of a Regional Energy and Development Corp. to spur development of energy resources in the region.

Gun control successful

BOSTON [AP] — Strict state gun control laws are responsible for the dramatic drop in the number of homicides comitted in Boston this year, police said yesterday.

Lt. Det. Jerome P. McCallum, chief of homicide, said 75 murders were reported so far this year compared with 112 on the same date in 1975 and 134 in 1974.

"I would have to say the greatest deterrent has been the new mandatory one-year prison sentence for carrying a gun without a permit," McCallum said referring to the two-year-old Fox-Bartley bill passed by the state legislature.

"A fellow just doesn't carry a gun today because he's afraid of that jail term," the officer added.

Of the homicides, 26 were committed with a handgun and 27 with a knife this year, compared with 50 by handgun and 32 by knife in 1975, McCallum said.

Maine warned on nuke waste

CAMDEN, Maine [UPI] — A nuclear power watchdog group yesterday warned Maine residents to fight any proposals for storing nuclear wastes in the state.

Safe Power for Maine responded to reports that the Energy Research and Development Administration will conduct geological tests in Maine during fiscal year 1977 in a search for safe areas for nuclear waste disposal.

"Maine people will have to raise their voices in protest to ensure that we are not burdened with the enormous risks and responsibilities associated with the storage of radioactive garbage," Safe Power President Cali Hollander said. "I hope that elected officials of the state of Maine will see to it that Maine people have the opportunity to voice their opinions."

School injunction sought

HARTFORD [AP] — Connecticut officials yesterday sought in injunction against town officials of Putnam, where schools have been closed for two days because the town has no budget.

The action would force town officials to spend money to keep schools open for the town's 1,500 pupils.

Under state law, cities and towns cannot spend money for more than 90 days after the end of a fiscal year, if voters have not approved a budget. Wednesday, the 91st day, the schools were closed down and the town's six highway workers were laid off. The public library was closed, too, but the 10 Town Hall employes continued to work without pay, pending the results of a budget referendum Dec. 9.

The latest budget proposal is $2.7 million, $40,000 less than the last one rejected.

Bankruptcy hits Big G

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — The Big G supermarket chain, with stores in three states, yesterday asked permission to operate under protection of the federal bankruptcy court while it works on a $4 million credit problem.

The Pawtucket-based firm's operation has dwindled from two dozen stores to 11 in Rhode Island, Connecticut and Massachusetts. Seven stores closed Monday.

Big G, whose parent firm is Great Scott Food Market, Inc., filed a petition in U.S. Bankruptcy Court seeking a credit arrangement under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy law.

Judge Arthur N. Votolate Jr., scheduled an 11 a.m. Friday hearing on the case. The money problems and approaching bankruptcy were rumored for several months.

Law hurts drunk drivers

BOSTON (UPI) — The director of the Massachusetts Driver Alcoholic Education Directors Association said yesterday the state's new auto insurance merit rating law may hurt efforts to rehabilitate drunk drivers.

George R. Ingham, at an Insurance Department hearing on regulations implementing the law, said, "We support intent of the law and we hope it will work, but we fear it will not."

About 100 insurance industry representatives attended the hearing. Four industry spokesmen supported the plan, but proposed several technical changes.

In an interview, Ingham said the law, which imposes a $200 premium surcharge on drivers convicted for the first time of drunk driving, will lead to lax law enforcement and prosecution by sympathetic police, judges and juries hesitant to impose stiff penalties.

On any Sunday

By RICHARD CAPLAN

Ric and I were both waiting in line. I was going after the hot dogs and he was trying for the beer. We were surrounded by a range of people from aggressive ten year old kids to old women quietly waiting for someone to ask for their order. There was small talk and laughter and the sound of people making change behind the counter when suddenly from the other side of thick concrete walls came a roar like we had never heard before. Ric and I turned toward each other with apprehensive looks.

"What's happening?"

"We've got to find out."

I looked around.

"Does anyone have a radio?"

There was some nervous laughter as everyone else was wondering what they were missing.

I looked back at Ric.

"Just our luck."

Then a voice from further back in the line yelled out.

"It was Haynes. He just ran back a punt."

"All right!"

There were cheers from everywhere. We were sorry we missed the punt return but we were thrilled that the New England Patriots were now leading the Denver Broncos 24-0.

With beer and hot dogs in hand, Ric and I fought our way back to Duck and Rhonda where we proceeded to enjoy the rest of the Patriot's victory.

Up until now I've managed to keep my fanaticism about the New England Patriots in check but I won't control it any longer.

There's a new excitement about being a Patriot fan these days. There's a new pride. We're winners. We've beat the best in the N.F.L. and we've scored more points than any other team, except for the Colts.

In previous years, rooting for the Pats was almost like hoping that television would put on some worthwhile programming. It just wasn't going to happen. This season it has been happening. Not the good programming, but the Patriots — they're on their way to the play-offs.

There's something I want you to understand, though, New England football fans have been waiting over ten years for a team like this and you can see by their excitement, their confidence, that they don't have to wait until next year any more.

So last Sunday, me and Rhonda and Ric and Duck went to Foxboro and watched the unbelievable new New England Patriots rip through a supposedly tough Denver defense. Ric and I were tremendously excited but I don't think Rhonda and Duck were. (I know you don't like football Rhonda so thanks for sharing my excitement with me).

The traffic got a little tough at times and the prices were a little high but it was worth every dollar-spending, gas-using minute of it.

I guess if my column is to have a purpose it would be two-fold. First to communicate to you my growing excitement as the play-offs grow closer and second of all to warn you. If you're not a Patriots fan or if you don't know any (as impossible as that may seem), don't be surprised if the people around you start acting a little crazy with each passing Sunday; Be careful not to say the words "touch" and "Down" in the same sentence, and don't worry when someone close by starts talking about the great Kahuna. He's on our side.

Give to Globe Santa

To the Editor:

Yes, tis the season to be jolly, and as we are preparing to experience the joys and comforts of the yuletide holidays, there are some that will be deprived of these warm feelings. These are the children whose parents cannot afford to meet the expenses of everyday needs, the children from the broken homes, the children of parents who just don't care. Yet, there is a way to provide these kids with something in the way of toys so as to make their holidays maybe a little bit brighter.

This Christmas season, the Boston Globe has once again organized Globe Santa, to help see that a tot finds something under the tree. The Globe Santa annually takes your contributions and buys toys for the kids.

Here at UMass, the Arnold Air Society of Air Force ROTC is collecting Globe Santa donations in the Campus Center Concourse next to the information booth.

If you would like to make a donation, come down and see us. There's a Christmas tree decorated with lights on the table and some friendly people to say thank you. So please help a child realize what it feels like to be "in the spirit."

Hills 'move' clarified

To the Editor:

In view of an article which appeared in the Collegian on Nov. 29 concerning the School of Ed., I think it would be a good thing for me to clarify a few points concerning the 'Hills Move.' Most importantly, no one is moving to Hills House. This was a possibility discussed by the Principal Administrative Officers (PAO) in Whitmore last semester.

The faculty of the School of Ed. had consistently re-asserted their wish 'to be under one roof' and it was felt that Hills would be a proper place, not only because the School already has faculty there but also because there are no other facilities on campus with adequate space.

One alternative suggested to the Hills Move was the expansion of the present School of Ed. building but this was rejected as there are no funds available for any type of building construction at UMass due to an on-going freeze by the State.

Still the PAO's opted for the Move and were planning to supplant the Landscape Architecture Dept. in the School building by Fall '77, doubling our faculty in offices in Hills until the Mental Health Dept. and other presently there could vacate.

However, there was open opposition by School faculty in the prospect of overcrowding, the lack of funds for even minimal renovations in Hills and the total lack of co-operation between the School and the administration in arriving at the decision to move in the first place.

And so it was that Dean Fantini and Provost Puryear, both unjustly thrust into the middle of this 'hodge-podge', met and collaborated on the Provost's final decision to end the Hills move once and for all....

As for students in the School, yes, we are pulling ourselves together, both through clusters and through the School as a whole. I am confident of the success of these efforts... and I'm damned glad to see them!

I hope this has cleared up some of the points of the article and I want to thank the Collegian for the chance to respond. I appreciate it.

We of the Coalition for Jewish Liberation representing radical Jewish thought believe that the following issues demand our immediate attention and response.

1) Israel should stop all military and industrial aid to the racist regime in South Africa.

2) We demand the extradition of Nazi war criminals living in the United States and we applaud the action of the Congress in the current extradition proceedings.

3) We condemn the Arab boycott which is an act of blatant racism against the Jewish people and Israel.

4) We call for the removal of General Brown, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff for his ignorant, racist remarks about Jews and Israel.

5) We are committed to a change in the educational process in the Jewish community.

6) We believe that Jews must have the right to be free from oppression, and to be equal citizens in any country in which they live.

7) All Jews should have the right to return to their homeland.

8) The Palestinian people have a right to self determination and a national homeland.

9) World Jewry must have a voice in helping to determine the direction and policies of the state of Israel.

10) We will continue in our stedfast support of the Jewish state of ISRAEL.

Lester Kodd cares

By PETER B. WALLACE

Do students really care about one another? Are students really concerned about the feelings of each other when unfeeling acts of ripoff and destruction of private property are commonplace? Does anyone care?

The answer is YES! Yes, there is in that vast void of insensitivity, a man who cares.

Only recently did I become aware of the truely wonderous work this concerned fellow is doing.

His name is Lester U. Kodd, and his caring hands reach out to us students through the organization he founded, the Committee for Wholesomeness and Non-Exploitation, (CWNE). Doubtless, few of you students have heard of the CWNE or know what its purpose is. Lester Kodd explains in his Purity Manifesto of 1976 precisely what the objectives of the CWNE are:

".. to end the ruthless exploitation of students by capitalist pornographers and their campus stooges..."

To date the efforts of the CWNE in crushing pornographic exploitation on campus have met with considerable success, according to Kodd.

"The recent decision by the Southwest assembly to ban all pornographic films was inspired largely because of our efforts," says Kodd.

However, this was only a first step. Kodd revealed that he is working closely with student government organizations on a proposed board that would screen all films to be shown on campus for exploitative material.

Although he is pleased by what action student government has taken so far, Kodd and the CWNE are far from satisfied. "Pornographic exploitation exists not only in films, but in books and TV," says Kodd. Kodd has demanded that the CWNE be allowed to screen all books in the UMass library for possible 'Porn 'Ploitation'.

The CWNE advocates that all exploitative books be removed from the library stacks immediately and destroyed. "This trash deserves to be burned, in front of the library if necessary," says Kodd.

Kodd is also concerned about porn 'ploitation in the University Store, where an extensive selection of girlie mags are on display.

"What really bugs me are the swine who buy those magazines. Something should be done about students who blatently support exploitation in such a manner," says Kodd emphatically.

Television programming has come under the watchful gaze of the CWNE, also. "TV presents a major obstacle that must be overcome before students can be completely freed of pornographic exploitation," says Kodd.

"Television shows like Charlie's Angels are offensive to many members of the university community", says Kodd. (Charlie's Angels is an ABC TV show that features three female detectives in various stages of undress each week.)

The CWNE has come out in favor of a proposal to be submitted to the Student Senate next semester that would ban private TVs on campus. Students would only be allowed to watch special closed circuit programming, screened in advance for exploitative material, over TVs located in public places on campus.

"I care about students here at UMass, I really do," says Kodd. "If the CWNE can save just one student from pornographic exploitation, then I believe we will have succeeded."

So, for those of you who can't sleep at night because The Devil in Miss Jones was shown at the SUB; for those of you who burst into tears thinking about girlie magazines in the University Store, and for those of you who develop hives every week at the prospect of three semi-nude, detectives cavorting across your TV tube, RELAX! Lester U. Kodd cares.

Backlash over computer check-out?

The computerized "laser-eye" grocery store check-out system — heralded as tomorrow's labor-saving technology today — may be in deep trouble with its own biggest booster: the nation's grocery industry.

The Univeral Product Code (UPC), that grid of parallel lines and numbers substituting for price tags on grocery products across the U.S., is driving shoppers back to stores with prices on every item, according to an industry-commissioned study by Michigan State University.

The industry is alarmed. Its subcommittee on the UPC has already recommended augmenting the codes with "individual item-marking as is used in conventional supermarkets."

UPCs were adopted by the grocery industry in 1973 to save labor and computerize check-out registers. The markings don't indicate price but simply what the product is: brand name, size and content.

When passed over a "scanner" that "reads" the code, the computerized register — programmed by individual stores to reflect their prices — adds price information to produce a finished receipt.

Scanner-stores usually mark the price of products on the shelf, but not on individual cans. This saves store labor but, as consumer groups have argued, can make finding the price a chore for customers.

Today's recession-squeezed shoppers read newspaper food sections, hunt bargains, follow sales. Those stores whose marking systems make accurate, convenient price-awareness difficult will lose customers, the study now confirms, to stores with conventional pricing.

Among the 3000-shopper, $75,000 study's unsettling discoveries were the following:

¶ "Forty percent of shoppers (had) difficulty seeing prices in scanner-stores, compared to 15 percent for conventional stores.

¶ "Price errors made by shoppers were 'significantly larger' in (UPC) scanner-equipped stores.

¶ At the check stand, "shoppers in conventional stores (knew) the correct prices 71 percent of the time, compared with 56 percent for shoppers in scanner-stores.

¶ "Forty-three percent of scanner-store shoppers switched to another store, compared with 26 percent for the conventional store."

Industry reaction to the anti-UPC recommendation has ranged from angry opposition to hope that it will indicate the industry's ability to act as its own watchdog.

The director of a UPC-involved Canadian chain bristled at the conclusion's audacity. And, as reported in a recent issue of Supermarket News (SN), Wayne H. Fisher, Lucky Stores' chairman, "vehemently disagreed with the subcommittee recommendation."

SN also quoted Ralphs Grocery chairman Byron Allumbaugh as saying he feared the report "has got to fire added impetus to legislation" for mandatory item pricing.

But other industry spokesmen thought the report would defuse criticism from consumer groups. "It is our sincere hope," said Joseph Danzansky, president of Giant Food Stores and a member of the subcommittee, "that this statesmanlike approach by the industry will finally convince consumers, labor and legislators of our sincerity and that the drive for needless legislation will end."

Reaction to the report from organized labor, which has opposed UPCs as a threat to jobs, was enthusiastic. "The study results are absolutely fantastic for the consumer," Retail Clerks union president Walter Davis told SN. "The poll shows what consumers have been saying all along. We're still going full speed ahead with (item-pricing) legislation."

In California and other states such legislation has been under study for years. Recently defeated in the California Assembly, SB 1466 (Roberti) would have extended the life of mandatory item-pricing in the state beyond its present April 1, 1977, limit.

But an aide to state Sen. David Roberti says he will introduce similar legislation in the next Assembly session.

In the end, the retention of item-pricing may depend less on legislators or subcommittee recommendations than on the study's own, grudgingly acknowledged discovery: The customer has the final say.

As Kim Stewart, vice president of Tri-City Grocery Co. near St. Louis, Ill., told Supermarket News, "One thing is for sure: if the customers don't like it, we aren't going to do it."

Feeding the forums

Feedback. One of the major problems right now is interpersonal communication. We all seem so isolated from one another. There are so many of us here and we all have special and different needs. None of these needs can be met in any one place, but a lot of people are trying to do just that.

The Collegian, knowing it is a student newspaper, tries to cater to the student need, student input. WMUA tires to do the same in a different medium, realizing that its audience is the entire valley as well.

So what, you say. So they try. Sometimes they make it. Sometimes they don't. What does that have to do with me? Why should I care? I'm here to be a student, nothing more.

An Analogy

A young person goes into a restaurant and orders a meal. Substitutions are made without his consent and the steak is cold. He is dissatisfied. He silently pays his bill and walks out, vowing something about never coming back.

Another person goes into the same restaurant, orders the same meal and is met with the same problems. This person calls the waiter over, quietly explains the problem in a reasonable way and asks for another steak.

Maybe the waiter complies. Maybe he doesn't. The point is that this person did not sit back and let himself be cheated. He took a vocal part. The possibility of something changing is there. It isn't there at all with the silent diner. No one knew about the discontent, so no one would make any move to rectify the situation.

Pertinence of Analogy

If you sit back and pay your student taxes, state taxes for that matter, and have nothing to do with how that money is used, you are the one being cheated. There are all kinds of forums on this campus to voice your discontent on almost any issue. If you don't use them, that must mean that you are satisfied with everything. At least that is the way it will seem to those who can change what you are dissatisfied with.

It also follows that you are satisfied with the content of the Collegian, because you don't write letters to the editor, or make phone calls, or join the staff. You are satisfied with WMUA, because you never call. You are so content with your environment, in fact, that Whitmore is the only one who knows you are here, and only then as a student number.

Feedback is easy. It only takes a little involvement with yourself. If you care what you are fed, in terms of media, classes, living environment, and basic welfare, then it is your responsibility to tell somebody. The forum is there; use it.

This dormitory room in Cance House is left in shambles after a fire ripped through it on September 24 of this year. The story below tells how to help prevent fires like this one from occuring in the future.

Help prevent fires

By KEITH E. HOYLE

The Fire and Safety Division of Environmental Health and Safety wishes to remind all residents of dormitories that certain items, now widespread in use, have been used in an unsafe manner. Because of carelessness, fires have occurred in dormitories, resulting in the banning of certain appliances and devices by the University.

One of the most serious of these is the candle. Under the University Handbook, which governs student policies, candles are deemed dangerous and a great fire hazard. In fact, most of the fires in dormitories this semester have been caused by candles, including the serious third floor fire in Cance in September.

Candles are allowed in the dormitories if they are covered with a glass shell. Otherwise, the alternative is the loss of property, and maybe life, should a fire occur because of an open-flame candle.

Even when a candle is used with protection, certain safety precautions should be followed.

— Never place the candle in front of an open window. A gust of wind may knock it over.

— Never place the candle so that the flame is under or near flammable materials, i.e. draperies, books, clothes, wood, etc.

— Do not set a candle in a precarious place where it can be knocked over easily by accident.

— When you are leaving your room, extinguish the candle. An unattended flame is inviting trouble.

Another trouble area is the large volume refrigerator. These devices are illegal due to the large demand of electricity they require, as opposed to other devices. Some of the older dormitories have electrical systems not designed to absorb these higher loads. The result is fuses are blown.

Some residents replace the fuse with a higher-rated type, so that eventually the fuse won't blow, but the dormitory wiring system will heat-up, and this could lead to fires within the walls of the building, a serious threat to YOUR life.

This semester, fire extinguisher thefts and horseplay are already out of sight. The fire extinguishers are installed in residence halls to be used by residents to snuff out small fires before they develop into bigger ones. When an extinguisher is damaged, discharged, or stolen, for whatever means, YOU have been deprived of the device which may save your stereo, your ward-

Before Sound Guard®, the only way to prevent your records from wearing out was not to play them.

Unprotected

Magnified, you can see record vinyl wearing away.

With Sound Guard

With same magnification, record vinyl shows no wear.

If you've played any record often enough, you've heard the inevitable occur. It wore out.

While "pops," "hisses," and other surface noises began making their appearance on your favorite records, high frequency sounds—like violins and flutes—began disappearing.

The villain behind this destruction is friction. (If a diamond cuts through steel, you can imagine what a diamond stylus does to vinyl records.) Fortunately, from outer space has come a solution to record degradation. It's called Sound Guard.*

A by-product of research into dry lubricants for aerospace applications, Sound Guard record preservative puts a microscopically-thin (less than 0.000003") dry film on records to protect the grooves from damage. Yet, remarkably, it does not degrade fidelity.

Independent tests show that Sound Guard preservative maintains full amplitude at all audible frequencies, while at the same time significantly retarding increases in surface noise and harmonic distortion.

In other words, when applied according to instructions, a new record treated with Sound Guard preservative and played 100 times sounds the same as one in "mint" condition played the first time!

Sound Guard preservative comes in a kit (complete with non-aerosol pump sprayer and velvet buffing pad). It is completely safe and effective for all discs, from precious old 78's to the newest LP's including CD-4's.

Recently introduced to audiophiles, Sound Guard preservative is now available in audio and record outlets.

For complete test results write: Sound Guard, Box 5001, Muncie, Indiana 43702.

The Hillel Brunch series will continue Sunday at 11 a.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

Guest speaker will be Dr. Leonard Ehrlich of the UMass philosophy department, and one of the founders and first chairman of the Judaic Studies Committee. The topic of Ehrlich's talk is "How the Holocaust Affects the Jewish Perception of the World Today." All interested people are invited.

Student a panelist on TV program

Aida Moreno, a UMass senior from Springfield, will appear nationally and on Channel 57 Springfield as a panelist in a forthcoming William F. Buckley "Firing Line" program.

She is one of three student panelists to participate at the end of a Buckley interview with Gov. Michael Dukakis. The one-hour program will be broadcast on Channel 57 at noon Sunday, and at other dates and times by the stations in other parts of the country that carry the show.

It was taped Tuesday, Nov. 23, at the Yankee Pedlar Inn in Holyoke. Moreno, a senior majoring in political science, is from Indian Orchard in Springfield. She was graduated from Springfield Technical Community College in 1975 and while there worked for Channel 57 as a production assistant on the Habitat program.

From February to August of this year, she worked in Washington, D.C., on the staff of Springfield Congressman Edward Boland under the UMass Outreach internship program. She is now a member of the Channel 57 advisory board.

Others expected to attend the conference include: Peter Bogle, Mass PIRG attorney; J. Peter Doherty, special assistant attorney general for Rhode Island; Mary Kilmarx, Rhode Island state representative; Ralph Lutts, Hampshire College naturalist, Rutherford Platt, of the Connecticut River Basin Association; Jonathan Souweine, assistant director of Mass PIRG, and Harold Ward, director of the Rhode Island Conservation Law Foundation.

The conference is sponsored by the Hampshire College Law Program, School of Natural Science, Environmental Studies and Public Policy program, and the Community Council.

Peddler's Fair sale at Mt. Holyoke

Professional craftspeople will congregate at Mount Holyoke College tomorrow for the annual Peddler's Fair. Coming from all parts of New England and as far away as North Carolina, they will display and sell their wares from 9:30 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. in Mary E. Woolley Hall. Sponsored by the sophomore class, the fair is open to the public with no admission charge.

Offering a wide variety of art work and handmade crafts, this year's fair will involve over 70 professionals and students. On view will be objects in three main categories: jewelry, pottery, and fiber. Woodworking, metalsmithing, glass-blowing, macrame, hand-weaving, candlemaking, and applique will also be included. Throughout the day, artisans will demonstrate these techniques.

Among new participants are a butterfly mounter and a sheepskin-clothing maker. Full-scale furniture will also be present. Special holiday gift ideas, from simple wooden toys to intricate needlework designs, will be exhibited.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Signatures sought for Carter petition

A table will be set up at the Campus Center this week and part of next, under the auspices of the American Friends Service Committee and the Veterans Coalition, to gather signatures on petitions calling for the healing of the wounds of the Vietnam War. This nation-wide campaign is attempting to gather over one million signatures to be presented to President-elect Jimmy Carter in January. Anyone may sign the petitions.

The petition outlines four areas of concern necessary for reconciliation of the war in this country and in Vietnam. Point No. 1 deals with the normalization of diplomatic, trade and cultural relations with the nations of Indochina, including the acceptance of Vietnam into the United Nations. The second issue calls for the United States to live up to the Peace Accords promise to provide reconstruction aid to Vietnam; the third issue asks for a granting of unconditional amnesty to all draft, military, and civilian resisters and veterans with less than fully honorable discharges. The last point on the petition calls for adequate rehabilitation and compensation to all physically or psychologically wounded veterans of that war, some 500,000 to 800,000 men.

★ Fires

robe, your semester's work, or your life.

A fire extinguisher is not a play toy. It is a means to deal with one of the most frightening forces present today. If you have never been confronted with the deadly rage of fire, you can't understand why the extinguishers are important. Try to do without one when a smouldering cigarette sets your trash container ablaze, or your chair or bedding. If you don't lose your possessions to fire damage, the smoke, and toxic gases will ruin your clothes, books, papers, electrical devices, and maybe even you. It's not only your life and possessions you're gambling with, but those of your floor's and eventually the whole dormitory. Do you want to be responsible for the loss of property or even life? It's no joking matter.

Last year, 7400 major fires in colleges and universities throughout the country resulted in over $19 million damage. Nationwide, almost 12,000 people were killed by fire. That's almost as many students living in the dormitory system here.

Don't be fooled into a complacent attitude and think it can't happen here. Just because UMass has not suffered a fire death in the past, doesn't mean it won't in the future. The fire protection systems and alarms cannot be tampered with as they are now. These devices may save your life in a fire situation. It is totally absurd to vandalize something that is so precious to your own safety.

Anything on this campus can and will burn. If you live in Southwest, your walls won't burn, but what about the FIVE previous coats of flammable paint, the posters, plants, flags, rugs, mobiles, barn boards, lounge furniture, beds, desks, or overloaded circuits. That is a tremendous fuel load, and that is exactly what will burn.

If the fire doors are blocked open, more than just your room will be affected. Like the whole floor will be black, sooty, and ruined. Everybody's clothes, stereos, books, personal possessions destroyed by fire, heat, and smoke. And that's only if everybody has time to get out. What about the lives of your fellow students? The same situation exists all over campus.

That suggests another dangerous situation, that of false alarms. Every once in a while, the triggering of an alarm is accidental, like a frisbee striking the pull station, or an electrical short setting off the system. These are accidents, and in most cases rare.

However, the deliberate activation of a pull station for the purposes of causing a false alarm is a malicious act. Did you ever stop to think what happens when the alarm is pulled. This is what happens:

— All residents are disturbed, and could be injured while evacuating.

— The police respond, possibly a crime that affects you occurs undetected because the police are tied up at a "false alarm".

— The fire department responds, and possibly a real fire breaks out in another part of Amherst or the University, while the fire department is tied up at a "false alarm". Life loss or property damage that could have been prevented takes place, because of false alarms.

— Physical Plant personnel respond to reset the alarm, taking them away from more important service duties elsewhere.

Never mind the inconvenience, the costs incurred, what about its effect on your life, or other lives. What about the innocent citizen who collides with the fire truck responding to the alarm, or with the police cruiser. What about the fire fighter who falls from the apparatus on a windy and icy night? What about the police officer, possibly harassed by others, but certainly taken off his patrol to complete paperwork created by the false alarm. All the services designed to protect you or serve you are burdened by false alarms and possibly at times when you really need them, they aren't available.

If you are stymied or frustrated with your living situation, don't discharge the fire extinguisher, channel your energies to do something about your plight. Don't smash the alarm system, because when you have a fire at 4:00 that morning, there will be no system to wake you up, and you'll succumb to poisonous smoke and toxic gases. Don't pull the false alarm, because someday there will be a real fire. All those residents who have become apathetic towards fire alarms, due to the tremendous rate of false alarms, will not evacuate, and will be trapped by rushing smoke, heat and flames.

Should you cause a fire, pull a false alarm, or damage or discharge a fire extinguisher, you are subject to action under the University's Endangering Behavior Policy. This could mean probation, removal from the residence hall system, or complete separation from the University. Don't ruin your future by an irresponsible act that jeopardizes more than your own life.

Be Fire-Safe. PLEASE. It's your life!

Keith E. Hoyle is Fire and Safety Officer at UMass.

Dental Spray replaces the drill

BOSTON (AP) – Doctors at Tufts Dental School say they have successfully tested a chemical spray that removes tooth cavities with little drilling and almost no pain.

The new method requires no anesthesia for even the biggest cavities, they say, and it virtually eliminates the grinding pain of traditional dental work.

The doctors have developed a chemical called GK-101 and a skinny, hand-held needle that squirts the chemical on to the cavity. Within minutes, the decayed material breaks up and flakes away.

The method, which has been under development for five years, was tried on 49 patients who had 61 teeth with cavities. The chemical removed all of the cavities in 58 of the teeth. In two teeth, the decay was almost totally removed, and in one it was partially removed, the doctors report.

The technique was developed and tested by two Tufts dentists, Melvin Goldman and Joseph H. Kronman. A report on their findings was published in the current issue of the Journal of the American Dental Association.

The doctors say that sometimes drilling is necessary to expose the cavity enough for the chemical to work. After the decay is flushed out, doctors have to drill a little more to shape the hole. Then it is filled the same way ordinary tooth repairs are made.

Even though the method requires some drilling, it has several advantages over current dental practices, the doctors say.

"The heat and pressure that a drill produces would be minimized," Kronman said in an interview. "It also removes only the decay. Since a drill removes everything it touches, this is a more conservative approach."

"It's a meaningful adjunct to dental care," he said.

The method will require more testing and approval by the Food and Drug Administration before it is available to other dentists. This will take "a matter of years," Kronman said.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Friday, December 3 – Born today, you are basically a home-body. Whether man or woman, you will take your greatest joy – and, perhaps, receive your deepest disappointment – from activities and associations occurring or existing within the home. For this reason, you will have to take care that you choose a marriage partner who wishes to make a success of family living, who, if given a choice between family and career, will allow the career to suffer, not the family. Otherwise, you will find that you are at almost continuous odds with the one person who should be your greatest help in bringing about the kind of life you most wish to have.

Perhaps your great orientation toward family is the result of a late emotional maturation, for you are one of those who will remain within the parental family structure until well out of your youth. You will not rush off to meet the future, leaving the parental nest to those older and wiser than you; rather, you will remain within, learning how to cope with life in general and with your own emotional makeup especially until you really feel "ready" to try your wings. When you do finally fly out on your own, it will probably be directly into another nest – marriage.

Basic timidity explains much of your behavior, for it leads you into the kind of thinking that is most often mistaken for calm, for disinterest, or for fear. Only within the confines of your own hearth and home are you able to take part in things with real enthusiasm. Your eagerness to gain authority over something in life, however, may lead you into being something of a didactic parent at certain times in your life. You will have to fight against this tendency.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Establish yourself in the eyes of another as one who knows whereof he speaks. Be assertive and you will be effective.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Set aside some time for the enjoyment of a new hobby. Take another's objections with a grain of salt; jealousy may be the cause.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You would do well to swim with the current today, regardless of where it is going. You can readjust your sights later on.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – With charm and influence you should be able to gain your ends without further delay. Make an effort to appear satisfied with present results.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Social issues mark the day with some degree of upheaval. Emotional responses of others create difficulties for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your share of trouble goes to another today – unless you are willing to speak up, even in the face of threats.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Another can influence fortune in your favor. Make it a point to bring hidden assets of your past experience to light.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – So long as truth lies at the heart of you present activities, all should end well. Be supportive of loved ones in new activities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – If you insist upon rejecting a new idea for no better reason than that it is neither tried nor true, you may lose out on a very good thing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – There is nothing to be gained by railing against fate. Pick yourself up by your bootstraps and begin over again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Determine your own involvement in present activities on the home front. You may be further from the scene than you thought – spiritually.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Work for the common good. Neighborhood activities are such that your contribution, though needed, may not be solicited.

Cosmic Ocean Opens Up

By JACOB LOVE

The mental weather for today is so-so. It could be mild this morning but may get clunky by early afternoon and-or lead to minor headaches by sundown. However, the low pressure area is small and if we're working hard and feeling productive, the day might even be pleasant. Joy will be on the upswing by late evening and the week-end may be the happiest we've had all year.

The Sun is in Sagittarius, shooting for the target of wisdom and adventure. "Sag" is ruled by expansive joyful Jupiter who is currently trying to bring things down to earth in the practical sign of Taurus. Tomorrow morning he will be greeted by Venus, the goddess of love, via an harmonious 120 degree angle. She's currently in the struggle-up-the-mountain sign of Capricorn. So if we're willing to work at it, Venus may help us get the resources we need for our expansive goals.

The em-oceanl Moon is in Taurus enjoying down-to-earth productivity and by tomorrow evening she will be exactly between the earth and Jupiter. Most everybody could be feeling very rich by then.

Towards Sunday noon another wave of dreams-come-true will be flowing in as the Sun lines up with Neptune, the planet of dreams and compassion. They're both in "Sag" so joy will be easy if we're in tune with our dreams. They also form an angle of harmony with Pluto, the planet of rebirth, at the same time which should add a note of transcendence to the day's festivities.

A few words of caution, however: since Neptune governs drugs and drink, since Pluto encourages degeneration as well as regeneration, and since Jupiter expands the appetite, it might be wise to keep a clear mind thru the week-end in order to fully absorb the joyous dream power of the cosmic ocean. Over-indulging will be easy and tends to clot the senses.

'Bad News' Barnes ordered to RI prison

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — The saga of Marvin Barnes, a topsy-turvy mix of basketball courts and courtrooms, soon takes on another dimension — prison.

Tall and talented, Barnes also had troubles in his rise from a local ghetto to All-America player status at Providence College and dreams of wealth.

Now, the $300,000 per year Detroit Pistons' forward is preparing for a one-year prison term in the Adult Correctional Institutions in Cranston, R.I., for violating state probation Oct. 9.

A convicted felon since 1974, he was arrested at Detroit Metropolitan Airport when a security check turned up an unloaded handgun wrapped inside gym clothes in his luggage.

With good behavior, he could be paroled in four months and resume his basketball career. After Superior Court Judge Anthony A. Giannini ordered him to prison by Dec. 14, Barnes' attorneys began searching for legal options to alter or delay his punishment.

"It's always a disappointment when you have to go to jail," Barnes said after the Tuesday ruling. "But I expected that much from the people here.

"I think if I was someone else this never would have happened. But, because of who I am... that's the price you pay for publicity," he said. "It's just like a basketball game. You win some, you lose some."

He claims state prosecutors and Providence police have treated him unfairly in scrapes with the law because of his fame and notoriety. The state maintains it handled him the same as it would any other person who comes before the courts accused of a crime.

"If it had been John Doe picked up in Detroit for the same offense and was on probation in Rhode Island, it probably wouldn't have come to the attention of the police," said Alton W. Wiley, Barnes' attorney, who is also black.

"He is being treated differently by the Attorney General's office and the police department because of his notoriety," Wiley said. "I can't quarrel with what happened in court."

The probation violation stemmed from a conviction during his equally stormy college days.

Locally, his nickname was "Bad News" Barnes and Marvin went so far as putting "News-24" on his jacket and license plate, 24 being his basketball jersey number.

In 1974, while a senior, he pleaded guilty in Superior Court to assaulting former PC teammate Larry Ketvirtis with a tire iron after a scrimmage two years earlier.

The plea came midway into a second trial on the assault charge. A 1973 proceeding ended in a mistrial. Barnes maintained his innocence and said he pleaded guilty because he felt the judge and all-white jury were prejudiced and the state had enough evidence to convict him. He was also pressured by upcoming exams and negotiations for a lucrative pro basketball contract.

In November 1975, Ketvirtis won a $10,000 damage settlement from Barnes in a two-week federal court trial stemming from the assault. He sought $1.5 million. Both sides claimed vindication by the award.

After that ordeal, Barnes vowed to "go play basketball, go on with my career and stay out of trouble."

The 6-foot-9 forward's current affiliation with the Pistons has proved as stormy as his two years with the Spirits of St. Louis in the twilight of the defunct American Basketball Association where he was Rookie of the Year in the 1974-75 season.

He was sidelined with a leg injury in October and the arrest came during a series of three suspensions for violating team rules and missing practices. He was on his way back to St. Louis with a girlfriend when the gun was found.

When Barnes began his career in St. Louis he adjusted lavishly to his new found income. He bought several expensive cars and eventually leased two apartments which he still has.

He began a pattern of no-shows and suspensions and hired and fired a number of player agents in his insecure quest for financial stability.

Terry to face ex-mates

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — A pang of mostalgia will undoubtedly hit Pittsburgh Steelers' fans throughout Three Rivers Stadium Sunday as they watch "the Terrys" do battle once again — this time against one another.

If Steelers' quarterback Terry Bradshaw is fully recovered from a sprained wrist, he will get the starting call against winless Tampa Bay, while the Buccaneers turn to former Steeler Terry Hanratty to direct their offense.

Hanratty, who was Bradshaw's sidekick for five seasons before he was cut loose by the Steelers in preseason training, will be starting for the first time this season and hoping somehow to help muster the Bucs' (0-12) first victory of their young NFL career.

Bradshaw injured his wrist in a game with Miami three weeks ago but is still considered by coach Chuck Noll to be the team's starting quarterback in spite of the surprisingly strong performance by rookie Mike Kruczek in his place.

"I'll restate what I've said before," Noll said earlier this week. "If Terry is 100 per cent healthy, he is my starting quarterback. But Mike has done an outstanding job for us... more than anyone expected from a rookie right out of college who missed so much preseason training."

Bradshaw and Kruczek shared the quarterbacking duties in the Steelers' practice Wednesday and, even if Bradshaw does not open the game for Pittsburgh (8-4), it is a good bet he will see some playing time to test the sore wrist on his throwing arm.

Although the Steelers are rated 26-point favorites over "Hanratty and friends," the game is vital to their playoff hopes, as is next week's at Houston.

Pittsburgh must win both of those and hope for an Oakland victory over Cincinnati on Monday night or a win by the New York Jets over the Bengals to win the AFC Central Division title and a chance to try for its third straight Super Bowl trophy.

One of the reason Hanratty is starting is his familiarity with the Pittsburgh system, but it isn't likely his Buccaneers will penetrate the Steelers' defense. It has allowed only 28 points in the midst of a seven-game win streak and, of those, 16 were scored in one game by Houston.

And although it's not exactly a heart-warming thought to Hanratty, each of the Steelers' defensive linemen sacked the quarterback at least once in a blizzard against AFC Central Division-leading Cincinnati last weekend.

But don't think the Steelers aren't thinking of their old buddy, once the team's leading practical joker — and what they have in store for him.

"I've entered him in my prayers," said Bradshaw. "Nobody in their right mind would want to play against this defense."

"It'll be nice to see Terry again," said defensive end L.C. Greenwood. "Too bad it's under these circumstances."

Reds' Bench content

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Johnny Bench has no desire to become a free agent and go "where the money is or the sun is shining."

The all-star catcher hopes that when his current contract expires after next season, he'll be able to sign on again with the Cincinnati Reds where he's spent his entire major league career.

"I don't think I'll ever have to play out my option and become a free agent," Bench, who does his own negotiating, said during a visit to Washington. "The Cincinnati organization has always been fair in dealing with me and we should be able to work things out without trouble."

In an interview, Bench said, "The jury is still out" on the impact of the new free agent system for baseball but added that the disposition of the first big crop of stars who played out their option this year "shows the players are going to go where the money is or where the sun is shining.

"The New York Yankees, the California Angels and San Diego all did well," the national league star observed. "It's also interesting that not one player signed with his old club."

Bench is skeptical of claims that the free agent market will prove financially ruinous to the owners, commenting: "They seem to be able to come up with the money, so I guess it must be available. They're the ones who will control the market price."

The 10-year veteran and twice the national league's most valuable player was in the nation's capital to assume the presidency of no greater love, a nonprofit organization helping the children of Americans killed or missing in action in Viet Nam.

After a disappointing regular season but a successful World Series, Bench has spent his off-season shunning the banquet circuit and spending his time golfing, fishing and hunting in Florida and his home state of Oklahoma.

While Norwich has a few games under its belt, Saturday's game will be the first ECAC game for Middlebury College, which is 0-1, with a 6-4 loss to Bishop's University of Canada.

Last year while Middlebury did defeat the Minutemen, it ended up being much lower in the standings in Division II as it was 15th while UMass was eighth.

There are only three seniors coming off that 7-7-0 Division II team. Captain Buzzy Woodworth, a defenseman, leads a team composed mostly of juniors and sophomores.

Junior Bill Burchfield will work behind Woodworth, taking over this season in goal.

Middlebury figures to be a better team than last year as the line of Perry Babcock-Peter Bostick-Tom Harris are the best looking line so far. Harris is the leading scorer with three goals and an assist and Babcock is second with one goal and three assists.

"Middlebury is improved this year, and it has one real good line that's all sophomores," said coach Canniff in a capsule report about Middlebury.

UMass should be reasonably healthy for the game.

"Tuesday night was the first time we had a full team," Coach Canniff said. Nick Carney skated for the first time in a few weeks Wednesday night, but Canniff doesn't expect him to be ready for Friday with just two days of skating. John Peters is coming off a charlie horse, but Canniff is "not worried about muscle injuries, but the virus they're trying to recover from.

"I expect we'll be healthy," he said.

This game is the first one since St. Anselm's cracked the icemen 7-0 ten days ago and Canniff said "We sure as hell can play better than that."

This two game homestand is the perfect time for UMass to prove it.

JV Hockey

Tough Crimson come to town

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

Despite all odds and obstacles, JV hockey coach Russ Kidd will lead the Minutemen of UMass into battle this evening at 7:30 in Orr Rink when Harvard comes to town. As if one tough game weren't enough, the team will depart Saturday from New Hampshire where it will face New Hampton Prep.

Coming off a 5-6 season last year (termed "a good year for us" by Coach Kidd), the Minutemen will face one of the best JV teams in New England. In fact, in the opinion of Kidd, Harvard's JV could hold its own in Division II varsity play. But, despite the Harvard tradition, UMass played the Crimson tough last year, scoring two late-game goals only to lose 8-6 (with the last Crimson goal being an empty-net one). "It should be a very exciting, wide-open game between two fairly evenly matched teams," commented Coach Kidd. "Harvard isn't a rough, physical animal team. They have good hockey players."

Although a 5-6 record may seem paltry to some, it doesn't include the Minutemen's sparkling record in Division III varsity scrimmages, marred by only one defeat.

Centering the first line for the Minutemen will be John Johnson, with Rich Riccioli on right wing and Doug Limone on the left. T. O'Shea will be the center for Scott Alexander and Doug Aylward on the second line, and Joe Nelligan will play between Paul White (who also sees action on the JV football team), and Dan Scavone. However, with coach Kidd's flexible attitude ("we change lines as much as we can"), they won't be the only players taking the ice. Forwards Gene Crowley, John Santisi, as well as the formidable Johnny Ryan will also take the ice against the Crimson.

On the defensive end, sophomore Jim Phelan and freshman Jim Benelli appear to be the top defensive pairing of the yet untested Minutemen. With possible help from Dean Liacos and Doug Hogue (who spend time with both JV and varsity), along with junior Bobby Laroche and Bob Gould, the UM defensive corps should stand up well in front of probable starting goaltender Frank Cifrino. Backing him up will be fellow freshmen Tim Haggarty and Richie Card.

The Minutemen will face a different "animal" Saturday when they play New Hampton Prep. Described as "the best prep school in New England, if not in the century" by Kidd, New Hampton defeated the Minutemen 7-4 last year. Upon closer inspection, however, one can see that the game was much closer than the score. Tied 4-4 going into the final period, New Hampton came back to score three goals, with the last being another empty-netter. "New Hampton has a very rough, physical team," said Kidd. "You have to prepare for them differently."

But the task of preparation is hard enough anyway, considering the fact that UMass plays three games in four days (the skaters play New Prep on Monday). "We don't really have enough ice time to prepare," Kidd stated. "But we're ready to play. I'm happy with the team, we've turned out better than I though we would. I think we're tough."

Jackson not answer to all problems

By KIRK LEWIS
Collegian Staff

Commentary

Let's face it! The Reggie Jackson of today is not the Reggie Jackson of old. He's lost that "zing" in his arm, his flare in the outfield, and his success at the plate. But yet, ne is still one of the most feared lefthanded power hitters in the game today.

But is Reggie Jackson the man the Yankees need to fill their problems in the field and at the plate? In this writer's opinion, the answer is no! What did the Yankees want in the off-season to strengthen their already potent ballclub? For one thing, it was apparent that they needed some righthanded hitting punch in the lineup. Aside from catcher Thurman Munson, the Yanks have no power to speak of from that side. Secondly, the Yankees outfield, in the defensive aspect of the game, leaves a lot to be desired.

First of all, let's review the Yankee lineup, and find out how and where Jackson fits in. In regarding the batting order, we'll break it down into two categories each for the lefty and the righty; power and consistency.

As I said before, the Yankees have no power from the right side outside of catcher Thurmon Munson. And besides second baseman Willie Randolph (consistency at the plate), there is not one righthanded hitter in the lineup, outside of switch-hitters, that is worth discussing. So, in essence, a good left-handed starter can usually fare well against New York.

On the other hand, the Yankees have one of the most feared lefthanded hitting lineups in the league. As we run up and down this potent batting order, who in their right mind would want to face the likes of these men, in the same order no less! Mickey Rivers (.300 - 50 sb), Roy White, Oscar Gamble, Chris Chambliss, Ron Blomberg, and Graig Nettles (A.L. Home Run King in 1976)...the potential of this unit is limitless. And that is, I guess, where the newly acquired Jackson will fit in nicely. The addition of his power and skills from the portside can only help their attack. With the possibility of 6-7 lefties and Munson in the same order, another first place finish in the A.L. East is in order for the 1977 season.

The second area, of the Yankee problem list is the lack of defesnive skills in the outfield. It's almost a comedy to go to a Yankee game and view their (solid???) outfield. These men, who try to play the outfield, run into, jump over, trip up, fall over, botch up, smash heads, climb walls, and do just about anything else to try and avoid the baseball. And the leader of this "Terrible Trio" is centerfielder Mickey Rivers of whom a completely different story could be written about. Rivers has the arm of a soggy noodle, capable of nailing runners at home on 23 single bounces. Roy White, alias "Balloon-arm", and the others - take your pick- Lou Piniela, Oscar Gamble, Otto Velez, or Ron Blomberg, are all as slow and as sloppy as Heinz is on your new pants!! And just where does Jackson fit in? Well, he still maintains that rifle arm, but what else is left? Not much!!! Jackson has never been an excellent fielder, or judger of fly balls and even his arm has a history of being erratic.

So, the question still remains, why did the Yankees pick up Reggie Jackson? At the very most, hell be a commodity to them, some added luxury added to this already prosperous club. And at the price they are going to pay him, I think this luxury is one that should have been done without. A better agent to have shot for could've been Don Baylor. Baylor is the man who can do it all from the right side. He can hit with power or for an average. He can also steal a few bases every once in a while. He, unlike Jackson, would've been sorely needed.

Ex-Pirate manager

Murtaugh dies from stroke

Former Pittsburgh manager Danny Murtaugh led his baseball teams to two world championships and three other divisional titles during his 15 years as the Pirates' manager. (UPI)

CHESTER, Pa. (UPI) – Former Pittsburgh Pirates manager Danny Murtaugh, who retired just two months ago so he could spend more time with his grandchildren, died Thursday night, two days after suffering a stroke.

Murtaugh, 59-years-old, was pronounced dead at 8:50 p.m. EST at Crozer-Chester Medical Center where he was rushed Tuesday afternoon from his home in nearby Woodlyn. A hospital spokesman said Murtaugh's condition slipped from serious to critical in less than 48 hours.

Funeral arrangements were incomplete.

Murtaugh led the Pirates to two world championships and three other divisional titles during 15 years and four different stints as field manager. Named three times Manager of the Year by his peers, he was as well known for his pugnacious wit as for his managing prowess.

A chew of tobacco stuffed into a cheek of his wrinkled, prizefighter-like face was his trademark. He punctuated his frequent practical jokes by spitting the juice from the plug at the subject of his teasing.

Murtaugh's death was the second in the official "Pirate family" since the 1976 season ended. Pitcher Bob Moose was killed in October in an auto accident.

Murtaugh, whose 15-year tenure as the Bucs' skipper was plagued with illness and heart problems, had come out of retirement three different times to manage. But when he announced his fourth retirement Oct. 1, just four days after general manager Joe L. Brown had announced his, Murtaugh assured reporters it was his final leave-taking.

"I think that I've been around long enough," Murtaugh said.

"I think that my own children were neglected a little bit when I was in the process of managing in my younger years, and naturally I didn't spend as much time with them as I should have. So I'm going to try to make up for it by spending a little more time with the grandchildren."

But Murtaugh said poor health had as much to do with his retirement as his desire to watch his grandchildren grow up.

"I think this year was one of the worst years I've had in the last three as far as my health is concerned, I was ill a few more times than anybody realized."

During the 1976 season, during which the Pirates finished second to cross-state rival Philadelphia in the National League East, Murtaugh suffered from dizzy spells. As the season dragged on and the Pirates made a brief run at the Phillies, he grew more tired looking and began spending more time unwinding after games with a glass of milk in a rocking chair in his dressing room.

Murtaugh's professional baseball career spanned four decades, going back to scrappy games on the tough sandlots here, not far from his most recent home in Woodlyn.

Nobody really sure if Ali will defend title

NEW YORK (UPI) – Muhammad Ali will or will not come out of his "retirement" to defend his heavyweight title against Duane Bobick Feb. 28 in Madison Square Garden, John Condon, the Garden's president of boxing, said Thursday night.

Condon said he will have "a definitive announcement" to make at a news conference Monday in New York but said he could not confirm or deny reports that Ali would meet Bobick.

Only Wednesday, Ali said in Atlanta that he was definitely retired now, adding "the worst thing I could do would be to go back in the ring."

Bobick, under the management of former champion Joe Frazier, had been slated to fight Ken Norton in February. However, Norton, who lost a close but unanimous decision to Ali in September in Yankee Stadium, was apparently persuaded to step aside if his $500,000 guaranteed purse for Bobick was upped to $600,000 to meet Ron Lyle instead in Las Vegas. The Norton-Lyle bout would be held on the same night and telecast closed circuit as part of a doubleheader with Ali-Bobick.

Condon would not say whether Ali had actually agreed to go along with these arrangements but indicated the path was clear to a signing next week.

"I know the answer now," Condon said. "But I'm keeping it under my hat."

Condon apparently believes Ali will sign but doesn't want to upset anything before everything is signed, sealed and delivered.

Grapplers in tourney held at Coast Guard

By MICHAEL SHULMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team travels to New London Connecticut today to participate in the major event of the season, The Coast Guard Tournament, which will begin at 10:00.

The Minutemen will be only one of sixteen teams in competition. The tournament is set up in a round robin style so two defeats result in elimination.

Head Coach, Dave Amato commented, "I think that Hofstra University is a tough team along with Springfield College, and Southern Connecticut State, these will be the teams to look out for."

Amato added, "I feel that the team as a whole will place among the top five teams of the tournament despite the fact that we won't be at full strength due to injuries."

Captain Dennis Fenton, Tim Fallon, and Larry Otsuka I expect will do well," said Amato, "and the tournament will lend valuable experience to the remainder of the squad."

The result of the Matmen's last meet rendered a loss, but the grapplers are tough and eager to wrestle the tournament teams today and tomorrow.

The finals will begin at 7:00 Saturday evening. At the conclusion of the finals' results will be the presentation of trophies.

College football's best

NEW YORK (UPI) – Second-ranked Michigan and third-ranked Southern California, which will meet in the Rose Bowl on New Year's day, led the individual talent parade Thursday by naming three players each to the 1976 United Press International All-America college football team.

Southern Cal's Trojans, who posted a 10-1 record en route to the Pacific Eight championship, placed running back Ricky Bell, offensive tackle Marvin Powell and defensive tackle Gary Jeter on the 23-man first team, while the once-beaten Wolverines were represented by running back Rob Lytle, guard Mark Donahue and linebacker Calvin O'Neal.

Top-ranked Pittsburgh, 10th-ranked Texas A&M, 13th-ranked Notre Dame and 19th-ranked Nebraska each named two players to the team while Tennessee, Stanford, Rice, Wake Forest, Oklahoma, UCLA, Penn State, Oklahoma State and Georgia each had one player selected.

The first team offensive unit consists of wide receiver Larry Seivers of Tennessee, tight end Ken MacAfee of Notre Dame, tackles Powell and Mike Vaughn of Oklahoma, guards Donahue and Joel Parrish of Georgia, center Derrell Gofourth of Oklahoma State, quarterback Tommy Kramer of Rice and running backs Bell, Tony Dorsett of Pittsburgh and Rob Lytle of Michigan.

Men's Indoor Track

Tracksters open in Storrs

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

A test against the best awaits the UMass men's indoor track team tomorrow at noon when it travels to Storrs, Connecticut to take on UConn, Seton Hall and Holy Cross in its first meet of the season.

The UMass coaching staff expects a close battle between UConn and Seton Hall, but feels that the meet could be a close one. Holy Cross is not expected to provide much of a challenge.

"A dual meet between UConn and us would be close," said coach Gary King. "We could surprise them tomorrow though."

Last year UMass was beaten soundly by UConn indoors. Seton Hall and HC are new additions to the indoor schedule. Seton Hall is a perennial IC4A track power.

UMass will be taking an extremely deep team down to the meet. The Minutemen don't have the outstanding individuals the other schools boast, but they do have two good performers in most of the events.

Two individuals who would have helped the team considerably will not be taking the trip to Storrs. They are Joe Martens, who is still plagued by a pulled stomach muscle, and Ron Melkonian, who is academically ineligible.

UConn will probably dominate the throwing events, while Seton Hall is nearly unbeatable in the dash and hurdles, as it has three out of the top six hurdlers in the IC4A meet last year.

"They (Seton Hall runners) are national class runners," said head coach Ken O'Brien. "They've shown the ability to dominate even in the IC4A dashes and hurdles."

Several events will be key for UMass. In the 600, SH's Tony King is the favorite, with UMass' John Richards and Rich Thompson battling UConn's Dave Kelley and Peter McClennon for the other scoring spots.

In the 1000, Mark Healy, Pere Bloom and Steve LaFler will have their hands full with conference 1000 champ Alden Miner of UConn, who has run 2:10 for that distance.

In the triple jump, standout freshman Bruce Parsons and Brady Mayer will be duelling a good one in SH's Kevin Wade, who has gone over 49 feet. HC's Bob Markarian could also challenge this trio.

The two relays will be hotly contested and critical events. In the two mile relay, Seton Hall has run 7:59, which is not beyond UMass' capabilities, with Fran O'Keefe, Jim Hunt, Mike Hansen and Chris Farmer handling the baton. The mile relay will be strong as well with Thompson, Richards, Healy and Doug Fraser.

Two other key events are the pole vault and 35 pound weight throw. On paper, UMass has superior vaulters, but they haven't been off the ground yet this season, due to the lack of a training facility. In the weight event, Pete Saravis will be trying to grab a place to pick up a few needed points.

A strong point for UMass, as always, is its distance runners. In the mile UMass will have Farmer, one of the top milers in New England, along with John Scheer and Steve McDougall. In the three mile run, Jay Legere, Matty Wolff and Cliff Stalpes will be in the maroon and white.

Another potentially strong event is the long jump, in which UMass has a top NE performer in Ken Adamson. Along with Jerry Herman, the duo gives UM a strong pair in that event.

In other events, UMass will be battling to pick up whatever points it can. In the dash, Bill Conant, Mike Dale and Herman will go against SH's lightning bolts. Parsons and Mayer will do likewise in the hurdles. Both events are run over 60 yards. Jeff Ritchie and Ted Power will be doing their first pole vaulting of the year. Bob Fitzgerald and Mayer will be in the high jump against SH's Ben Field, a 7-3 jumper and UConn's Pat Augeri.

Men's Gymnastics

Cadets a tough foe

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS

With an impressive victory already under its belt, the UMass men's gymnastics team will be seeking its second win in a row tomorrow afternoon at 2:00 p.m., when the Minutemen host the Cadets from Army, in an important meet at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. Tomorrow's meet against the Cadets will mark the opening of the home season for the gymnasts, who currently possess a 1-0 record.

The Minutemen soundly defeated Boston St. on Wednesday night behind a fine all-around performance turned in my co-captain Steve Marks.

"Overall, I have to say that I was most pleased with the consistency our team displayed," UMass coach Dick Swetman said. "Everybody hung in there really well and our consistency came as somewhat of a pleasant surprise to me."

The Minutemen will have to display the same consistency plus a little extra when they meet Army. Army has not had a meet so far this season, so it is difficult to speculate as to what the UMass gymnasts will be up against.

"Army has greatly improved its gymnastics program over the past five years," Swetman said. "Under head coach Ned Crosley, Army has been continually upgrading its program, and each year, better and better teams have been produced."

Swetman is looking for a really tough meet against the Cadets, but he is visibly confident that UMass can beat Army.

"If we perform up to our capabilities and maintain a high level of concentration throughout the meet, there is no question in my mind that we can beat Army," Swetman said. "Our guys really want to win this one against Army, especially since it is before the home folks," he continued.

"The only thing I'm worried about," cautioned Swetman, "is that our players might think more about beating Army that concentrating on their own particutar performances. I just can't stress how important the concentration factor will be."

The gymnasts also received a bit of good news yesterday when coach Swetman announced the return of co-captain Angelo Scuderi to action for this weekend. Scuderi, perhaps the most consistent all-around performer for the Minutemen was forced to miss Wednesday's meet because of academics.

"Angelo will return for the Army meet, but he may not be in the best possible physical shape," Swetman said. "He has been spending a lot of time studying for his tests, and he has been forced to miss practice. It'll be great to have him back, but he may not be at his peak," he continued.

Swetman is anticipating that the gymnasts will score in the 200's and if things hold true, the Minutemen might earn victory number two.

Men's Swimming

UM hosts Maine

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

The UMass Men's varsity swimming team has ended its pre-season workouts and will open its season tomorrow afternoon at 1:00 at Boyden Pool against the defending New England champions, Maine.

The swimmers, coached by a former member of the Israeli Olympic team, Bei Melamed, have been holding twice-a-day workouts in preparation for a grueling schedule that includes 11 meets and the New England Tournament in Springfield.

"Maine has an excellent recruiting program and their strength lies in their depth," said coach Melamed as he talked about tomorrow's opponent. He went on to say that his charges lost to Maine last year and that he really didn't expect to do much better this year. Maine has not gotten any weaker according to Melamed and the Minutemen have lost 6-7 solid swimmers to graduation and quittings.

"We really have a rough schedule and we don't want to waste energy against an overpowering team like Maine, so it gives us a chance to try different swimmers in different events," said Melamed as he explained his plans for the meet against Maine. So for the most part, tomorrow's meet will give Melamed a chance to see what shape his swimmers are in and what kind of times they are capable of turning in at this early stage of the season.

Some of the top performers for the Minutemen include the senior co-captains, Ben Crooker and Dave Boucher, and junior Russ Yarworth. Between them, they hold or share 10 records and will probably form the backbone of the team. The team has only two divers in the persons of junior Jim Antonino and freshman Dan Conley. Both divers have been helped in training for the upcoming season by Doug Forsythe, a faculty member, and Dennis Sullivan, a grad student and former NCAA diver.

"I have two goals for this year," said coach Melamed as he summed up his hopes for the whole season, "I'd like to see my top swimmers improve on their placings in the New England's and for the other swimmers to continually improve their own times and placings."

Cagewomen to sneak preview

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team, with an assist from the women's swim team, will begin its season one week earlier than originally planned with a 1:00 game tomorrow against Maine in the Cage.

Actually, next Saturday's game against Vermont should have been the year's initial contest for the Minutewomen, but a check of the swimmin' women's schedule revealed that they were slated to meet Maine tomorrow. A few phone calls and a little bit of arranging took place, and the result was the extra basketball game for UMass, and a brand new season's opener.

Anyway, the contest will pit two teams who squared off versus each other in the consolation round of the Easterns last year as foes again. Maine defeated UMass in that game a season ago, 69-63, as five of its players scored in double figures.

Revenge could be considered a factor for the Minutewomen, but coach Mary Ann Ozdarski claimed that it isn't so.

"The team really isn't looking at it as a grudge match," she said. "It's just the first game of the season, and they want to get off to a good start and do really well."

In her first game as Minutewomen mentor, Ozdarski plans on starting seniors Nancy O'Neil and Chris Basile in the front-court, junior Lu-Ann Fletcher at center, and freshman Sue Henry and Sue Peters in the backcourt. In the defeat last year, then-guard Jo Balletta led UMass in scoring with 21 points, while Basile chipped in with 17.

Those two players, plus a bunch more, should see action for UMass tomorrow as Ozdarski figures to use her bench a great deal.

"We're going to play a running game, with pressure defense and a lot of ballhawking," she said. If her team keeps up that quick pace, Ozdarski revealed that she'll go to the subs for relief of the starters.

Maine, meanwhile, has nine players back from last year's team. Leading the returnees are 6-0 center Barb Cummings, forwards Paula Whitney and Crystal Pazdziorko and guard Tammie Higgins. All of the above, with the exception of Cummings, contributed to the balanced offensive attack which was UMass' downfall last year.

Coached by Elaine Fox, Maine fields a young team. Only two seniors are on the squad, with three juniors, six sophomores, and one freshman rounding out the pre-season roster. It also has some height, as three players stand 5'10" to go along with the six-footer.

About her own squad, Ozdarski said, "They're improving with each practice session, and they're real excited about playing this season."

And now, the Minutewomen will get their chance a week early.

Hoopmen visit Cat country

The UMass basketball team, coming off its stunning overtime defeat to Penn State, will seek to regain the form which led to 21 victories last year as it travels to Durham, N.H. to meet the University of New Hampshire.

UMass has lost two of its first three games, while New Hampshire dropped its opener to Boston College 74-71 Wednesday night. The Wildcats, who finished with an 8-18 slate last season, have won just one of 20 games against the Minutemen since Jack Leaman took over the coaching helm at UMass 11 years ago. Despite their poor overall record last year, the Wildcats offered tough competition to UMass twice, losing by nine points on each occasion.

Leaman, as of yesterday, was unsure of who would make up his starting lineup, but he hinted that Alex Eldridge may start at one of the guard positions. Eldridge and junior Mike Pyatt, who were instrumental in starting roles as UMass won 11 straight games last year, have yet to start this season. Eldridge did not dress in the two Hall of Fame games, but came off the bench to see 35 minutes of action against Penn State.

"The way we're playing right now we can't take anyone for granted," Leaman said in anticipation of the game. "Right now we're just not executing well."

New Hampshire will be led by 6-foot-4 swingman Steve Singelais, and 6-foot-5 forward Pete Laskaris. The Cats used Singelais at forward in the BC game, while Ronnie Layne and Keith Dickson manned the backcourt. Up front, Tom Cavanaugh and Bill Pardo share the center spot.

"We're not so concerned with New Hampshire as we are with ourselves," Leaman said. "With a 1-2 record, who are we gonna finesse?"

Fan Gaudette, UMass assistant coach, scouted New Hampshire in its opening loss, and reported that the Wildcats handled the Eagle press effectively. New Hampshire is expected to play a deliberate game and stop the UMass break, but according to Gaudette, the Wildcats were at their best when running against Boston College.

Following the New Hampshire tilt, UMass will be home for a Tuesday night game with Boston University. The Terriers dropped a four point, overtime decision to Connecticut, Wednesday night in their opener.

Icemen play host to weekend homestand

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

Norwich University skates onto Orr rink today at 4 p.m. as the UMass hockey team opens a two weekend home stand. The Minutemen play Middlebury College tomorrow at 3 p.m.

This is an important weekend for the 2-1 icemen in the young season. "This is a key weekend for us," said head hockey coach Jack Canniff. "We've got two games at home. If we're going to do something we've got to do it now."

While this year UMass enjoys a home ice advantage, last season the skaters split on the road trip, nipping Norwich in Northfield, 5-4, and losing the next night in Middlebury, 3-1.

Splitting was about what both visiting teams did last season.

Norwich was 10-9-1 last year in Division II, and 12-11-1 overall to end up 11th in the league.

Norwich may not be as good as last year though, as it has lost two key performers. Cam McGregor, All-East last year with 75 points (40 goals, 35 assists), and defenseman Lou Demasi, also All-East, graduated last spring.

"You can't key on any one individual; they're the same through and through," coach Canniff said. "They present a different problem from last year with the loss of McGregor."

Norwich, because of graduation, is a very young team as it skates two full freshman lines and the two goalies are sophomores. Norwich had to replace 90 per cent of last year's scoring as the five top shooters graduated. They do have one freshman capable of putting the puck in the net as Guy Gadreau scored a hat trick in 54 seconds this season.

This season hasn't been too good to Norwich, though, as it is 0-4 with losses to Army, North Adams State, Lowell University, and Merrimack College. Two of the losses were in overtime to Army, 5-4, and to North Adams, 6-5. At one point, Norwich was up 4-0 against North Adams but it blew the lead down the stretch and ultimately the game.

The only common opponent the both teams have encountered is Lowell U., where the Chiefs blasted Norwich 7-1, while the Minutemen played their best game against them, winning 3-2.

Merwomen lose first

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swimming team lost a heart-breaker last night, losing 64-67 at the hands of a well-balanced New Hampshire team. The UMass swimmers held a slim 64-60 lead going into the last event which was the 200-yard relay. The team placed second and third in the relay, but UNH's Deena Bailey captured first and the necessary seven points, to pull her team ahead for the win.

UNH has now established itself as one of the teams to beat with a perfect 4-0 record and UMass isn't too far behind with a 3-1 record. The Minutewomen have eight meets remaining on their schedule.

Theresa Totin was the only women swimmer to garner three first place finishes, registering a fine 33.7 in the 50-yard breaststroke. She also recorded a 1:08.5 in the 100-yard backstroke and a 1:10 in the 100-yard breaststroke.

Deb Schwartz was UMass' only double winner, turning in an outstanding 2:28.2 in the 200-yard individual medley and an equally fine time of 1:05.4 in the 100-yard butterfly.

Single winners were Suzy Strobel on the one-meter optional board and Mary-Ellen Butler swam a 1:00.5 in the 100-yard freestyle.

Although somewhat disappointed, head coach Eve Atkinson summed up the meet by saying, "In the first half we did better than we expected. I felt that both coaches knew it would come down to the last event."

UNH head coach Margie Shuer had the meet analyzed quite well in saying, "The 200-yard medley relay was the key. Eve really stacked her swimmers for the meet. The Totins swam in three individual events and that is very tough physically," she said.

Diving coach Doug Forsythe felt the diving competition played an important role. Forsythe said, "It was incredibly close and I felt the girls performed very well, considering it was an early season meet.

Undaunted, the merwomen take on the University of Maine at 1:00 p.m. this Saturday at the NOPE Gym. Their record is 3-1, but the swimmers don't feel like losers after the UNH meet.

Field to probe Kappa Sigma

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The vice-chancellor of Student Affairs here has instructed the dean of students to conduct a thorough investigation of alleged "endangering behavior" incidents perpetrated by the fraternity Kappa Sigma upon Gorman House dormitory in Central Residential Area, the Collegian has learned.

Robert L. Woodbury has informed William F. Field to carefully investigate the alleged incidents, all but one of which the fraternity has denied, keeping in mind that members of the fraternity are subject to the same codes of conduct as a University residence hall student and, therefore, are subject to the same disciplinary action.

The fraternity is adjacent to the dormitory on Butterfield Terrace in Central.

Incidents to be investigated by Field include the alleged throwing of oranges, apples, pears, beer bottles and rocks through closed windows of several Gorman residents during the early morning hours of Sept. 17, Nov. 20, and Dec. 1.

The fraternity is also alleged by the dormitory to have awakened Gorman residents at 6 a.m. Nov. 29 with loud screaming, yelling, whistling and shouting of obscenities. Police were called to the scene at the time of both incidents.

Other incidents alleged to have occured in past semesters by Gorman include an assault of a Gorman resident who was parking his car in front of the Kappa Sigma parking lot; the breaking of a chandelier in Hills House during a fall 1975, Gorman Halloween party; and the harassment of female students by knocking on their dormitory doors late at night and waving live mice in front of them.

It was resolved to conduct an investigation into the matter during a meeting called Thursday by Woodbury and attended by Field, Edward M. Bowe, University Greek Area Affairs director; William W. Taylor, associate director of Central Orchard Hill; and Sally A. Freeman, director of the Community Development Center.

Gorman residents have also alleged that a black man who was at the dormitory to apply for the position of head of residence was physically assaulted by members of the fraternity at the beginning of this semester.

Allegedly reported to Field by a former Gorman head of residence in spring of this year were incidents of members of the fraternity urinating from the house balcony in full view of Gorman residents.

Field says he does not remember the alleged incidents being reported to him during a phone conversation with the head of residence.

He also said he did not have specific names and documentary evidence in order to investigate the alleged incidents.

Field told the Gorman head of residence last semester and the current head of residence this semester that unless specific persons and identifications were given, he could not "suspend unnamed people."

Field did tell both heads of residence to report to him any violations of the University Endangering Behavior Policy.

The policy calls for "the removal of any person causing physical assault or any harassment of another person."

According to the document, "harassment" includes verbal and-or written invasion of an individual's rights, be it racial, sexual or personal in nature, such as graffiti or obscene phone calls.

Examples of endangering behavior include throwing or dropping objects from windows and-or balconies of residence halls. Endangering behavior is not necessarily limited to this, but includes all behavior seen as potentially injurious to the health and safety of the University community.

Taylor said in an interview that the policy holds individuals responsible for their actions to the extent that if the person violates the University policy of behavior, the University retains the right to remove the person from the University community.

The most recent incidents involve the throwing of bottles through windows of Gorman and narrowly missing residents who were sleeping, as alleged by the Gorman head of residence.

On Saturday morning, Nov. 20, between the hours of 1 and 2, a beer bottle came crashing through the window of a counselor, narrowly missing his head and sending slivers of glass into his hair. The counselor was unhurt.

On last Wednesday, a Miller beer bottle was thrown through the window of another resident at 1:51 a.m. The bottle hit the top corner of the room, shattered the window and smashed in the room. The two residents also were unhurt. A police report regarding this incident is due to be presented to Woodbury today.

To date, Kappa Sigma has only admitted to the Sept. 17 fruit-throwing incident. Stephen Monks, president of the fraternity, said the members of the fraternity who committed the acts have been suspended from all social functions of the fraternity. He also said he could not speak or be responsible for any alleged incidents which occurred prior to this semester.

Kappa Sigma is a local chapter of the national fraternity, whose headquarters are in Virginia.

Following the Sept. 17 incident, the Gorman head of residence sent a letter dated Oct. 14 to the Kappa Sigma national fraternity headquarters.

"It has become necessary to write the national chapter after numerous efforts have failed to reach mutual understanding between Gorman and Kappa Sigma," the letter stated.

"There has also been an apparent lack of concern on the part of the University Greek Area Council in reference to our problem..... A point in time is now upon us where we must seek some serious assistance with this problem."

In the letter, the Gorman head of residence described the incident of Sept. 17, where, "during the early morning hours, the south side of the dorm, the land being adjacent to that of the fraternity, was subjected to a malicious and dangerous attack of foreign missiles (i.e. oranges, apples, and pears) being thrown through the closed windows of several Gorman residents, resulting in the glass shattering and breakage of ten windows.

"One need not spell out the seriousness of this incident. Grave bodily injury could have been inflicted upon the 20 residents, many of whom were asleep under the window or looking out of the windows to see where the noise was originating from. Needless to see, this can no longer be tolerated," stated the letter.

Kappa Sigma sent an official apology to the Gorman head of residence which stated:

"We, the brothers of the Kappa Sigma, would like to express our apologies for an incident the morning of September 17th during which a number of windows in the dormitory were broken. It is not known why such an incident occurred and we do not wish to inflate the situation any more than it already has been. We do, however, wish to express our apologies and wish to assure you that such an incident will not happen again. We also expect to pay full restitution for all damages done that evening."

The head of residence went to Dean Field Monday, Oct. 4, who told them that this incident should have reported to him immediately, should have had documentary evidence, and a police report.

"I cannot deal with vaguaries," said Field. I do not excuse this behavior. But I cannot do a thing unless we have some evidence," he said.

Field told the head of residence to immediately report any further incidents to him immediately.

The Kappa Sigma national fraternity in Virginia responded to the Gorman letter a month later. A letter responding to the situation was sent Bowe.

Bowe, in an interview, said he could not divulge the contents of the letter, but did say the national chapter will take severe displinary action if another incident was reported.

Bowe said a month ago, "If a future incident happens, I would imagine Kappa Sigma's existence on this campus would be seriously reconsidered in terms of their chapter being allowed to stay on the campus."

Bowe said the national chapter is anxious about the chapter here on campus, because "every chapter expects the goals and philosophy of each charter chapter to be adhered to and followed. They want to have a model chapter wherever the national fraternity is represented," he said.

Bowe said he feels the problems between Kappa Sigma and Gorman are due to the personalities of several of the residents of both houses. He also cited the problem of changing membership in Kappa Sigma with the membership of the fraternity being made up of a majority of freshman and sophomore.

According to Bowe and Monks, previous incidents were "smoothed over" by the house councils of both houses. Both agreed that Gorman wasn't exactly the "greatest of neighbors."

"There are not a bunch of angels living in Gorman. Different residents in Gorman have instigated incidents in the past," said Monks.

No decision in bargaining vote

By LISA MeLILLI
Collegian Staff

No decision was reached from the faculty vote held last week on whether to adopt collective bargaining with the administration since none of the choices received over 50 per cent of the vote, according to a spokesperson from the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission.

Joan A. Quinlan said Friday a run-off election will be held early next year between the Massachusetts Society of Professors and no agent.

An election was held on the Amherst and Boston campuses Dec. 1 and 2 for faculty to determine if they wanted a union and, if so, which of two competing organizations they wanted to represent them.

Quinlan said 48 per cent of the 1658 faculty who voted favored a union under the Massachusetts Society of Professors, one of the organizations competing to represent faculty. Thirty per cent voted in favor of not having a union formed. The American Association of University Professors, the other competing organization, received 15 per cent of the vote.

Quinlan said one of the decisions needed 50 per cent plus one to win in the election.

The life of an art major: Distinctive, creative, fun

This week, Nikki got acquainted with two Fine Arts majors, Peter Belsito and Dennis Quill.

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

"Life is like a flashlight, batteries not included..." laughed the voice over the tape recorder. It was not readily apparent to whom the pithy aphorism belonged as both Peter Belsito and Dennis Quill alternately admitted and denied authorship.

Weeks before the senior sculpture majors had recorded a variety of stories and thoughts onto a cassette tape as an artistic exercise. As the tape played, Quill spoke above his recording of past creative works: "Last year, Peter and I did a 'piece' entitled 'Stakeout' where we placed four strategically located wooden stakes around the university." The stakes served to symbolically pin down the university onto the surface of the earth.

Many of their projects deal with 'conceptual art.' "Conceptual art was an art movement that has already come and gone, you might say," explained Belsito. "It is an art form concerned more with the idea of an object than the object itself."

Quill toyed with the recorder searching for some important ideas expressed on tape. Belsito moved about his North Amherst apartment. His bedroom doubles as an art studio where paintings and sketches adorn the walls. Like Quill's art room in Sunderland the personal art works are originally designed and drawn by the inhabitant. On a large easel rests the unfinished sketch of Poto Marignetti. "He was a racist and sexist," calls Belsito. "I'm fascinated by people like him, he believed in the war as the great purger a real fascist." Quill laughs momentarily distracted from the recorder.

"Life is like a stop sign, you go right through it." Quill laughs again, "We were down at the cape when we made this." He adds that he "did a piece" in Horseneck Beach for his BFA. "I arranged stones on the beach in the shape of a star and photographed it being washed away by the incoming tide."

Though a sculpture major, Quill and Belsito rely heavily upon their cameras. "Some pieces we do are but temporary, like my sculpture at the beach, but as class projects they must be proved as having been completed. The tool we use to record the art work's existence is by photography."

Quill, a native of New Bedford, criticized his department for the lack of photography labs. "We pay an art fee for the use of foundry, but due to a lack of photography labs I must pay an additional fee on my own to developers for my pictures of my work."

Photography is only one of the medians used for the art works of sculpture majors. "We work with video and other 'soft' ware," said Belsito, "and then there are the 'earthware' mediums such as sand."

After the completion of required art courses such as a comprehensive art survey that traces art history from ancient times to the late 1800's, and the sequel which takes the student from the nineteenth century to the present, art students may concentrate for the most part on their specific fields, such as sculpture.

"This semester both Peter and I are taking a sculpture seminar course," said Quill. "The structure is not as regimented as in some of the other more disciplined majors," added Belsito. "We're able to have a rather loose reign and enter creative works for graded projects."

Belsito added that he would find an exclusively modern art course to be almost "impossible, as the professor would have to be in contact with the most recent of art concepts everywhere maybe that would be more feasible in some place like New York City."

Both students speak highly of their current professors, particularly their Sculpture Seminar instructor John Townsend.

"These guys oh, they're real sweethearts," he laughs, when interviewed last week in his pupil's presence. "Actually they are very serious students, and talented I might add."

However, even the most serious and dedicated of art students must purge themselves of creative thought occasionally. "I'm having a funeral," said Quill. "I'm going to bury all my old sculptures and start again." When the art student has a possession of worth, he might attempt to exhibit it to the public through a gallery. While Quill eulogizes this month over tangible art expression, Peter Belsito will be exhibiting his work. Belsito has designed ad posters for his own showing. He has designed ad posters for artists of different mediums such as Gil-Scot Heron and Brian Jackson. The gallery that is to house Belsito's art works is the Student Union Art Gallery.

The Gallery is open every day to the public and exhibits different artistic shows bimonthly. The man who runs the Gallery is named Russell Sumgrub, the pseudonym of Peter Belsito. Belsito sees himself as an artist who donates his time to the gallery.

"But I didn't want to be exclusively associated with the Gallery," Belsito said, "so I thought up a pseudonymn." Belsito spends about twenty hours each weekend, in addition to the countless hours during school weeks, arranging artis't works for display. "With a budget of over $8,000 I wanted to be able to bring in talent outside of the student population and local area."

With the help of the Gallery Program Council Belsito has been responsible for such artists as former Collegian cartoonist Kris Jackson, conceptual artist Chris Burden, and most recently the outrageous Willoughby Sharp. "We worked on the plans for Willoughby for over a month," recalled Belsito. "But I've been working for over a year on my own show."

Belsito's sculpture professor is a member of the Program Council as well original Founding committee. Said Townsend, "The art shows used to be shown in the hall in front of the gallery and the Commonwealth Room. The gallery used to be used as periodical room. Art works were abused or defaced hanging in the halls. With work and time we eventually got the periodical room changed to the Student Union Art Gallery. Townsend added that, "The value of the whole gallery is that it has enriched the life of the art student as well as the student body in general."

"Life is like a barroom, a lot of drunks." The tape recorder whines on. "Sometimes we just do things like that tape," said Belsito, "for the fun of it, but that is art to; anything you do as ong as it is done well is art." Belsito, who comes from Leominster, Ma. and attended UMass four years ago, feels that, "My life is art."

The life of an art major is a particularly strained-filled one as the individual is constantly pressured to reach for more creative distinctive ideas. Belsito comes from an artistic family that encouraged his talent. He attended art classes at Worcester Museum school at the age of 7. After some semesters at UMass Belsito took out some time to work.

Sylvan government hits N.E./Sylvan Affairs office

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Criticisms concerning the apparent lack of cooperation and responsibility of the Northeast-Sylvan Student Affairs Office in dealings with the funding and budgetary problems of the Sylvan Area Government (SAG) were made by several members at last night's meeting held in Cashin House.

The criticisms were made in an attempt to clarify the cause of the problems the SAG has had with the payment of program coordinators and the allocation of monies for budgets submitted by some of the area programs.

A representative from Brown House said that the problem was due to the complete change-over of officers and representatives of the SAG. However, co-editor of the Sylvan Area newspaper, Jon Braverman, refuted this by saying the new officers and government were victimized by their own inexperience and the failure of those who are experienced, and paid, to communicate to them procedures for making responsible and rational budgetary decisions.

"When the new area government people took office they were totally inexperienced," said Braverman. "However, there is a paid professional staff which should have met with the new area government people and explain to them soung budgetary procedures, traditional uses of area government money, and traditional sources for funding individual projects."

Braverman referred to an overallocation of monies to the Sylvan Third World Cultural Society as one adverse affect of the failure of the Student Affairs Office to orientate the new area government to the procedures of sound budgetary policy.

Another representative mentioned the probability of some area programs, such as WSYL-TV, may receive little or no money at all for the same reasoning given by Braverman.

Reflecting on her experiences with the Student Affairs Office, SAG president Gail Syphers commented on their authoratarian approach in dealing with matters of the dissemination of project support money.

"With the change-over in the directorship of the Northeast-Sylvan Student Affairs Office, the office seems to have become a strictly staff-oriented operation. Not only is student input minimal, but the input that exists doesn't appear to be taken into account. They always appear to be helping us out, but as far as results go, they haven't accomplished much."

The only other business at the meeting was an announcement by Greg Jones that positions are available for Sylvan Area residents interested in becoming an advocate for the Student Judiciary.

Custodian sentenced

William P. Smith, the UMass Fine Arts Center former head custodian accused of stealing more than $20,000 worth of equipment from the building over a three-year period, has been sentenced to a year in the Hampshire County House of Correction and two years probation.

Smith, 34, of Granby, pleaded guilty to the charge in Hampshire County Superior Court. Judge John F. Moriarity pronounced the sentence.

The robberies were discovered when a Leominster man contacted the manufacturer of a tape unit for accessory parts. The $8,000 eight-track stereo tape unit had been sold to the man by Smith, and was one of the only two such units on the East Coast, both of which are located in Amherst.

Also awaiting trial on charges of being in possession of stolen goods is George H. McNamara Jr., 25, of 414 North Pleasant.

"When incidents happen, we want to alleviate them, so they don't happen again. We don't go around looking for fights with Gorman," he said.

Several Gorman residents are visibly upset with the University's lack of response and communication and inability to deal with confrontations between Gorman and Kappa Sigma.

"Dean Field is not sensitive to the general needs of students in this dorm. He just doesn't give a damn," said one Gorman resident.

"If these incidents continue to go on, somebody is going to get seriously hurt and maybe killed. Right now there is a great amount of tension between Gorman and Kappa Sigma, and I'm afraid a major fight will break out unless something is done," another Gorman resident said.

One female resident said, "It will probably take somebody getting hurt before the University wakes up and does something.

Student Center hosts biographical drama

Arthur Napier Burghart

Frederick Douglass will come alive tonight through the talents of Arthur Napier Burghart. The versatile actor will give a live performance of Douglass, the leading black spokesperson of the 19th century, at the Southwest Center for the Performing Arts, Hampden Student Center, tonight at 8 p.m.

The Center for Racial Understanding, the Malcolm X Room and the Five College Lecture Fund will sponsor the event.

Burghart is an actor who has appeared in motion pictures, and repertory theatre, both on and off Broadway. "Cotton Comes to Harlem" and Network motion pictures are to his credit. He has performed in a variety of plays: Baraka's "The Slave" and "Dutchman", Shakespeare's "Richard III" and "King Lear", and O'Neil's "The Iceman Cometh" and Emperor Jones" and many more.

Douglass was born into slavery, named Frederick Augustus Washington Bailey in Tuchahoe, Maryland in 1817. At eight he was sent to Baltimore to work for one of his master's relatives. In 1837, he fled from his owners. To avoid capture he dropped his two middle names and changed his last name.

At a meeting of the Massachusetts Antislavery Society in 1841, Douglass told what freedom meant to him. The audience was so impressed that the society hired him to lecture about his experiences as a slave.

During the early 1840's, Douglass protested segregated seating on railroad trains by sitting in cars reserved for whites. He had to be dragged from the white cars. Douglass also protested against religious discrimination. He once walked out of a church that kept blacks from taking part in a service until all the whites had finished participating.

"Narrative of the LIfe of Frederick Douglass," an autobiography, was published in 1845. Douglass feared that his identity as a runaway slave would be revealed when the book was published, so he went to England that same year. In England, he continued to speak against slavery. He also found friends who raised enough money to buy his freedom. Upon his return to the United States in 1847 he founded an antislavery newspaper, the North Star, in Rochester, N.Y.

Douglass charged that employers hired white immigrants before they would hire black Americans. He accused even some abolitionist businesses a job discrimination against Negroes. He led a successful attack against segregated school in Rochester.

The Center of the Performing Arts is located in the Southwest Residential College, Hampden Student Center at UMass, Amherst.

Speaker discusses role of agriculture

By RICHARD KLEIN
Collegian Staff

"The world needs a better distribution of hunger."

This was the unconventional message delivered to an SBA audience last Thursday by Winston Way, extension Agonomist from the University of Vermont.

Way presented in detail a survey of the position of agriculture in the world today. Only the inevitable and not-far-off crisis in food production will awaken people to the necessity of action, he said.

Way feels that only when American and Western europe feel the economic pinch of a rising population's need for even-greater food supplies will necessary changes occur in agriculture policy and individual habits.

In New England, Way hopes for a more rational land use policy to preserve the precious farmland which is now being sold for industrial and residential development, especially in such prime agricultural areas as the Connecticut River valley.

In current alternate life styles, such as the "back to the earth" movement, Way sees hope for more extensive and different forms of agriculture in New England, involving more people than at present.

But in addition, "we need a very positive system of zoning" to prevent loss of farmland, Way feels. "We're going to have to do this in New England," he said.

When asked about the political chances of such a plan, Way was pessimistic. He fears that the "New Jerseyfication" of Western Massachusetts may be inevitable because of the political and economic difficulties involved in regional zoning or governmental purchase of land for agricultural use.

"The average American is very complacent," Way said. "We're a crisis-to-crisis society". He hopes, however, that some changes are possible now.

He sees promise in a "land bank," funded by private sources, which was recently established in southern Vermont. Way said it had already ensured that some land will be saved for agricultural use, and it could provide the opportunity for people to try their hand at farming who are unable to make the necessary financial investment in farm land.

Most of the 50-plus persons who braved last Thursday night's snowy weather to attend the lecture stayed afterwards for questions. Topics ranged from the energy-related aspects of agriculture to the mounting difficulties of farming in Western Masachusetts.

Aldermen to hear safety proposals

By A. TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

New fire safety proposals, including one requiring landlords to install smoke detectors in all Amherst apartment complexes, will be presented to the Amherst Board of Selectmen tonight by Ken Mosakowski, a resident of the recently fire-damaged Crown Point apartments.

Mosakowski will recommend these proposals be drafted into a warrant article form for a Special Town Meeting to be called in late January or early February.

"I think the Selectmen are going to be cooperative," he said, "but if not, I'll try to get a Special Town Meeting other ways."

"This is a serious enough situation to get taken care of this winter rather than waiting until May when it shall all be ancient history," he said.

The new safety proposals are a direct result of the Nov. 21 fire at the Crown Point apartment complex which obliterated four apartments, damaged eight others and left 16 families homeless. Estimated property loss from the fire, whose cause is still unknown, was $125,000 according to the Fire Report issued Nov. 22nd by Lt. Myron Chudzik of the Amherst Fire Department.

Mosakowski said he believed if smoke detectors had been present and hooked up correctly the Crown Point fire could have been contained with considerably less damage. "Smoke detectors are better than the human nose," he said.

The proposals, besides installing smoke detectors in Amherst apartments, include acquiring land adjacent to Snell Street to construct a separate access road to Crown Point apartments to facilitate speedy entry of fire vehicles into the complex.

Mosakowski will also request that the town's Fire Chief conduct a special survey to determine if any fire-prevention effectiveness could be achieved by requiring installation of fire extinguishers in all Amherst apartment complexes and to issue a report of his findings.

In addition, he will propose an investigation by the Town Manager to evaluate the town's Inspection Services department's present capabilities, adequacy and efficiency and to issue a report of his findings.

Thirty residents of the Crown Point apartment complex, some of whom have lived in Amherst since 1920's, met last Friday evening to discuss their strategy and hear the fire safety proposals for Amherst. The tenants heard State Representative James Collins (D-Amherst) describe legislation he filed last week, requiring installation of automatic smoke detector systems in certain residential buildings in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Mosadowski said that besides "tightening up existing laws" Collins is making the bill retroactive; because of this he feels Collins will have a "tough time" with the bill.

Joan Logan, a resident of Crown Point who lost all her belongings including an invaluable library, pointed out that fire safety reforms achieved by unified action of Crown Point residents would benefit both short and long term tenants in the town's numerous other apartment complexes.

News in Brief

Carter considers pardon

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — President-elect Jimmy Carter said yesterday his staff is considering whether to expand the categories of Vietnam war resisters he will pardon during the first week of his administration.

Standing outside the Plains Baptist Church, Carter indicated to reporters that a broader pardon is under consideration.

He said, however, no decision has been reached.

"We're trying to decide how to word the pardon," he said.

"It's going to be done the first week I'm in office, but the different categories of violators is something we're assessing now. I don't know."

Gilmore may have new trial

SALT LAKE CITY [UPI] — Condemned killer Gary Gilmore, angered by his mother's successful plea to the U.S. Supreme Court to prevent his execution at sunrise today may have to go through a second murder trial, autorities said yesterday.

Utah County Attorney Noall Wooton, who prosecuted Gilmore, said he would decide by today whether to seek his trial for another slaying.

Gilmore was convicted for the murder of motel clerk Bennie Bushnell, 26, in a robbery July 20. But in letters to his girlfriend, he also admitted killing Max David Jensen the day before in a gas station holdup.

"If we're going to try Gilmore for this other killing, we've got to begin right away," Wooton said Saturday.

"With all this publicity and Gilmore's statements, it will be hard enough just to impanel a jury."

New warnings to pill users

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Food and Drug Administration proposed a new warning yesterday to advise women who take birth control pills about the risks of birth defects, tumors, blood clots and, in women over age 40, heart attacks.

At the same time, however, the agency said those warnings would be accompanied by a statement that "birth control pills are the most effective method of contraception except sterilization."

The combined warning and endorsement are part of a new brochure which, for the first time, will be required in packages of birth control pills when they are purchased from the druggist.

Currently there is only a brief summary of information in each pill packet. Doctors have access to a more detailed brochure, but the pill user can get that brochure only if her doctor offers it or if she asks the doctor for it.

SALT talks may reopen with Carter

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President-elect Jimmy Carter and his secretary of state-designate, Cyrus R. Vance, have indicated they intend to accept Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev's call for an early breakthrough in the deadlocked strategic arms talks.

Carter says he hopes to conclude a strategic arms accord soon after his Jan. 20 inauguration.

On possibility was that he and Vance will seek a separate settlement of two issues that have hampered agreement in talks conducted by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

In an appearance on NBC-TV's "Today Show" Friday, Carter said he might sign an "interim" agreement which would be called SALT II.

Strategic Arms Limitation Talks — II, then begin work on a more comprehensive accord which would become SALT III.

Four look to leader post

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With fellow Democrats about to annoint Thomas P. O'Neill the new Speaker of the House, a close battle shaped up yesterday among four candidates scrambling for O'Neill's old job as House majority leader.

O'Neill is unopposed in his bid to succeed retired Speaker Carl Albert. The House Democratic Caucus meets today to nominate O'Neill to his new job and begin organizing the House, which the party will continue to control in the new 95th Congress.

There is no doubt O'Neill will be formally elected by the full House when Congress convenes Jan. 4, although there will be the bi-annual token contest between Democrats and Republicans.

House GOP leader John Rhodes of Arizona, expected to be renamed in his party's conference Wednesday, will oppose O'Neill for speaker and lose in a traditional party-line vote.

The real battle among the Democrats is for O'Neill's successor as majority leader.

The best pre-caucus estimates were that Rep. Phillip Burton of California would win by a razor-thin majority over Rep. Richard Bolling of Missouri, with Reps. Jim Wright of Texas and John McFall of California coming in third and fourth.

Wright appeared a dark horse in the leadership fight, getting into the race late but accumulating some moderate and conservative backing.

And McFall, the current Democratic whip, was a decided underdog even before he was linked with the current investigation of influence-peddling by agents of the South Korean government.

Burton, chairman of the caucus, and Bolling, highly respected for his parliamentary knowledge, both predicted victory by a third ballot. Bolling agreed with an assessment by many observers that victory could come by a margin of as little as five or six votes.

Corpse found, hush comes over school

FARMINGTON, Conn. [AP] — A silence has come over the exclusive Miss Porter's School for girls two days after the disclosure that a newborn infant's corpse was found on the campus.

Students and faculty yesterday were under orders not to speak to reporters after Headmaster Warren Hance told them Friday that the body of an infant, whose mother was a student at the school, was discovered Nov. 15.

Television and newspaper accounts have quoted "authoritative sources" as saying the body of a male infant was found in a plastic bag under a bed in a dormitory at the secondary school.

Officials, however, have refused to discuss specifics in the episode except to confirm the student's child was found dead and that police are investigating further.

"I'm very proud of the community here. I had confidence that they would react in a mature, concerned way and they have," Hance said yesterday.

"They're kids but they've been very grown up about this."

Radio-equipped security guards at the tree-lined, colonial-style campus in this Hartford suburb patroled yesterday to make sure the headmaster's orders were enforced.

"It's been tough on the kids," Hance said.

Dr. Rlliot Gross, the state's chief medical examiner, said an autopsy was performed the day after the body was discovered but the infant's age and cause of death have not yet been determined.He said he expected further tests results soon.

One news story quoted a source as saying the infant was two hours old when it died. But another report said the baby was three weeks old.

One pupil yesterday said she didn't think any students were aware that one of their colleages had been carrying a child through the school year. "It definitely was a surprise for me," and referring further questions to the school administration.

Boys safe

BREWSTER [UPI] — The staff and about 20 emotionally disturbed boys at Boxwood School were evacuated after fire swept through the wooden structure Saturday night.

Fire officials in the town called on Orleans and Dennis fire companies to aid in the four-hour battle to extinguish the fire. The youths were evacuated to the nearby Lathams School.

Prison change

WALPOLE [UPI] — Norfolk County Dist. Atty. William Delahunt and state Corrections Commissioner Frank Hall have said they will ask Gov. Michael S. Dukakis to convert a state owned facility to a medium-security facility within three weeks.

The move resulted from reports of the existence of an execution squad at Walpole State Prison.

The squad was allegedly responsible for the murder of prison inmate Robert Perrotta Thanksgiving night.

There have been five murders at the prison in less than six months.

Dickey plan

JACKMAN, Maine [UPI] — The first of five public hearings on a controversial plan to cut a power line corridor more than 200 miles through the wilderness of Maine's western border will be held here tonight.

The 150-foot-wide corridor would contain transmission lines from the proposed Dickey-Lincoln hydroelectric project on the Saint John River. The twin, 345,000-volt lines would be strung from 165-foot-tall steel towers.

The plan, developed by the U.S. Department of the Interior, drew criticism over the weekend from the Natural Resources Council of Maine, which opposes the entire Dickey-Lincoln project.

"The selection of a route through 200 miles of relatively unspoiled Maine woods and mountains adds the finishing touch to the overwhelming weight of evidence against the Dickey-Lincoln project," NRC Assistant Director Wayne Cobb said.

Good investment

WATERBURY, CONN. [UPI] — Blacks made a business investment last month when they voted in large numbers for President-elect Jimmy Carter, according State Treasurer Henry E. Parker.

Parker told a gathering of Connecticut's Federation of Black Democratic Clubs Saturday that blacks all over the country made the right decision on Nov. 2 when they overwhelmingly voted for Carter.

Polls showed Ninety-three per cent of all U.S. blacks voted for the Georgian in the presidential election.

To the limit

GLOUCESTER [UPI] — The National Marine Fisheries Service is planning to toughen its method of attack to enforce the 200-mile fishing limit off New England.

The fisheries service regional law enforcement officer, Dan Russ, said the group is planning to post a group of American observers on foreign vessels to enforce the limit.

The fisheries service also hope to strengthen coast guard sea and air forces and to expand their surveillance units.

Russ said the U.S. limit becomes effective March 1, 1977.

Public hearings have recently been held throughout New England on the new fishing limit.

JFK home

BOSTON [UPI] — The National Park Service will reopen the Brookline home of former president John F. Kennedy Dec. 18.

The house has been closed since September 1975 when a firebomb destroyed the two-story, wooden framed house.

The 35th president was born there May 29, 1917. President Lyndon B. Johnson had the house declared a national historic site in 1967.

Marley shot

KINGSTON, Jamaica [UPI] — Bob Marley, one of Jamaica's top reggae singers, and three members of his troupe were shot and wounded Friday night be a band of gunmen who invaded his home, police said Saturday. The attack was believed politically motivated.

Marley, whose revolutionary musical style is highly popular among fans of Jamaican music in the United States, was shot in the left hand by the gunmen in the raid on his uptown Kingston bungalow.

The other three victims, all members of his reggae troupe "Bob Marley and the Wailers," were Rita Marley, Lewis Griffiths and manager Don Daylor.

Marley, 31, was released from University Hospital Saturday. The other three remained hospitalized but were described as in satisfactory condition.

Police placed Marley's home under heavy guard following his release from the hospital.

Marley, who wears the long braided "dreadlocks" of the Jamaican Rastafarian movement and is the boyfriend of this year's Miss World, Cindy Breakspeare, has made frequent tours of the United States.

Marley was scheduled to give a free public concert yesterday at Hero's Circle — an event sponsored by the government of Prime Minister Michael Norman Manley.

Police declined to comment on the motives behind the attack, but a spokesman for Manley said he believed the raiders were connected with government enemies.

Since January partisans of Manley's Peoples National Party and the rival Jamaica Labor party have been waging gang warfare in a prelude to elections scheduled for Dec. 15.

The government has declared a state of emergency and instituted mandatory life sentences for those caught with firearms without permits, but the measures have failed to stop the violence.

Miki holds small lead

TOKYO [UPI] — Prime Minister Takeo Miki's Liberal Democratic party held a dwindling lead yesterday in elections that were Japanese voters' first chance to react to the ruling party's handling of the Lockheed payoff scandals.

The Liberal Democrats, split internally by disputes over Miki's extensive investigation of the $12 million scandal, lost seats in a number of their traditional rural strongholds.

The Japan Broadcasting Corp. predicted the party, which has a conservative philosophy despite its name, might fail to win a majority of the 511-seat House of Representatives.

The Liberal Democrats and their predecessors have controlled Japan since 1947, except for a brief period of socialist rule in 1948. Miki said he would consider voters had endorsed his administration if the LDP won 271 seats, the minimum needed to control committees in the lower house of the Diet.

Vote-counting will take place today in urban areas, including Tokyo and Osaka, where the LDP's foes are strongest.

Boycott course evaluation forms

Before buying a product, a wise shopper will always compare and evaluate to minimize the chances of becoming dissatisfied with the item later.

In a very real sense, students are consumers of an education. Choosing courses at UMass is like buying products from a Sears Roebuck mail order catalogue; you get the manufacturer's description but no evaluative information.

One of the intended purposes of the course evaluation forms, according to former Vice-Chancellor of Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern, was to "provide some kind of public information to students so that they can make appropriate course decisions."

However, this purpose does not correspond to the reality today.

Since the data compiled from the forms has been classified "confidential" by the University administration, students are in a predicament of having no means to determine the quality of the courses being offered.

The administration's rationale for harboring this vital information away from students is that release of the data violates a professor's privacy, and thus could be illegal. But other campuses do reveal this data, including UMass-Worcester.

And in the opinion of a Student Legal Services attorney, "The professor evaluation data is not personal to the professor, it did not originate in him-her, and yet it is information to which s-he as well as others, have access." This attorney has also suggested that the University may be violating the open information law by withholding the results of course evaluations.

These contradictions should be dispelled now.

Over 80 per cent of students want to have access to the information garnered from these forms, a Student Center for Educational Research study reported.

Recently, the Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously passed a resolution urging students to boycott the University's evaluation program. As a meaningful complement to this statement, the senate has chartered a committee charged with the responsibility of developing an alternative student-run evaluation program next semester. The results will be published with the Course Description Guide.

So let's send the administration a message saying we don't want their bogus evaluation forms. We see boycotting the forms as an evolutionary step for a student-shaped curriculum.

Socialism: The people's choice in Britain

By STEPHEN BLAUER

BRITAIN'S DROUGHT
BRITAIN'S DROUGHT
BRITAIN'S DROUGHT
BRITAIN'S DROUGHT TO BOOST BEER PRICE

Yardley Jones, Montreal Star, Canada

Just last week, a lead newspaper article in the Times (London), stated that a conservative government M.P. had accused thirty three left wing M.P.'s of being an "unholy alliance of crypto communists". The charge was breach of priviledge, for having views which he claimed were those of "communists, trotskyists and marxists. The accused M.P.'s retaliated against this charge of treason by proclaiming the smear as approaching the tactics of the McCarthy era in the U.S., when people were judged guilty by association. This is only one example of many past and present attempts to discredit the left's growing strength in the U.K.

At this time, the British people are faced by an increasingly critical economic crisis. Inflation is moving towards an annual 20 per cent and almost 1,500,000 workers are out of jobs. Since 1970, the real wage has dropped about 10 per cent. The country's balance of payments deficit is constantly expanding and now approaches 5,000 pounds, or about one-twelfth of the total output. It is quite clear now that full employment maintenence is not possible within the existing system. Full employment can be achieved during a boom period, but the boom aggravates the balance of payments deficit and causes government action to balance the international accounts, which in turn regenerates substantial unemployment.

The labor government has been unable to create significant capital investment to hasten application of automation and other technological and scientific advances. This low investment has meant that new techniques have been adopted slowly and productivity has lagged, so that British industry has become even more backward relative to its competitors. Although productive power if far greater now than ever before, this potential lays idle or is restrained by investor's apprehension towards Britian's future and other low tax, high profit investments. These other investments take place abroad, where British assets equal 880m pounds, including 1,500m pounds of private annual investment.

Along with this dubious investment abroad, a government policy of extensive military presence follows, costing the tax payers 440m pounds per year. Britain, like Japan, is in the awkward position of being both an imperialist power and a highly dependent economy. The labor government has accepted this dependancy and accordingly has placed world markets and demands of foreign creditors before the needs of Britain's population. The people have increasingly become prey to these faceless international moneylenders, whose attachment to high profits, low wages and poor social services is notorious.

The effects of these problems and the stop- go economic policies which follow were glorified November 17, when 60,000 people marched on parliament in protest of cuts in consumption, public spending and the abnormally high unemployment rates. Many trade unions, specifically the national union of public employees, many students and education personnel listened to a few union representatives speak of progressive economic policies on behalf of the country's workers. Like many union speeches in America, they offered no practical guidelines in which to persue their progressive program and merely added to the already mountainous rhetorical junk heap.

These "progressive" labor programs have THREE TIMES cut real wages and increased unemployment, leading to the impoverishment of the workers, the demoralization of the labor movement and a return to a conservative government.

The process of social reform must take a methodical and carefully planned direction if it is to succeed. Today many of the decisions about what is to be produced and who consumes it are not decisions at all, but fatalities. The threatening presence of nuclear reactors, which could at any time destroy many lives and the environment, were not consciously decided by any one person, but were the result of many uncoordinated decisions by isolated consumers and producers connected by the market mechinism.

So an elected planning device must directly centralize control over the key sectors of the British economy. This democratically appointed administration would be fully accountable for all planning measures. Presently the top two hundred firms (industrial) and their contractors account for almost all industrial output here. Easily, this concentrated group would create a powerful and centralized instrument of economic control. The role and operations within the industries could finally be effectively altered and modernized.

Public services such as health, housing, education, transport, and recreational facilities are presently inadequate and grossly maldistributed, being concentrated in the middle and upperclass areas and spread thin in the working class area. A firm committment must be made to provide modern and improved collective facilities ~~and to~~ cease production of any wasteful and non-collective programs.

The elimination of waste and the re-distribution of wealth are paramount in restructuring for an efficient socialist society. Waste takes many socially undesirable forms and is mainly paid for by the taxpayers. The military could be limited, automobiles, redundant services like advertising, packaging and promotion, many legal and financial costs created by a complex taxation law, projects like Concorde and Maplin, and many few fancy office buildings in production are just a few examples of costly waste. A complete shift to public transport, more taxis and a uniformed car rental service could provide more efficient and economical transport for 2,500m pounds per year. The present motor vehicle industry and allied services costs over 5,000m pounds, not counting rising fuel prices and inflation.

A government source estimates that 20,000m pounds needs to be invested over the next ten years, to modernize British industry. Both Milton Friedman and myself agree that the private sector will not produce this massive injection to put industry back on its feet (newsweek, Nov. 8).

A Briton named Tony Benn, is presently working out the details of the labor government's plan to carry out this long awaited revision of industry. His plan includes a channel through which workers inventive and creative talents are utilized towards a more democratic and unalienating process. In other words a process of production where the worker controls the machine and job, not like today where the machine and manager controls the worker. Unfortunately, if the conservatives get their way this plan will be used to light fires and keep parliament warm during the not so cold winter session. If the labor government keeps it out of the flames this plan could increase productivity, as enthusiastic war time workers have proven, shorten the work day, and release much valuable time for the pursuit of creative and cultural ambitions and motivations, a new way of life.

The creation of an efficient and egalitarian society in Britian requires social control of its economy and more importantly, the mobilization and popular support of its workers. The capitalist solution to the latest crisis is the same as it was in the 1920's, to cut real wages and domestic consumption and to make cuts in the presently inadequate public expenditures, except military and police. The latest conservative attempts to deface labors left and to divide and smash the powerful trade unions, will only prolongue application of progressive economic and social programs.

Little or no improvements to the quality of life, no elimination of the costly waste and minimal modernization of industry, will be the social costs of the current conservative offensive. Under majority rule, in the interests of the majority, the people will decide a socialist future in the great United Kingdom.

Life (and death) in the towers

I guess if I were forced to categorize life in a Southwest tower I would file it under, "never a dull moment". People think I am nuts to risk my skull below plummeting bottles while wading through the veritable sea of beer-soaked toilet paper outside JQA every weekend. When I returned from Thanksgiving the father of a friend who lives in Central dropped me off in Southwest. "You live in that thing?" he asked as he looked up in awe. I just thanked him for the ride and wondered what I was doing there.

This weekend was especially entertaining. The three JQA elevators went on strike — I would assume they were protesting the abominable conditions (and who could blame them?) — so that by Sunday morning the one elevator in operation could only be boarded on the fifth floor, and by Sunday noon you had to "truck it", as we like to say.

Sunday morning round about 2:30 I was just drifting off to sleep when the fire alarm went, and because the RA's and HR's and other powers that be are trying to be more conscientious about these sorts of things, we began to evacuate. I was about three flights of stairs down when the buzzer stopped, and the stairwell became clotted with confused, drunk and stoned residents. It occurred to me that in a panic situation there were any number of places I would rather be than in that stairwell.

Which brings me to the serious side of this column. The Southwest towers are not only grungy and inconvenient much of the time; they are fire traps as well. An October issue of the Valley Advocate examined some of the problems with the so-called "fireproof" dorms, and the conclusions were far from encouraging.

Were identical buildings constructed today, they would not meet safety standards. Because the best rescue trucks can reach only to the eighth floor, higher structures are supposed to have sprinkler systems installed above that story. The Southwest towers are equipped with sprinklers only in the trash rooms — a fire that starts elsewhere cannot be extinguished quickly.

There is actually less danger to tower residents from the possibility of a fire spreading to other floors than there is from smoke, which is particularly hazardous if it enters the stairwells. The fire doors leading to the stairs are designed to prevent smoke from filling the escapes, but as residents know all too well, it is often easy to disregard safety in favor of the convenience of propping the doors open.

It is not very difficult for a fire to get started in a UMass dorm. Hot plates and pots, toaster ovens, and incredible electric outlet overloads are all against regulations and all common practice. It doesn't seem very likely that a crack-down on such things would prove successful.

So what is really needed is the installation of sprinkler systems in the towers. The estimated cost per tower is in excess of $65,000, which is hardly trivial but certainly not out of the question when human lives are at stake. Whether the administration is willing is of course another issue, but residents should at least be aware of the problem and do their best to bring a little pressure to bear.

In summation, I would say it is at worst annoying to live in a high-rise where the elevators don't work and at best mighty risky to live in one where the fire hazard is as bad as it is in Southwest. Perhaps we should start griping about this problem before a major disaster occurs.

Case of juvenile justice

When the English barons forced King John to sign the Magna Carta in June 1215 at Runnymede, they thought he was signing a charter of liberties for individuals in the society. A trial with a jury of peers, a penal code calling for uniform measures for crimes committed despite social class, the right to be innocent until proven guilty: the Magna Carta was a document constituting a fundamental guarantee of rights and privileges to the individual. The judicial branch of government became a process for the people.

And in our English tradition, we, the United States, adopted the principles of the Magna Carta thinking also that we were attaining a system of liberties for individuals.

Our numbers grew, our property grew, our technology grew and we developed "beaucracy-itis", the disease whereby the individual is forgotten because there simply isn't enough time to remember that individuals exist. And the worst victims of this impersonalized, mechanistic, over-burdened judicial system is the juvenile.

Each month about 1,300 cases appear before judges in each juvenile court across the nation. They range from homicide and rape to truancy and runaways. And there simply isn't enough time to deal with them all appropriately.

Says Judge Jerome A. O'Neil of a county court in Philadelphia at 5 p.m. still hearing cases: "It's too much. Too much. I just don't have the time I should to give to each case."

And Judge James L. Stein of the same court commenting on the pressures he feels: "Last week, I woke up in the middle of the night deciding I'd been too hard on a boy. I called him in the next day and reduced the sentence."

Something has to be done. Individuals are involved here and is it enought to just admit that you, a judge, have made a mistake because of time pressures when your dealing with a young person?

Claude Brown alludes to it most explicitly in MANCHILD IN A PROMISED LAND: the case of the jail visit for the juvenile and the juvenile detention home. Here young boys and girls learn worse crimes than when they walked the streets. There simply isn't a form of rehabilitation.

Then there is the case of the Philadelphia boy picked up for robbery but released to his mother. Says the policeman who arrested him: "It's a farce. That kid's done everything but rape and murder and he'll do that next. I think it stinks... the whole justice system. Four cases against him to the custody of his mother."

Clearly, something must be done. But what? Where does one start? More money needs to be poured into the system to provide for more judges, more courts than there are now to take off some of the burden. But that's dreaming. But, it is enough to just walk away?

We're dealing with a society of individuals and not just a short sentence in the newspapers on the punishments given. Says the VALLEY ADVOCATE: "The courtroom activities are squeezed into a few bare paragraphs each day in the DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE. But realize when you read those spare paragraphs they only hint at passions in the thousands of lives flowing through the court each year. The District Court is the workhouse of the legal system, the primary arbiter of society's guidelines. We ask one man to be judge, jury and Solomon, but prefer to hear of only the sentencing, not the complicated tangle that one man is asked to unravel."

And the juvenile courts are special: they're dealing with the future leaders, the future rulers, the future citizenry. Shouldn't true justice start there?

Eviction not justified

To the Editor:

I am a senior and this is my first letter to the Collegian. I have been actively involved in various student groups during the last year. I have learned much about this campus through my participation in these groups. Campus politics interest me the most. Looking at my last semester's bill, I noticed a three dollar Fine Arts Center fee. I wondered where the money went. I obtained a copy of the constitution of the Fine Arts Council — a group of five faculty members and five students that control these funds. I came upon a clause which disturbed me; Events supported by funds from the Fine Arts fee shall normally be free-of-charge and open to those paying the fee" (Section 3B) I had been fairly upset with the Fine Arts center before reading this and this added fuel to the fire.

Recently I was one of the forces behind creating the Student Art Collective. Unlike the Fine Arts Center, the collective is of, by, and for students. On Monday, December 13th we are running the first "Student's Art Festival" in the Student Union Ballroom. Student Video Project, Program Council, and other campus groups are involved with running this day. It will give the students a chance to display their creativity in many forms (music, film, paintings, etc.) On December 1st the Senate endorsed our efforts. A lot of work has been done but we would welcome any ideas or participation. I was concerned that the Collegian did not mention the passing of our bill in its article last Thursday on the Senate meeting. That's why I wrote.

'Student's art festival'

To the Editor:

On December 1, 1976 members of the Off Campus Housing Office at the University witnessed the forced eviction of a tenant in Pufton IV. As our office lists apartments in Pufton Village for students to rent, we feel that we need to respond to the events of December 1.

It is our firm conviction that the reasons given for the eviction itself and the way in which it was carried out were not justified. To uproot an entire family in such a manner for harboring pets strikes us as extreme. In the future in all matters such as this, the Off Campus Housing Office would like to be notified of specific reasons for evictions in order that proper steps can be taken to inform students of their legal rights

It would also help us if tenants would inform us if they are having problems dealing with any landlords in the area. We feel that in all such future situations, solutions should be found that do not require the forced removal of an entire family's possessions onto a cold Amherst sidewalk.

Influence buying

To the Editor:

I write in regard to Bill Riordan's commentary [Dec. 1] concerning the Korean-U.S. Congress influence buying affair. In many ways the U.S. has served as an unwitting parent to South Korea. As a country born out of war so few years ago Korea is in its infancy, malleable to Western influence.

We can laugh at downtown Seoul's caricatures of U.S. life-styles created with the intention of imitating our "desirable" aspects. It's enough to make the elderly Korean cry to see a 4,000 year old culture so debased and easily thrust aside. Yet we cannot claim casualty or berate ourselves for every situation Korea finds itself in.

The process of influence buying for example is an ancient one. We should resist the temptation to criticize ourselves for once and deny the belief we have that we are the creator of everything. Let's give China credit where credit is due.

MassPIRG on trustees

To the Editor:

We are pleased at the decision of the Board of Trustees today and overwhelmingly approve the mandate and funding mechanism of MassPIRG.

We thank the Trustees for their confidence in us and feel that our research and advocacy efforts over the last four years justify their confidence.

We look forward to periodic dialogues about the activities and objectives of our organization as we continue to involve literaaly hundreds of UMass students in projects to protect the environment, improve human rights and advance the cause oof the consumer in the Commonwealth.

Dormitory descriptions continued

The following is an explanation of the upcoming residence hall room choosing procedures and the second half of a listing of the dormitories at UMass to aid students contemplating a move:

Room Choosing in the residence halls will be held next week and will follow this schedule:

Today — Students who wish to remain in the rooms they are currently occupying may sign up with their Heads of Residence on this day.

Tomorrow — Students who wish to move to available space within the residence hall they are currently residing in may sign up with the Head of Residence on this day.

Wednesday — All students wishing to move to a residence hall other than the one they are currently residing in may sign up with a Head of Residence on this day.

Friday — All students currently residing off campus who wish to move on campus for the Spring 1977 semester may sign up with a Head of Residence on this day.

Students should not sign up for more than one room. By doing so, students are taking the chance of not receiving any of their choices.

Any questions concerning Room Choosing should be directed to the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore, 545-2100.

Most of the information included was received from Heads of Residence in each dorm. Further information and answers to questions regarding room choosing policies and dorm policies should be directed to them, and their numbers are available in the student directory.

The list was compiled by the staff of the Office of Residential Resource Management,and any information regarding the list or its accuracy should be directed there.

JV pucksters suffer weekend double loss

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

The game didn't begin inauspiciously for the Minutemen. They played well enough until the third period to have a good chance to skate off with at least a tie. But, at 4:29 of the final period, the deluge began. That was when Harvard's Mike Stewart streaked in and scored on a breakaway. That was the first of five Crimson goals, as the UMass JV hockey team was soundly defeated, 9-4.

Although Harvard scored first, the Minutemen didn't let down and their excellent fore-checking paid off when Paul White scored at 13:30 assisted by Joe Nelligan and Paul Powers. When Jim Phelan exited at 17:56 for elbowing, Harvard went ahead again when John Moot broke down the right side and put a shot in the right corner of net past goalie Frank Cifrino. But that goal was answered just eight seconds later by Doug Limone, who scored for the Minutemen, assisted by John Johnson and Rich Riccioli.

Limone's late period goal seemed to psyche the Minutemen for the second period, as they forechecked, outskated and outplayed the Crimson for most of the period. But, goalie John Conant kept UMass scoreless, making three good saves during one particularly hectic period.

After the Harvard game, the JV's traveled four hours on Saturday to play New Hampton Prep, to whom they went down to defeat by the score of 5-1. New Hampton jumped to a 3-0 lead in the first period. "We played a very poor first period," stated Kidd. "It took us the whole period to get untracked." The lone UMass goal was scored by Pat Burke, who put a nice shot in the upper corner of the net. As described by Coach Kidd, the game was a penalty-filled one, with New Hampton playing tough and dirty.

The Minutemen will play at New Hampton this afternoon at 2:00.

Grapplers sixth in weekend tourney

The UMass wrestling team, victimized by some close losses, placed a respectable sixth in the 10 team field in the Coast Guard Tournament over the weekend, won by Hofstra University.

For the Minutemen, only Dennis Fenton, wrestling in the Heavyweight class, managed to win his weight division, yet seven other UMass grapplers came up with one win in the double elimination setup.

"I'm pleased with the marked improvement we made from the B.U. match," UMass coach Dave Amato said after the tournament. "Everyone lost close matches, but we gained valuable experience and confidence that we were lacking."

For Fenton, that confidence and experience was already there as he scored two 6-0 triumphs and a pin in successive matches to capture his division.

"Dennis looked great," Amato said. He proved that he's a team leader."

Other Minutemen gaining single match wins were Larry Pontbriant (118 lbs.), Dave Whitney (126), Larry Otsuka (134), Chris Denette (142), Tim Fallon (150), Mike Riley (177), and Steve Masiak (190).

Otsuka, after winning his second match, 13-3, was eliminated in a tough 1-3 defeat. Each of Fallon's matches were close, as he dropped his third by a 4-6 score. Riley lost a 5-7 match, while Masiak dropped the heartbreaker of the tournament at the buzzer.

The only two Minutemen who failed to win a match were Bruce Rhodes (158), and Steve Haskell (167), but overall, Amato felt that everyone on his squad wrestled well.

The matmen will be idle until Dec. 14 when Harvard comes to Amherst to tangle forces.

"Barring injuries and if we're at full strength, I think we'll fare a lot better," Amato concluded.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Monday, December 6 — Born today, you have a deep love of nature in combination with a highly developed sense of your own place in the scheme of things. For this reason, you are not as inclined to depression, discouragement, frustration, and the like when failure occurs; rather, you are inclined to think of the particular failure in terms of your life as a whole, at the same time that you think of your life in terms of life, in general. Thinking in such large frames of reference enables you to take in stride the events, both expected and unexpected, that occur to maintain or change the course of your life. You are, in short, not one to rail against fortune.

A romantic, you find Man reflected in sea and sky, in fields and trees, indeed, in everything that is not man-made. The beauty of nature reveals itself to you even in those aspects of nature that others would terms violent, distressing, even disgusting. Perfectly at ease with yourself, you give on an air of easy confidence that is not belied by the actuality of your performance in any given work or kind of play. A non-worrier, you are able to make the best of things, often without even realizing that you are doing so.

All of which does not mean that you are inclined to sit back and let things happen, whether for good or ill, profit or loss. You are actually a "go-getter."

Merwomen defeated by Maine; suffer second straight setback

By BILL LOCKE
Collegian Staff

The women's swim team lost its second consecutive meet to a powerful University of Maine squad Saturday afternoon at the NOPE pool. The final score was 88-43.

According to Maine coach Jeffrey Wren, "The score wasn't really indicative of the meet, it should have been closer. There were many close races and we just happened to win them all."

Maine wasted little time in building up a large lead. They jumped out to a 29-5 lead after only four events.

UMass tried to mount a comeback when Mary Ann Totin and Alix DenHartog took first and second places in the 50-yard breaststroke. Their time were 34.8 and 38.1 seconds respectively. This narrowed the score to 30-13. However this was the closest that Maine allowed the swimmers to get. Maine responded by taking first in all the remaining events.

In the end, Maine was just too strong for the Minutewomen. Of the eighty-eight points they accumulated, at least sixty-four points were due to the fact that Maine won 13 or the 14 events. They captured both of the diving events by wide margins and also swept both relays, the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard medley relay in convincing fashion. In the 200-medley relay, Maine finished a whopping 11 seconds ahead of the Massachusetts swimmers.

Maine coach Wren also had this to say, "We swam well. Our girls set records for the school in six events. We broke records in the 200-medley relay (1:59.8), the 50-butterfly (29.8), the 100-individual medley (1:03.8), the 100-freestyle (57.6), the 100-breaststroke (1:10.8), and the 200-freestyle relay (1:45.4). We really performed up to our potential today. I'm very pleased."

Had UMass turned in times similar to the New Hampshire meet last week the score would have been much closer in the early goings. As a matter of fact, if they had turned in the same time in the 100-backstroke and the 100-breaststroke, they would have won those two events against Maine.

★ Trackmen last

Twelve of the remaining UMass points came on six third place finishes. Probably the most noteworthy was Ted Power's in the pole vault. Power cleared 13 feet before going out at 13-6.

"I actually jumped twice," said Power as the competition began, "but I haven't been over a bar yet."

The other thirds were by Bruce Parsons in the triple jump at 45-4, Bob Fitzgerald with a 6-4 effort in the high jump and a rather disappointing mile relay team, which saw a 15 yard lead and 2nd place disappear as UConn ran a blazing anchor leg to take the runnerup spot behind SH.

Perhaps the strongest event besides the long jump was the 600 in which John Richards ran 3rd and Rich Thompson 4th. They also ran good mile relay legs, particularly Thompson, who overtook UConn's Heyward Woodward on the 2nd leg to give UMass its short lived 2nd place.

Another strong performance was turned in by Cliff Staples, who was third in the varsity 2 mile at 9:19.8, and who also won the sub varsity section of the mile in 4:21.5.

In other sub varsity events, Mickey Baugh ran well in winning the 1000 in 2:25. Matty Mangan took 2nd in the 2 mile at 9:38.3. In the high hurdles, "Bob Royale" King dusted off his spikes and strutted his stuff over the barriers to a time of 8 seconds and 1st place.

★ Rimwomen defeated

junior played sparingly, as she as saddled with foul trouble and eventually did sit down with five.

"We just weren't blocking out, we weren't thinking," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski lamented. "And we have to think in order to play basketball."

The fact remained that the Minutewomen were able to come back, though, and that pleased the first-year mentor.

"The nucleus is there for a good ballclub," she said. "They didn't give up, and played hard."

The work of Peters, in particular, bodes well for the future. The freshman guard scored 18 points and pulled down seven rebounds. Her play, as well as forward O'Neil's, who tallied 11 points and led the club in rebounding with 12, kept UMass in this thing.

But no one was able to stop Maine's Crystal Pazdziorko. The sophomore forward hit for 18 points and rebounded effectively, while three other Maine performers scored eight points apiece in the relatively low-scoring game.

Foes run past tracksters

STORRS, Conn. — Saturday's quadrangular track meet between UConn, UMass, Seton Hall and Holy Cross held at Storrs Field House on the UConn Campus provided all the action and excitement of a three ring circus, unfortunately without the organization boasted by Barnum and Bailey.

"The place is a pit," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien last week. "With their own announcer and the home crowd, it's a big home advantage, and they play it to the hilt."

The atmosphere was raucous and highly partisan, and with UConn being victorious in the meet with 64 points, the local fans had many opportunities to vocalize their support. Seton Hall was second with 47 points, while HC and UMass trailed with 23 and 18 points respectively.

UConn's impressive facility was thronged with athletes, officials and spectators, who were not always considerate of the events in progress. Jay Legere encountered a wayward pedestrian during the two mile, while stray onlookers wandered heedlessly across jumping areas as well as the track.

After one particularly harrowing trip down the runway, triple jumper Brady Mayer said, "My concentration is blown."

That statement pretty much sums of UMass' participation in the meet, as they were never in contention after the first event, the long jump, which was won by Kenny Adamson. After being shut out in the next two events, the mile and shot put, UMass trailed by 13 points and never closed the gap.

Despite the lack of point production, all three UMass coaches saw positive aspects to the meet.

"The times weren't so great," said Arnie Morse, "but I was pleased to see the competitiveness on the part of several of our guys. They were willing to pay the price for going out hard, but next time they'll find it that much easier."

"We didn't come away with much as far as points goes," said O'Brien, "but I was pleased at the mental attitude of most of our guys. We'll be a lot closer to UConn by the end of the indoor season, but it's important to keep a good mental outlook, and I think we've done that."

UMass' high point of the day came in the long jump. As stated earlier, it was won by Kenny Adamson, who jumped 22 feet 11 on his final attempt to overtake SH's Tony Wade, who was second at 22-4¼. In the trials, Adamson fouled twice before qualifying with a jump of 22-5¼. In the finals he prepared for his dramatic finish by fouling twice again before his winning effort.

"I was uptight," said Adamson, "since it was my first jumping of the year. I wish I could've got my first jumps measured — they were out there about 23 and a half feet."

Army edges gymmen in photo-finish ending

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

From a spectator's point of view, you couldn't have seen a more exciting gymnastics meet anywhere than the UMass-Army meet held on Saturday afternoon in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The meet had all the ingredients of an exciting contest; some excellent performances, two very enthusiastic teams and even a down to the wire finish.

It took the final performances on the horizontal bar, the last event of the meet, to determine the winner. You could compare the finish of this meet to a photo-finish in a horserace. It was that close.

When the final performances were completed and the scores tabulated, the photo-finish showed Army winning by a nose. The final verdict was an ever-so-close 198.5-198.4 victory for the Cadets of Army, before 400 very appreciative and enthusiastic fans. The Army victory gives the Cadets a 2-0 record on the season, while the Minutemen slip down to 1-1 for the year.

The score was indicative of the balance between the two teams. Both teams entered Saturday's meet with a 1-0 record and had ambitions of scoring 200 points in the meet. However, neither team met its goal. Neither team scored 200 points and you certainly can't say Army walked away with the meet.

It took two outstanding back-to-back performances on the horizontal bar by Army's Bob Boggs (8.65) and Matt Holm (8.95) to secure the victory for Army.

Going into that final event, the Minutemen held a 166.35-165 lead over Army. It was the type of meet where the lead swayed back and forth after each event. Even though Paul Marks, who scored a 9.1 on the horizontal bar, and Steve Marks (8.4) turned in outstanding performances, it was not enough to carry their teammates on to victory, as the Minutemen were not consistent enough in this event.

"Considering the match on an overall basis, I honestly have to say that I am quite satisfied with the job the guys turned in today," said UMass coach Dick Swetman. "I am not down on my guys at all because they came here to win, and they maintained that high level of concentration that was so important for the match."

The Minutemen received fine all-around performances from Paul Marks (50.0), Steve Marks (49.9) and from Angelo Scuderi (48.30) who participated in his first meet of the season, even though he was forced to miss practices because of his studies. Army's Matt Holm captured the top all-around honors with a score of 50.6.

"We expected a tough match today, but nothing like this," said the emotionally drained and happy Army head coach Ned Crosley. "This is the best UMass team we've faced in the past five years," he said.

Sue Peters goes up for a shot as a Maine defender applies pressure. Peters was her team's high scorer Saturday but UMass lost its first game, 58-56. (Staff photo by Stuart Eyman)

Women hoopsters succumb to Maine

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It was the classic pressure situation.

Seven seconds were showing on the clock when Maine's Charlotte Linder went to the free throw line in the game Saturday between her team and UMass in the Cage. The Black Bears were up by two points, 56-54, and Linder was faced with a one-and-one situation after she had been fouled while going after a loose ball.

Maine had made only two of 12 free throw attempts up to this point, but whent he heat was on it was UMass that got burned. The Black Bear guard swished her two attempts and a last-second layup by UMass' Sue Peters was to no avail, as Maine spoiled the Minutewomen's season's opener with a 58-56 win.

Actually, the Minutewomen had to go some to come that close to a victory. Trailing by six points, 28-22, at halftime, UMass was down by as much as 10 in the second half with only a little under five minutes left. However, a string of seven unanswered points helped narrow the gap to 52-51 with 2:25 left. And that's when the fun began.

Forward Maura Supinski scored what appeared to be a basket which would have put the Minutewomen ahead, but had it taken away due to a traveling call. Then, after two driving layups by Maine's Rose Deighton put it ahead by five, the gap was cut to a mere hoop when forward Chris Basile and Peters converted three of four free throws between them.

UMass regained possession with a chance to tie things up as Maine turned the ball over on walking. But the Minutewomen's Nancy O'Neil returned the favor when she took a few too many steps.

A number of factors went into the jigsaw puzzle of a UMass loss. One of the pieces was an offense which couldn't get untracked until partway through the second half. Even then, UMass shot only 34 per cent in the game, while Maine hit at a 44 per cent clip.

Other keys to the tilt was rebounding, or, rather, a lack of it for UMass. The final stats revealed that Maine hauled down six more caroms than did the Minutewomen, 40-34 to be exact, but it seemed at times to be a million more. The Black Bears were getting second, third, and sometimes fourth chances at the hoop after their initial try.

Another check of the statistics showed that center Lu-Ann Fletcher, a vital cog in the rebounding category, was able to collect just four on the day. But the

Hoopmen find form to slash Wildcats

DURHAM, N.H. — For the University of New Hampshire, it was never late enough.

Sure, the game was scheduled to begin at an unusual late hour (3:00 p.m.) for an afternoon contest. The game was delayed yet longer as a new basket had to be installed at one end of the court. Yet, when it finally began, the Wildcats found that UMass came to play early, as the Minutemen jumped to a 17-point first half lead and rolled to a convincing 80-67 triumph Saturday.

For the Minutemen, it was indeed their best effort of the early season as they evening their record at 2-2. More importantly for UMass, the win was a sign of some much needed depth as two substitutes grabbed an unaccustomed role as heroes.

The bench help was provided in the front court as sophomore center Len Kohlhaas came to the aid of a struggling Mark Donoghue to net 15 points (12 in the first half) on seven for nine shooting, and senior Steve Mayfield scored 12 points on six for seven shooting. Their contributions were timely as Jim Town was victimized by three early fouls, starters Donoghue and Mike Pyatt combined for just 11 points, and sophomore Eric Williams was granted permission for a leave of absence.

"They're (Kohlhaas and Mayfield) the two most important reasons we won," stated UMass coach Jack Leaman after victory. "Lenny and Steve came off the bench and did a superb job. They were two major fators."

Their support overshadowed another fine performance by guard Derick Claiborne. The consistent junior topped all scorers with 21 points (nine for 12) from the field to spark the highest UMass scoring output of the year. Claiborne teamed with Alex Eldridge (nine points) in the back court to reunite last year's starting five for the first time this season.

UMass trailed only once in the contest, at 6-5, with six minutes gones in the game. But a host of New Hampshire turnovers led the Minutemen to a 16-5 burst and a 21-11 lead as Town (12 points) hit three baskets in the surge. The lead jumped to 40-21 as Kohlhaas came off the bench to perform his deeds, the from there it was nothing doing for the Wildcats as they never got closer than 10 points.

For New Hampshire, forward Peter Laskaris managed 17 points in a losing effort, while Keith Dixon and Tom Cavanaugh added 16 and 10, respectively.

UMass played an effective zone defense to thwart the smaller Wildcats as it did in its other win against Harvard.

"We're working hard on the zone," Leaman explained. "It helps us when we get in foul trouble.

"Overally, I thought we played well tonight," he continued. "We beat good New Hampshire team, believe it or not."

Leaman pointed out that he was "pleased to see Pyatt lead his squad in rebounds with seven. "I'd like to see him lead us all the time. It was one of his better games," Leaman said.

The coach compared the Williams situation with "something like that of Cowens." Williams asked for time off for academics and personal reasons and Leaman hopes to have him back with the team soon.

The Minutemen will be back in the Cage for a game against Boston University tomorrow night, with an 8:00 p.m. starting time.

Pats reach playoffs!

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Quarterback Steve Grogan ran for two touchdowns and passed for two others yesterday as the New England Patriots clinched a playoff berth with a 27-6 National Football League victory over the New Orleans Saints.

Grogan, a second year pro from Kansas State, tied the NFL record for quarterbacks by rushing for his 10th and 11th touchdowns of the season.

The mark of 11 was set by Johnny Lujack of the Chicago Bears in 1950 and equaled by Tobin Rote of the Green Bay Packers in 1956.

Rolling to their fifth consecutive victory and seventh in the last eight games, the Patriots boosted their record to 10-3, tying the Baltimore Colts for the American Conference East lead with just one game left.

A combination of a New England victory at Tampa Bay and a Buffalo upset over Baltimore is needed to give the Patriots a division title. However, the Patriots nailed down the conference wild card playoff berth with the victory over New Orleans.

Pucksters win one, tie one

The UMass hockey team did just about what it wanted this weekend as the Minutemen blasted Norwich University, 9-2 Friday afternoon and tied Middlebury College, 2-2 Saturday afternoon on a two game homestand. The Minutemen upped their record to 3-1-1.

Forechecking, the Minutemen's motif, was directly responsible for the shelling of Norwich and the tie with the Panthers as most of the goals were tallied on these opportunities.

"When we forecheck, we play our best hockey," said UMass coach Jack Canniff. "When we hang back, we get hurt when they come at us."

UMass went out and got Norwich, though, as the Minutemen outshot the visitors, 45 to 21. The skaters didn't really explode until the second period when they fired in four unanswered goals and controlled the action. The team outshot Norwich 18 to four.

The icemen broke a 1-1 tie at 5:42 when Billy White scored a power play goal. White took a pass from his brother, Bobby, and tallied from Norwich goalie Richard Brooks' right.

Chris Lamby scored the game winner, also a power play goal, as Norwich's Jim Wilde was off for interference. Lamby took one stride over the blue line at the point and hit a slapshot past Brooks at 11:29.

The rout then started as the Minutemen scored seven consecutive goals. It wasn't a rout all the time as Norwich led for part of the first period on a goal by Guy Gadreau at 12:55, on a man advantage situation. The leading scorer for Norwich flicked in the rebound of Bob Harty's shot from Dana Redmond's left, who was on his side after stopping harty's shot.

The Minutemen tied it at 16:09 when Jefferson had his 40 foot slap shot go in off of a defender's skate.

The other scorers for UMass were Scott Mchesney and Mike Merchant in the second period and Carl Burmns, Tim O'Brien, Francis Pycko, and Bobby White in the final frame. Bob Cole scored the other goal for Norwich.

The game had an adverse affect on the game with Middlebury the next night as the team started to drag in the second and third period. "We played tired," Canniff said after the game. "All our zip was gone."

The UMass line of Pycko-Nick Carney-O'Brien kept the puck in the Panther's end for a good amount of time while they were on the ice.

UMass scored both of its goals on power plays. Merchant scored in the first and Kitteredge tallied in the second periods. Tom Harris and Terry Babcock scored the Panther's goals, both in the second period.

The game belonged to the goalies, though. Both Dana Redmond and his opposite, Bill Burchfield, robbed skaters of goals. Redmond made a great stick save on a Peter Bostick shot behind a screen and covered up a rebound shot by Babcock immediately afterwards in the scoreless third period.

'Sho Nuff Working On It'

By ANGELA THOMAS

Black students gather informally to discuss male-female relationships.

Saturday, Dec. 4, an all day workshop on Black men and Black women relationships took place in New Africa House by the joint efforts of the Third World Women Center. Afro-AM Society and interested brothers and sisters who have been working together to plan the workshop.

Worried that because it was snowing a good turnout would be prevented [illegible] running behind schedule. The workshop got underway with [illegible] respectable attendance of about 50 people.

Opening the workshop was a lecture by Jackie Stanton who spoke on the oppression of Black and Third World Women. Jackie talked about the many forms of oppression such as the involuntary sterilization of 3400 Native American Women. Jackie stressed the fact that as Third World Women, we must inform and educate ourselves and the community to the oppressive and suppressive forces at work in society and the world. Eventually, Jackie said that our struggle would have to include all people and not just those of the Third World because all people are affected by these forces.

The movie 'Black Women' was shown. It was a very enlightening film for all as various black women spoke indepth on themselves and how the system has continuously tried to destroy our black men. The overall effect was that in this manner, a gap between black men and black women was created and perpetuated.

Throughout the film vocal responses from the brothers and sisters were very strong. Responses that range from folks voicing disapproval to shouts of "I hear you talking!" Somewhere between the two extremes was a large amount of hand clapping and laughter.

Brother Komal spoke on the concept and importance of the family structure to us as black people, and how relationships between black men and black women are strenghthened or weakened depending on the closeness and strength of the family. Brother Komal's talk later generated interesting comments and opinions from the women present. Much exchange took place with brothers and sisters pointing out what they believed to be valid or invalid assertions. At this point people began to pause and reflect upon themselves and others. This continued until the closing of the workshop. I thought I saw a gleem of new awareness on various faces, but... it could have been the lighting in the room.

Individual workshops for men and women were held, with the women on one floor and the men on the other. In the women's workshop, knowledge and guidance was given to us in the beautiful form of Dr. Carol Carter Brooks and Anita Olinga. I'm not aware of what happened in the workshop for the men, but with people such as Stan Kinard, Nkurmah Olinga, Earl Brown, Sulaiman Hakim, Chris Henderson, Tony Johnson, Chaka Zulu, Danyll Maslon and others in attendance. The workshop must have been also fruitful.

There was one last workshop where everyone came together to discuss what was felt to be the most important topics revealed in the individual workshops.

This part of the workshop was the high point for me as brothers and sisters sat down to collectively address the issues. Throughout this part a combination of emotions were present such as frustration, laughter, anger, silence and..... love. A love of togetherness, closeness, and one. It was realized that the problems confronting and effecting Black men and Black women are not within our community but originate outside of it.

As the workshop drew to a close, questions of when will the next workshop take place was asked. The next workshop will be next semester, and more information will be given later regarding the time and location. What made me feel good was that brothers and sisters, sisters and brothers were asking when will the next workshop take place. What's that you say, is anything being done about the situation? "SHO NUFF!"

KWANZA

By RAOUL ROACH

A holiday is defined by Britannica World Language Dictionary as "a day appointed by . . . custom . . . in commemoration of some person or event." Kwanzaa is a holiday celebrated by our people in Africa and here in the United States. Kwanzaa, which means "first fruits" in Swahili, is a traditional observance of the harvesting of the first crops in Africa and is celebrated from December 26 through January 1.

Kwanzaa is a holiday. The Congress of African People sees this holiday and all of our traditional holidays as serving three functions:

A) "Cultural – This is a part of social development of the community. It is a time to celebrate, a time to feel Njema (together). Holidays make us realize our positive image. Examples: Malcolm X's birthday and Kwanzaa."

B) "Political – Holidays politically allow us to establish unity among our people because they mobilize us and help us realize that Black people can get together."

C) "Psychological – Holidays allow us to praise our people . . . Holidays set up heroic images that our children can look up to and respect. When we institute holidays, we create a path for our people to follow, thus giving them direction."

Symbols of Kwanzaa

A. MKEKA (Mikeka) means straw mat on which all items are placed during celebration. This is a strong symbol of tradition.

B. KINARA (Vinara) is a seven candle holder, and it is symbolic of the original stalk which we all were engendered from. Like a "stalk of corn" begets others stalks meaning our people have infinite continuity.

C. MSHUMAA (Mishumaa) are seven candles which represent the Seven Principles (Nguzo Saba) which are:

1. UMOJA (Unity) to strive for and maintain unity in the family, community, nation, and race.
2. KUJICHAGULIA (Self-determination) to define ourselves, name ourselves, create ourselves, and speak for ourselves.
3. UJIMA (Collective Work and Responsibility) to build and maintain our community together and make our brothers and sisters problems our problems and to solve them together.
4. UJAMAA (Cooperative Economics) to build and maintain our own stores, shops, and other businesses and to profit from them together.
5. NIA (Purpose) to make as our collective vocation the building and developing of our community in order to restore our people to their traditional greatness.
6. KUUMBA (Creativity) to do always as much as we can in order to leave our community more beautiful and beneficial than we inherited it.
7. IMANI (Faith) to believe with all our heart in our parents, our teachers, our leaders, and the righteousness and victory of our struggle.

D. MUHINDI (Mihindi) this is the ear of corn which represents our children, a product of the stalks (the parents). This signifies the ability of children to become stalks, and thus reproduce a process which insures the infinite longevity of our Nation.

E. ZAWADI stands for the gifts which denotes the fruits of labor of the parents, and for the rewards of the seeds sown by the children to goodness.

Procedure

The dates are December 26 through January 1.

On each day of the seven days of Kwanzaa, when asked "Habari Gani" you will reply with the corresponding principle for that particular day. On the first day "Umoja" is the reply and so on (the seven principles are stated in order above).

Approximately one week before December 26, decorations of Red, Black, and Green should be used. These are the colors of our nation here in America. Secondly, the main table should have as its center piece, a straw basket of fruit and vegetables. A low table should be used to place the Mkeka. The Kinara should be placed in the center. Then place the ear(s) of Muhindi(mi) around on the sides of the Kinara. Then the Zawadi should artistically be placed on the Mkeka. Finally the Mshumaa should be placed at the far right so they will be available for daily lighting one for each seven days. The Mshumaa should be blown out after dinner and relit the following night. On the day of Kwanzaa, January 1, all seven Mshumaa should be lit.

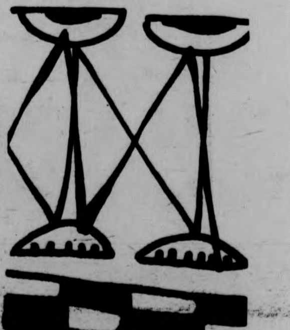
On the seventh day, Kwanzaa, the Zawadi should be opened. Moreover it is important that a large dinner be prepared that day, and at that table the last principle, Imani, should be discussed and the children tell their committments for the coming year.

On the night of December 31, Karamu takes place, (this night is especially reserved for "grownups") Karamu consist of the seven main things that feasts are traditionally made of; food, drink, music, dance, conversation, laughter, and ceremony.

The Karamu is for the community and should not be restricted to one's household. Families of the community get together and prepare everything by the third principle, UJIMA (Collective Work and Responsibility). Also, everything is done in the traditional manner – foods in the African style, eaten without European utensils, African music and dances, and the telling of African stories. This also includes the ritual of Tambiko (sacriticial offering), and the ritual of drinking from the Kikombe (unity cup).

After the African part of Karamu we move to a position of Afro-American expressions and "party" all night long.

As the Congress of African People say, "Kwanzaa. . . to us . . . is a sign of self-determination and self-respect. And it is one of the legacies that we leave our children, so that they will not turn to each other and say "our fathers have left us nothing." Finally we do it because we enjoy creating images and the foundations upon which these images rest. For it is the wisdom of our fathers that no matter how well an image is, it must stand on something. Surely by things like this, we provide that something of value."



Enjoy Yourself

Be it chasing Cadillacs, clothed in nothing [illegible] undershorts, 50 below 0 degrees weather.

Be it running from woman to woman or man to man for that matter...pretending your Superfly and the only thing you possess that is really "bad" is your breath.

Be it getting dressed up to go out "n" party in your pink three piece, you scarlet red wide brim hat, and your two feet high platforms, but being deathly insulted when someone sees and offers you a lifetime career as a clown.

Whatever you do that truely satisfies you...do it...but for God sake's do it well.

There is no such thing that life is bad or life in itself is merely an eternal hell. True...man's life is greatly influenced by his environment but his direction is not supposed to be dictated to by his environment. The basic thing that the intellects of the world use to keep the masses in control is their environment. Whatever environment the government places you in they know exactly what behavioral pattern you will develop.

Proof of it is...Have you not heard it said that..."If you put a nigger in Paris, with a few weeks time he will be walking, talking, eating and smiling like the Italians.

If you put a nigger in Parish, with a few weeks time he will be walking, talking, eating and smiling like the Italians.

If you put a nigger in France, very soon he will begin to pattern himself after the French.

In other words whereever a body with no real mind of its own, its only a matter of time before it picks up and adopts whatever way of life surrounding it.

Notice I said Nigger and not a man. A Nigger is not determined by color, but by actions. Anything that lacks a knowledge of itself, is dead in its mentality and the only mind it has it that of some other mind dictating to it. Anything that does not possess self-motivating, but waits for some outside force to move it, is in fact...dead and is labeled as a Nigger.

This is why we as Black people were labeled as Niggers. When you get angry at the school system for not treating your Black child justly instead of pooling your money and building your own schools, you are behaving like a Nigger.

Now...I would like to get back to my original subject, which was entitled "Enjoy Yourself." First I had to explain my conception of life and why it is truely worth living.

I see nothing wrong with partying, dancing, enjoying company and overly having a good time.

But I do see something wrong with having to rely on false means and avenues to grant you, what is called, real happiness. By this I mean, getting drunk to the point where you don't even remember what kind of time you had. Getting so high that nothing you see in your fantasizing exists anywhere in reality.

You mind can provide you with any altitude of high you desire or any depth of low you want. Your mind has the ability of being able to place you in any state you desire. You shouldn't have to rely on Reefer to make you happy. If so, then that Reefer or that liquor, rule you.

There is a such thing as a natural high that you can provide for yourself, whenever and as often as you want.

You've experienced a natural high several times and I'm sure that if your ingredients are mixed correctly, that natural high can sometimes be more enjoyable than that false high everybody craves. Proof of it is...it is well known and understood that, sex is one of the most natural and High highs you can have...if it is done respectfully.

So...do it anyway you wanna do it...but don't do anything you really don't want to do for the sake of others.

Fantasize, dream, party, fornicate, adulterate...if thats what you want to do...whatever puts a glide in your stride and makes your liver quiver...do it...and dag gone..., "Enjoy Yourself."

WE ARE ALL PRISONERS OF WAR

By MUHAMMAD AHMAD

We want to address ourselves to the war prisoners movement and the concepts we must understand to make our movement a reality.

As we look around the country, we see the prisons filled with brothers: 90 per cent of the prison population in America is black. Every African community is faced with constant harassment and terrorism from the racist civilian occupation army.

Most of our leaders are either in jail, exile or fighting the racist legal system in one form or another.

Brother Imari, president of the R.N.A., and 10 other brothers and sisters are in prison in Mississippi. Otis Johnson is in prison in Texas.

Ahmed Evans is still on death row in the Ohio State pen. Ron Karenga, Ruchell Magee, and David Hillard are in prison in California. Robert Williams is fighting extradiction to North Carolina from Michigan. I'm fighting extradition to New York from California. Robert 35 Smith is still in prison in New York, and thousands of others are struggling with this racist system.

The movement has been attacked, crushed and setback. The assassinations of brothers George Jackson, Fred Hampton, Mark Clark, Lil' Bobby Hutton, Medgar Evers, the Birmingham Six, Malcolm, Dr. M.L. King and Attica inmates are deep wounds and sacrifices of our national liberation revolution.

But the time has come for us to stand up as men and women, unite and organize ourselves against every racist attack unleashed on us.

When we do this, assassination, jailing or exile will not benefit the enemy. We must make the enemy pay for his acts of aggression. Every time he attacks, we must make the odds even-steven. It must be a head for a head, a throat for a throat, a life for a life. Our blood must be just as important to us, as the enemy's blood is to him.

The war prisoners movement must take the struggle to a higher level of development or it will not be successful. Our movement recognizes that we are a captive colonial nation, therefore, we see the legal and political system being a racist colonial illegal system. We declare our independence from the system.

We want national independence by any means necessary. The war prisoners movement is the broad united front of our nationalist revolution. Our movement calls upon all Africans to unite regardless of ideology and religion. To move to self reliance we must have a national black united front. But unity must be based on principle and actions, and not words alone.

When we say, "We want freedom for all black people held in federal, state, county and city prisons and jails. We believe under the present system that no black people have received a fair and impartial trial. We believe that this racist system is organized in all ways against black people ... ", we feel there are no laws in America that African peoples need to abide by until we have the right to determine our own destinies.

We say this because we recognize that we (African people in America) are not citizens denied our rights but we are captives of war. War was declared on the African nation 500 years ago and has not stopped yet. If we are not captives of war, then we wouldn't be in America. We would still be in Africa.

THERE IS NO SUCH THING as a second class citizen. A second class citizen is a 20th century slave. You are either a first class citizen or a ward of the state, which means no class at all – it means captive. We are forced to abide by the responsibilities of citizenship but are denied the equal rights of citizens. So, our status has changed from chattel slavery to citizen slavery. After the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation, which supposedly made us freedmen, a vote was never taken to see whether we wanted to be citizens of the kidnapper government, return to our motherland or whether we wanted land right here. So, the so-called citizenship that we are supposed to have, but don't enjoy, is a forced citizenship and is therefore illegal, making our status colonial subjects held in captivity. Every African person in America is therefore in prison.

We, as a people-nation, will not have the status of freedmen or women until we secure the right to determine our own destiny. Until African people have the right to self-determination, America is a police state to 30 million Africans.

Prisons are concentration camps of the worst form to contain and break the will of rebellious African captives. The civilian occupation force (police) engages in search and destroy campaigns daily to capture the usually unpoliticized guerrillas (so-called black criminals), to put them in pacification strategic hamlets (prisons), to psychologically and very often to physically annihilate New Africa's people's liberation army.

The black prisoner, who is faced with living under the constant threat of racist attack, must endure the worst conditions of all African captives; he gets the worst food, is grossly underpaid for his labor, lives with unsanitary conditions, having to struggle and possibly risk his life for black studies materials and the right to practice his own religion if it is different from the oppressor's.

The black prisoner is the captured captive within the captive nation and is treated as the worst of a class of people in the whole Amerikan empire.

THE BLACK PRISONER, like the black soldier, is the total anti-thesis of this racist society; he is the rebellious captive that the colonial regime cannot control, so his radicalization and awareness is treated with the most blatant form of fascism – outright cold-blooded murder. Because once the black prisoner realizes his historical role as a political liberation soldier then the prisons will become African nationalist training centers producing thousands of Pan-African nationalist revolutionaries. Then our struggle will take a qualitative leap.

In order to advance the Pan-African revolution, from working together regardless of ideology, we must develop a style of work which is effective in mobilizing the millions of our people. We call this work style, the Amen-Ra (RAM) method. It is the building of cells among the people, quietly working on community problems and projects, working towards the emergence of a Pan-African Nationalist Party.

The Pan-African movement in America in many respects is still a petty bourgeois movement. There are still many utopian concepts in the movement such as the fantasies of "going back to Africa" and "ego tripping on messianic cultural nationalism."

Culture is important but it is not the predominating factor in a revolution. Political development of the masses is the central factor in a revolution. Mass mobilization that disrupts and overturns a system is the heart of a revolution.

The war prisoners movement means Pan-African nationalists must move in a new direction. We must move to unite with the overall majority of the people.

We must move to have mass demonstrations in support of African captive prisoners. The war prisoners movement must not be separated from other direct actions over community issues. The struggle for community control of schools, Black Studies and African Liberation Day must be welded into one movement. The Pan-African movement must be action-oriented. While we build independent nationalist institutions we must move and dislocate the enemy's institutions.

We must move to disrupt the political system by starting an African Independence Political Movement.

OUR MOVEMENT must be built upon consistent cadres. Meeting halls should be filled every week. When we must plead, beg brothers and sisters to come to a meeting then that means we collectively are not ready for revolution. When we must hold emergency meetings for defense, when we allow our personal interests to interfere with the functioning of the movement, then we become counter-revolutionary.

We must learn that consistency, correctness on a day to day basis, is the only thing that will make our movement work. A war prisoners movement is the highest level of struggle because it demands a cease fire and amnesty [release] for all prisoners of war.

Only by raising a mass political army will the enemy grant amnest to our war prisoners. Then, you must remember we are in war. You must learn the importance of being on time, of carrying out orders correctly, of fulfilling your own task. We wage mass demonstrations against all imperialist holdings in Africa. Only be waging struggle here can we help liberate the Motherland.

Revolution takes thousands of people working together. We need mass political education to make the war prisoners movement successful. We need an All-African People's Party that is built on collective and non-compromising leadership. We must unite on these principles of revolutionary action, 'cause remember, the life you save may be your own.

PAN-AFRICANISTS YESTERDAY AND TODAY

All peoples of African descent whether they live in north or south America, the Caribbean,or in any other part of the world, are Africans and belong to the African nation.
Kwame Nkrumah.

An African nationality is our great need...we shall never receive the respect of other races until we establish a powerful nationality.We should not content ourselves living among other races, simply by permission or their endurance...we must build up Negro states; we must establish and maintain the various institutions; we must make and adminster laws,erect and preserve churches...we must have governments; we must have legislation of our own; we must build ships and naviatge them; we must ply the trades,instruct the schools,control the press and thus aid in shaping mankind.Nationality is an ordinace of nature.The heart of every true Negro year after a distince and separate nationality.
Edward Blyden.

The inter-African solidarity must be a solidarity of fact, a solidarity of action, a solidarity concrete in men, in equipment, in money.Africa shall be free. Yes,but it must get to work, it must not lose sight of its own unity.

We believe that Pan-Africanism dictates certain things.That we are not Afro-Americans.We are not Negores.We are not Afro-Canadians.We are not West Indians...the only land we will ever be able to totally relate to as a people is Africa...We begin with the idea tha anywhere we are in the world today,we are inseperably liked up by our common culture and our common oppression.What we must be struggling for is to move to a point where we can govern ourselves.

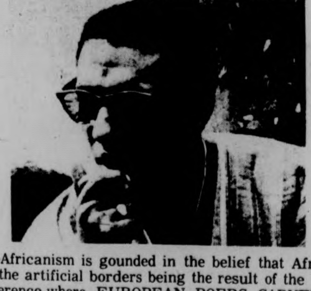
Basically when we speak of Pan-African nationalism, we mean simply the knowledge that we are an African people,despite our slavery, colonization by Europeans and our dispersal throughout the countries of the world.Pan-Africanism is thus the global expression of Black nationalism.
Imamu Amiri Baraka.



Pan-Africanism is gounded in the belief that Africa is one;the artificial borders being the result of the Berlin conference,where EUROPEAN BOERS CARVED UP THE CONTINENT AND DIVIDED THE SPOILS AMONG THEMSELVES.PAn-Africanism is gounded in the belief that all African people,whereever we may be,are one,and as Dr.Nkrumah says,'belong to the African nation;' our dispersal was the result of European imperialism and racism.Pan-Africanism is grounded in socialism which has its roots in communalism.Any ideology seeking to solve the problems of the African people must find its roots in Pan-Africanism.

VOICES FOR AFRICAN FREEDOM

The struggle in southern Africa has assumed major international dimensions. Those who may have thought that the conflict in southern Africa would remain local or regional should now have learned differently from the Angolan experience. Angola reflected at least two things about the struggle in southern Africa: (1) That South Africa was prepared to commit significant military force in the southern Africa conflict. The Defense Minister of South Africa said that at least 4000 to 5000 South African troops were either in southern Angola or in northern Namibia near the Angolan border during the contest for control of that country. (2) The major powers of the world could very easily be involved in southern Africa.

The struggle for majority rule in Namibia and South Africa has been internationalized for years. The United Nations, with support from all the major powers, has voted to end South Africa's administration of Namibia. A Council for Namibia and a Commissioner for Namibia have been established. SWAPO has received assistance politically and militarily from both the Soviet Union and China. South Africa has been defying the United Nations and the present Constitutional Conference which it is sponsoring runs counter to basic principles which the UN General Assembly has adopted calling for a united and independent Namibia. It is very likely that South Africa would make Namibia its first line of defense and would make a major commitment of military force against black nationalist encroachments.

The apartheid system and racism in South Africa have been international issues ever since the United Nations was created after the Second World War. Virtually all the nations of the world have condemned apartheid including the United States. Yet the United States maintains a vested interest in the economy of white-ruled South Africa. American investments have rised by a billion dollars within the last decade and are now approaching 1.5 billion dollars. Between 300 and 400 American corporations have interests in South Africa, including such major companies as International Telephone and Telegraph, General Motors, International Business Machines, and Union Carbide. Although the United States has time and again attacked the scheme of apartheid in public statements, the government has avoided any known assistance to the African liberation movement there. In contrast with the position of the United States, the other two major powers, China and the Soviet Union, have no economic interests in South Africa and have actively been supporting one liberation movement or another. These movements are not likely to appeal to the United States or Western Europe for assistance as their struggle against the white minority regime of South Africa develops. Some of the same issues may be involved in the South African struggle as were involved in Angola. The difference may be that white South Africa is committed to an all-out military defense and has strength to back it up. Also American interests in South Africa both economically and logistically in a geo-political sense are extensive. White South Africa already depicts the issue not just in South Africa but in all of southern Africa, in communist vs. anti-communist terms. Judging from Angolan experience, that is entirely within the frame of reference of the United States. The consequences of the United States commitment to give any degree of support to the preservation of a white supremacy government of South Africa will be disastrous.

Can Armed Struggle be Avoided?

Can a growing armed struggle be avoided in southern Africa? Certainly this is possible. But it is only possible if the white minority are prepared to accept an end to white supremacy, an end to special privilege and a willingness to live in countries where Africans exercise the full political rights they are entitled to as the majority. An international confrontation of major proportions, even if there is an escalation of the armed struggle for majority rule, can be avoided if the major powers, including the United States, commit themselves to work together to press for genuine change. This will mean the end of policies by the United States which back up South African power in both Namibia and in the Republic itself. Without a shift in American policy the chances of avoiding a major international conflict in southern Africa seem slight.

There will be a general meeting of the New Africa House Steering Committee today, Mon., Dec. 6 at 4:00 p.m. at the 2nd floor lounge, New Africa House.

Issues to be discussed include the development of a Program Committee for New Africa House and means by which student awareness to the current developments in Southern Africa can be increased.

All members of the Five-College area third world community are encouraged to attend and participate.

THE REVOLUTIONARY ROLE OF BLACK STUDENTS OF AZANIA

BLACKS IN SOWETO MARCH

Tseitsi Mashinini, the 19 year old organizer of the Soweto student uprising will speak at University of Massachusetts-Amherst this week. Mr. Mashinini, the former president of the Soweto Student Representative Council, will speak on the "Revolutionary Role of Black Students of Azania" at the Student Union Ballroom at 2:00 p.m. on Wednesday, December 8, 1976.

All the world is aware of the national uprisings in Azania of last September. What was never clear from the reports of the western news media was just who were these young Africans who seemed so unafraid of the lethal military force of the Afrikaner army? Who organized and and kep the demonstrations going despite the murderous response from the police and army? Where, since all black political leadership was supposed to be in jail or exile, did the skill and militant leadership of the demonstrators come from?

The answer to all these questions are beginning to emerge: a new generation of young black students acting within an organization called South African Student Organization (SASO), patterned after the American student movement of the 'sixties,' under a program of "black consciousness" was the agent of the uprisings. Only now is the story of the courage, dedication and sacrifice of these young people being told. (Over three hundred students were killed, some no more than ten or twelve years of age.)

Currently on tour of the United Statesare Jeff Baqwa and Tsietsi Mashinini of SASO. They will only be here for a few weeks, and represent a unique opportunity for American students to get a first hand picture of conditions and events in South Africa during and after the uprisings.

Tsietsi Mashinini is the symbol of the uprising. A young student, he was president of the Soweto Student Council where the uprising began. He became a legend as he travelled from township to township organizing demonstrations. He also became the subject of an intense nation-wide manhunt, the top priority for South African security forces, but was never caught. He was hidden by the black communty, and his series of escapes from police traps and continued work became a focal issue between the students and the white authorities.

MISEDUCATION

New York ... In a recent defense of his doctoral dissertation at Columbia University, Dr. John Orville Hopkins proved that the root cause of the continuing general educational failure of the masses of African students born inside the U.S.A. is due substantially to ill will on the part of the principal persons and institutions which control basic educational policy and practice for most Black people.

Dr. Hopkins takes the position that the miseducation of Black people in the U.S. is not due generally to a lack of knowledge, technology, and other resources necessary to guarantee a quality educational equally to white children.

His thesis charges that racism, on a massive level, pervades most of those educational institutions which seek to educate the masses of Africans born inside the U.S.A. He argues that the U.S.A. society's general oppression of Black people is particularly effective in miseducating Black youth. He concludes that a massive program of reparation and indemnification is owed to Black people in return for the four hundred years of educational oppression and neglect which Black people have suffered.

Dr. Hopkins states that debates about whether to use busing to improve the education of Black children, is a dishonest representation of the real root cause of Black miseducation in the United States. The real issue he claims is whether the U.S.A. white society will, or will not, allow the masses of Black people to have independence in making their own judgements about quality and direction of Black children.

A Night with Majeed

On Saturday night, December 3, the New Africa House was graced by the brilliance of Charles "Majeed" Greenlee who introduced to the gathering of admirers his very own interpretation of jazz. The group got off to a late start, however, once the group got rolling it was a sure crowd pleaser. With Majeed on trombone, Art Matthew on piano, Beaver Harris on drums, Brother Neol on Percussion, Kiane Zamadi on Euphonium Trombone, and Avery Sharpe on Acoustic Bass. The six musicians connected in such a way that only true music makers can. Sound traveled through the crowd as the gathering of people applauded after each piece of work. "Majeed" and the other music makers produced extreme moods from mellow moods to frightening power moods. This honor took place in the Lumumba Room. Upon 12:30 a.m., the musicians knew that they had satisfied the people.

The Life and Times of Federick Dougalas

On Monday, December 6, 1976, Frederick Douglass comes to Amherst by way of the Center for Racial Understanding, the Malcolm XRoom, and the Five College Lecture Fund Committee. Arthur Napier Burghart willgive a live performance of the Outstanding Black Spokesman from the 19th Century. Burghart shares with you his Bicentennial gift to America. Arthur Napier Burghart, a man of many talents, is an actor who has appeared in motion pictures, repertory theatre, both on Broadway and Off Broadway plays. "Cotton Comes to Harlem" and Network motion pictures are to his credit. He has performed in a variety of plays like: Baraka's "The Slave", "Dutchman", Shakespeare's "Richard III", "King Lear", O'Neill's '"The Iceman Cometh", "Emperor Jones" and many many more.

"Narrative of theLife of Frederick Douglass", an autobiography, was published in 1845. Douglass feared that this identity as a runaway slave would be revealed when the book was published, so he went to England that same year. In England, he continued to speak against slavery. He also found friends who raised enough money to buy his freedom. Upon his return to the United States in 1847, he founded an antislavery newspaper the North Star in Rochester, N.Y. Douglass charged that employers hired white immigrants ahead of Black Americans. He accused even some abolitionist business of job discrimination against Negroes. He led a successful attack against segregated schools in Rochester. His home was a station on the underground railroad, which helped runaway slaves reach freedom.

Douglass, born into slavery, named Frederick Augustus Washington Bailey in Tuckahoe, Maryland in 1817. At eight he was sent to Baltimore to work for one of his masters relatives. In 1837, he fled from his owners, to avoid capture he dropped his two middle names and changed his last name. At a meeting of The Massachusetts Antislavery Society in 1841, Douglass told what freedom meant to him. The audience was so impressed that the society hired him to lecture about his experiences as a slave. During the early 1840's, Douaglass protested against segregated seating on railroad trains by sitting in cars reserved for whites. He had to be dragged from the white cars. Douglass also protested against religious discrimination. He once walked out of a church that kept blacks from taking part in a service until all the whites had finished participating.

Kwanza-Christmas Cassarole

This Sweet Potato Casserole has long been eaten by my family every Christmas and every chance we get to make a holiday. I suspect it has southern tradition since my mother is from Memphis. Boil several sweet potatoes, puree-grind and strain (grind and strain with a wooden pestle in a cone strainer). When this is done pour in lots of fresh shredded pineapple or canned pineapple. Add raisins. Top with a layer of marshmallows. Bake for about a half hour or until delish.

BOOK REVIEW: When you have the time over the holidays, check out this very enjoyable story. It is funny and educational, fantastic and very very possible — all at the same time. MUMBO JUMBO is a novel by Ishmael Reed (author of THE LAST DAYS OF LOUISIANA RED). The story is set in Harlem in the nineteen twenties and it's about a lot of things, including Papa Le Bas and his Mumbo Jumbo Cathedral and Gangsters and HooDoo and the Mutafickas — a group of Third World revolutionaries who go around ripping off the Art Detention Centers and restoring all the Third World art to their rightful owners. It's about the Master Plans of the Knight's of the Templar who originated with the bad vibes of Set way back from Jumpstreet in Egypt when everybody was doin' the Nile Valley Stomp ...

Voices Of New Africa House Annual Fall Concert

What does Pamela Benn, Beareatha Reddy, Semenya McCord, Walter Howard, Lillie Woodhouse and close to fifty other vocalists and musicians from the Five-College area have in common?

The leading of the Voices of New Africa House on the Evening of "Gospel Fuse".

They are a part of the Voices of New Africa House Choir, one of the most vibrant, refreshing group of vocalists and musicians in the Pioneer Valley.

Under the direction of Dr. Horace Boyer, the choir performed, Monday, at the Fine Arts Center, singing the works of four local Black composers; Dr. Floyd Williams, Dr. Fred Tillis, William Dargan and Semenya McCord.

Their Fifth Annual Fall Concert was a journey through the dimensions of Black music, ranging from Gospel to Classical Black music while Walter Howard conjured the spirit of Duke Ellington in "Come Sunday," Beareatha Reddy opened up her deep, rich voice and produced "You Are Beautiful". Pamela Benn, a new soloist of the season released a voice so startlingly clear and mellow that she left the audience breathless.

Since 1972, the choir has appeared in solo concerts with such well known artists as, Ossie Davis, Reggie Workman, Archie Shepp, Dee Dee Bridgewater and their founder Max Roach.

The voices of New Africa House is an inspiring personification of what Collective Black Creativity is all about.

Dr. Horace Boyer, Director, played a perfection of piano, while Cissy Houston preached 'Love Sermons' in a rich and celestial voice. Her soprano voice was as refined as an instrument; she sang with sensitivity, training and accuracy as did the trio backing her up. Meanwhile, Sulaiman Hakim steps into the other side of the stage and winds his way through the strongs and cellos, basses, and bassoons. His playing was very disciplined this evening — but the effect remained fluid, strong and magical. In the back of the stage, the Voices were doing a number — I definitely could have dealt with

Got To Keep Looking

We have got to keep looking deep into our souls for therein lies the paths to many mountains
It is the road that was hidden, lost, or stole through time
Our mothers and fathers blindly looked praying in the cold mist of night
Help my children find a better tomorrow cause Lord we have done
all we know
And now many of them are dead and gone but their prayer, lives on a better tomorrow
For new life
The truth lies in our soul
Nothing we ever had was lost or stole
Only we are afraid to look at our souls of unified energy that hidden dark passage of

ABSENCE

It's not here
The warm embrace of your voice
The love you offer
The love I need
Once again
I sit alone
Trapped
With flowing love
In your absence
I fade
Reaching for tomorrow
Living in yesterday
Time escapes unwantingly
Seconds are minutes
Minutes are hours
I die
In the stillness of my

I wait at the resting ground
For the love you promise
Would give new life
Free of absence

South African militant leader here tomorrow

The exiled leader of the militant student organization, whose demonstrations set off a national uprising in South Africa last summer, will speak here tomorrow.

Tseitsi Mashinini, nineteen year old president of Soweto Students Representative Council, will speak on the "Revolutionary Role of Black Students in Azania" in the Student Union Ballroom at 2 p.m. This appearance at UMass is being sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies.

In a country where the black political opposition to the apartheid regime is either dead, in exile or in detention, militant organizations of young students have moved into the political vacuum. It was these student organizations, nationally organized under the umbrella organization called the South African Student Organization (SASO), that organized and maintained the demonstrations and work stopages in the recent national uprising.

BLACK AFFAIRS

After the demonstrations erupted, the security forces of the white minority government responded by detaining every African suspected of being a leader, students as young as twelve and fourteen years old were being arrested. In Soweto the identity and whereabouts of the student leadership was closely guarded, as the capture of Mashinini and his colleagues became a national priority.

The New York Times reported in June that "security forces are engaged in a national manhunt for a mysterious and elusive figure — the student leader Tseitsi Mashinini. The search was intensified after Mashinini — believed by the police to be either dead or in detention — gave an interview to an English television team."

The only member of the national and regional executive Council of the South African student movement to escape detention, Mashinini escaped via Botswana.

Student liquor license fought

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Gerald J. Grady, coordinator of Community Relations here, asked the Amherst Board of Selectmen last night to turn down the present Top of the Campus (TOC) Inc. liquor license application, because the holder of the license would be a student.

The application was made at the meeting by Thomas Kerrins, manager of the TOC, Inc. and a student at UMass. He said last night that this is done in accordance with the tradition of the TOC, Inc. as the manager has the liquor license placed in his or her name. Kerrins' election to the position of manager was, however, the first time that a student had been elected to the post.

"It was my understanding through Dean of Students William F. Field and Bud Wilkes, acting director of the Campus Center, that it was not the policy of the University to allow students to hold liquor licenses," said Grady. "The people at the TOC knew this. It's not something new. This question has come up before."

"When I saw the matter on the agenda for the selectmen, I went to give the Universities' position on the matter as I understood it from Field and Wilkes. The points I raised at the meeting may or may not be valid," he said.

The Board postponed action on the application, a traditional move so the selectmen might inspect the premises sometime this week.

Kerrins said he had spoken with town officials, including the chairman, Nancy Eddy, and that he had been told there were no restrictions in the liquor laws which would prohibit a student from holding a license.

"The TOC broke tradition when it elected a student to be manager. The people there knew that it was not the desire of the University to have a student in the position," said Grady. "Also, you must remember that even after the selectmen decide on the application there would be another decision made also by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission."

Kerrins said, "An agreement between the TOC and the UMass Board of Trustees allows for this occurrance to take place."

In other action, several residents of the recently fire-damaged Crown Point Apartments appeared before the selectmen with four new fire-safety proposals. Ken Mosakowski, speaking for the group of about 30 residents, recommended that the proposals be supported by the Board and brought before the town at a special Town Meeting to be held in late January or early February.

The four proposals included one which would require landlords to install smoke detectors in all multiple residence dwellings, paying special attention to those built before 1965. Another asked for the construction of an access road to the apartments. The third and fourth proposals asked the fire chief to study and recommend new means of fire protection, and asked the Town Manager to investigate the possibility of a town by-law requiring smoke detectors in dwellings.

The selectmen supported the final two proposals. They suggested the residents of the Crown Point Apartments have the access road constructed by the owner. The selectmen recommended they do this only after residents had considered the possibility of dangerous cross traffic through the apartments after the construction of the road.

Tenure not likely for English profs

By M.B. ALLEN
Collegian Staff

It is unlikely that any English faculty members will receive tenure this year, due to lower than average student-faculty ratios in English classes.

"It will not be possible for me to recommend anyone for tenure or reappointment this year," said Humanities and Fine Arts Dean Jeramiah M. Allen at a meeting of English faculty members held yesterday afternoon.

English department chairperson David Clark had billed the meeting as a presentation by Allen at which he would present a plan for "reducing the English department to 55 members." There are currently 105 members of the English department, including five Journalistic Studies instructors.

"False and misleading" was how Allen termed Clark's promotional flyer that contained the phrase "55 member English department." Allen said after the meeting that he and Clark had discussed the low student-faculty ratio present in the English classes at Umass, and he told Clark that at a "reasonable (class) enrollment of 16 to one the faculty would have 55 members."

The average student-faculty ratio at Umass is 17.4 to one. The same ratio for the English Department is 9.9 to one. It was on these figures that Allen based his position that no new tenured faculty should be added to the English department.

"When the budgets are allocated next year it's not unreasonable to assume the Fine Arts budget will be cut. Students have moved obviously away from Fine Arts to the School of Food and Natural Resources, the School of Business Administration, and Health Sciences." He said that student-faculty ratios in the latter schools are sometimes twice as high as those in the English department.

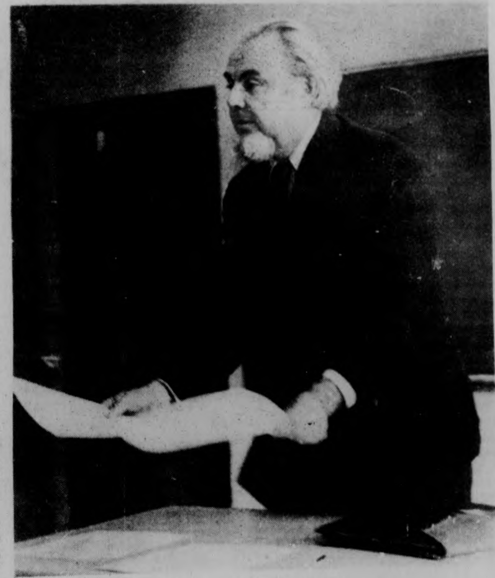
"We all see each other's numbers," said Allen, referring to the ratios. "In light of these figures I haven't got much leverage."

Allen said that the art, theatre and music departments have more reasonable claims to low ratios since these departments rely a great deal on individual instruction. The Journalistic Studies courses have a ratio of 18.9, much higher that the English ratio. "Journalism is bucking the trend," observed Allen. "It's ratio is really too high to provide the kind of instruction journalists need — at least the kind they tell me they need."

"I really don't think you can defend a ratio of less than 10 to one in an ordinary classroom situation where you have a lecture format," said Allen.

"It's a hell of a situation. I'm facing the other schools with what looks like a very fat (ratio) unit to the rest of the campus." Allen continued by saying, "If it (the low ratio) were distributed evenly throughout the rest of the department it would be different. But it's not (evenly distributed). Look at classics and Spanish-Portuguese." Classics has a ratio of 25.25 and Spanish-Portuguese has a ratio of 19.10.

"I should have realized the import of these numbers sooner," admitted Allen. "The full significance of this enrollment data did not sink into my head until Thanksgiving vacation. When I came back it really came through to me what the figures meant."



Jeremiah M. Allen

Allen stressed that to improve the situation either the "denominator or the numerator" must change. In other words, there must be fewer teachers or more students. Allen said he is reluctant to cut the faculty and prefers to work on increasing enrollment in English classes.

"A good rule to remember is 'no whoring after students because it doesn't really pay," said Allen. He prefers "legitimately" increasing enrollments in what he termed an "academically respectable" way.

Allen had several proposals to solve the problem of the disproportionate ratio. "One possibility would be to develop special courses that would meet 'F' interdisciplinary requirements. Perhaps some English course could be composed to meet social science requirements," he suggested. "The department could also work out a closer relationship with the rhetoric department. I think quite a lot could be done there."

"Finally, I think one of our problems is that during the 60's, under the pressure for relevance we relaxed a great many requirements — what we have now is a very unstructured curriculum. Students slosh around and right now they are sloshing away from us," he said.

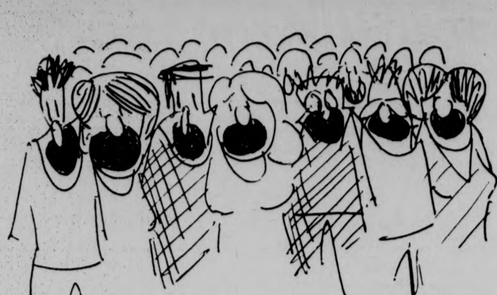
Chorus' women's choir perform tomorrow night



By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Get into the Christmas spirit early with a concert of good chorale music.

The University Chorus and the Women's Choir, under the direction of E. Wayne Abercrombie, will be presenting a concert tomorrow night at 8 in Bowker Auditorium.

The program will be made up of both sacred and secular pieces, featuring works by 20th century composers such as Barber, Messiaen, Persichetti, and others. It will also include a short contata entitled "Rejoice in the Lamb", written by Benjamin Britten, who died Saturday. "It may not be his best work, but it's the work most associated with his name," said Abercrombie.

The concert will be open to the public and free of charge.

The University Chorus is made up of 100 students from all areas of the University. "Some people come in who have never sung in a chorus before, and some have been singing for years and years. They all work very hard," said Abercrombie.

The Chorus has an open membership policy and is geared toward the participants' learning. "It's for students who like to sing but don't want to make a large commitment," said John Daniel, a member of the Chorus.

"The members enjoy sharing the music with other students," said Abercrombie. He emphasizes student involvement in the running and planning for the chorus. Most of the preparation for this concert has been done by the four student directors: Roxanne Olevsky, Marcy Benoit, Michelle Eaton, and Elizabeth Gradone.

"He's got to be the best chorus director I've ever had," one member remarked. Apparently Abercrombie was out for a few weeks due to illness, and has been working hard since his recent return on the concert program.

The Women's Choir, with 25 members, will perform the premier with a piece written by Karen Tarlow. Tarlow, originally from Northampton, received a Bachelor's Degree in Music from UMass. She is currently working on her doctorate in composition at Boston University. The work, entitled "Fields of Sorrow", is in three pieces, for women's choir, piano and flute.

Some 'crafty' folks display their wares

Leather purses, belts, wallets — brass, silver and gold jewelry and belt buckles — minerature wooden helicopters — stained glass windows — brass joint boxes — the list of things that one can puchase at the Crafts Fair in the Student Union ballroom is endless. The fair, which is sponsored by Pastime Productions, started yesterday and will run today until 3 p.m. Artisans from all over New England are participating. The Fair is a good opportunity to purchase Christmas gifts or just treat yourself to something new.

Central govn't debates movie guarantee

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Thirteen people heard a debate concerning the issuance of a memo regarding movie guarantees at last night's meeting of the Central Area Government.

Discussion centered on the problems of giving movie guarantees to dorms showing films of racist, sexist and violent nature in order to raise money.

This debate was a continuance of last week's denial of a movie guarantee to Chadbourne dorm for the showing of "The Devil In Miss Jones."

Movie guarantees are a form of compensation by the Area Government for any financial loss brought upon by a dorm by the showing of a movie.

Some representatives felt that the area government would be acting as a censor in an area where students should decide for themselves.

Van Meter North representative Steve Ross said, "I think you have to realize that people are intelligent enough here to decide for themselves what they want to see. People don't go to a movie for political reasons, but for entertainment.

Others felt that the area government should not use its funds towards the support of a film of questionable merit.

Treasurer Anthony Burt said he thought the government's actions on this matter "should make people think twice about whether or not they will show racist and sexist movies. We have to set an example for a level of consciousness."

Speaking on how racist or sexist movies do affect people, representative Angela Thomas said, "I have friends who went to see 'Mandingo', and they told me that they felt like striking out at every white person in that audience. For some people, these types of movies really hit home."

The memo was approved, and was developed by Brooks representative Robert Canon to state that the Central Area Government does not support racism and sexism, and to explain why the movie guarantee was denied Chadbourne last week.

The memo also reads: "The Central Area Government, however, does judge each movie on an individual basis. We invite and encourage all people to bring their movies before the council for guarantees."

Twenty dollars was appropriated to Activities Coordinator Wayne Burns for the rental of sound equipment for a coffee house this Thursday night at 9, to be held at Brooks dorm or, if that is unattainable, at Hills House.

There will also be a coffeehouse at the Van Meter South lobby Saturday night at 9. Twenty dollars was given for rental of sound equipment.

Van Meter South representative Carol Bachman said the event is open to all area residents with no admission charge.

Fifteen dollars was given to Lynn Schwartz for a presentation resultant of her macrame colloquium. The money will be used for refreshments for the Wednesday night exhibit, which will be held at 8:30 in the Brooks dorm lobby.

The government voted to contact Dean Fields and Area Director Michael Woolf to request that further investigation be taken regarding two Brooks dormitory incidents.

According to representative Robert Canon, four weeks ago the dorm's kitchenette and recreation room area was vandalized. One week later, the apartment of the Brooks head of residence, Midge Miles, was "ripped apart."

Although the three suspects are generally considered to have been responsible for both attacks, little action has been taken in the past weeks.

Nkrumah Olinga, New World Coordinator, said, "Students have to put pressure on the area director to pursue this and keep those students out of the Central Area."

Olinga also informed the government that a student organizer in South Africa will speak in the Student Union Ballroom Wednesday night at 8:30.

People interested in racism issues and what can and has happened in South Africa are encouraged to attend.

Co-Vice-President Andrew Topalian introduced a proposal to have a 3-credit course for area representatives next semester on area government.

Requirements have been drawn up which include numerous short papers dealing with the area government. The course must be accepted by McIntyre House, the administrative center in Central Area.

Topalian quoted the proposal saying, "Area government should be counted as a course since it is a learning experience in itself.... dealing with political, social, and economic issues."

Nominations are still open for the office of Treasurer. Nominees are Steve Ross, Marlene Kaplan, and Robert Canon.

The Treasurer will be voted in at next Monday night's meeting.

Faculty union

Intense campaign expected

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Faculty can expect an intensive campaign on the issue of collective bargaining between the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) and the anti-union faculty, with the run-off election between the two planned for Feb. 2 and 3. Faculty here and at the Boston campus will be voting between no union or a union represented by MSP.

This run-off election was made necessary because no decision was reached from last week's vote due to the fact that none of the alternatives received over 50 per cent of the vote. The 1658 faculty members who voted last Wednesday and Thursday had the choice of a union represented by MSP, which received 48 per cent of the vote; no agent or no union, which received 30 per cent of the vote; and a union represented by the American Association of University Professors (AAUP), which received 15 per cent of the vote.

Now with AAUP out of the picture, MSP and the Committee of Informed Faculty (CFIF), a group of faculty who are trying to build up a strong anti-union sentiment among their colleagues, will wage a more intense and harder campaign than faculty saw this semester.

But first, some last words from AAUP.

"Of course, we were surprised," Joseph S. Larson, AAUP president and professor of Forestry here said yesterday.

"Our problem was that the AAUP message just didn't get across to the faculty," said Larson. "The problem was that AAUP is a different kind of agent, offering a more complex message to faculty. We wanted to show that we should be the preferred agent and assumed a level of understanding which is required to understand the complexity of our stand. But I suppose people just hadn't looked at the issues close enough."

Of course, which way AAUP will sway now, either to MSP or the no agent side, will have an effect on the February election outcome. Both sides would like to see the 15 per cent who voted AAUP to swing their way. Larson said the AAUP will make a public statement after an executive meeting today at noon on whether they will endorse MSP or no agent, or simply just to stay out of the picture.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Now all that can be done is to play with the existing numbers produced from last week's election and plan strategy.

According to Robert S. Bond, CFIF member and professor of Forestry here, the CFIF has now 50 members officially which is double than what they started with in mid-semester at their first meetings. Bond said, however, that this is not indicative of their membership since many faculty are favoring no agent, but not signing their name to the CFIF membership roster.

"I'm sure our campaign will be more intense," said Bond. "Before, it was a situation where we wanted to place number two over AAUP. We concluded that MSP had a good chance of coming on top and we wanted to garner more votes than AAUP. It appeared that there was a race as to whether AAUP or no agent would come to second."

"We hope, of course, to keep the same amount of strength we had in this election and take as much of AAUP over to our side as we can, as well as getting some votes away from MSP."

Bond said at the Boston campus there is a group of 25 to 30 faculty not officially organized who sent out one letter to their colleagues for a vote of no agent. Bond said the CFIF does send their newsletters to George Goodwin, professor of political science at the Boston campus since he is a highly recognized figure, one time department head, who opposed the union and could exert some influence there. Bond said there are no other anti-union movements that he knows of at the Boston campus.

"There was a poll taken there and I think only 100 out of 500 were anti-union," said Bond. "So, that's only one-fifth of their vote our way."

Of course, the CFIF will have to prove to the faculty that there is no need for a union: that a union will first, not solve faculty problems, and second, that existing problems can be solved within the present governance system.

On the election results, Larry S. Roberts, MSP president and professor of Zoology here said, "there was a clear message that faculty here and at Boston want to have a union."

Frederick Douglass' Life and times

By D. A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

A fine performance was given by Arthur Napier Burghart in his portrayal of Frederick Douglass last night at the Southwest Center for the Performing Arts, Hampden Student Center.

Burghart presented excerpts from his play "The Life and Times of Frederick Douglass" to a receptive, racially mixed audience.

Burghart is an accomplished actor who has motion pictures and both Broadway and off-Broadway plays to his credit.

Last night, in "The Life and Times of Frederick Douglass", Burghart presented many speeches and letters which were written by Frederick Douglass and were typical of many events in Douglass' life.

He spoke of "the so-called, but miss-called Negro problem" of Douglass' time and the wrongs and injustices perpetrated on black Americans. He made references to the Declaration of Independence, how this document was written for all men, and how white Americans interpreted it, with the aid of religion, to fit their own needs.

THEATRE REVIEW

Burghart truly moved the audience.

In an introductory speech, Douglass was said to be "a revolutionary in the true sense of the word. He did what he had to do. A true intellectual."

In one of his speeches, Burghart brings to life the childhood of Douglass and spoke of the black American and education. White masters, he said, told their black slaves that learning to read and write would only make them miscontented. The miscontentment, Burghart pointed out, was true. It existed in knowing that slavery should have been abolished, but being able to do nothing about it.

In his closing speech, Burghart quoted Douglass with, "The difference between a slave and a free man is the difference between a thoughtful man and a thoughtless man."

This presentation was one of the Mao Tse-Tung Lecture Series, sponsored by the Center of Racial Understanding, the Malcolm X Room, and the Five-College Lecture Fund Committee.

★ English dep't tenure

Donald A. Junkins, an associate professor in the English department, said to Allen, "We've reached a psychological impasse. You're giving us the feeling that you're against us. You're not giving us the feeling that you are here, or that you are with us. You've got to give is something before you leave."

"I wish I could respond in a way that would help you, but the numbers are against us," said Allen.

"You've got to bet on us," answered Junkins. "You've got to guide us through this national phenomenon."

The "national phenonoma" that Junkins was referring to is the national trend away from enrollment in humanities courses and toward enrollment in technical and vocational course, as well as social sciences and business courses.

Pamela Edwards, English professor, said, "I'm getting the feeling that the general opinion of many is that the humanities are expendable. It is a qualatative thing, not a quantitative thing," she said, citing the excellent credentials of the UMass English department.

"I wish I could be more encouraging," said Allen, concluding his remarks. He later said, "Before we can think about operating the English department normally we have to improve the ratio situation."

Paul Mariani, associate professor of English and chairperson of the English long-range planning committee said later, "I think some of the things that he (Allen) suggested are workable and some are not." He expressed skepticism that professors could be transferred to other departments temporarily, which was one of Allen's suggestions. He also said that a move to incorporate the rhetoric department with the English department would be unpopular among the English faculty.

"He (Allen) said things that had to be said, but I think part of it has to be examined more closely," continued Mariani. "I wonder if he's fully digested what he's done."

"The trend is towards vocational training and job oriented courses," Mariani said. "In the 60's things looked rosy and people felt they could afford to major in the humanities. Now it's a matter of economic survival."

Clark had no comment on the meeting. He did say that the freeze on tenure appointments would affect three faculty members who are applying for tenure this year.

Now that the holiday season is upon us, activity at the Student Union Crafts shop is on the rise, as students rush to make that special gift. (Staff photo by Chris Turner)

Zionism vs. Zionism topic of lecture

Arnold Jacob Wolf will be speaking on "Zionism vs. Zionism", a talk that will critically examine different aspects and tensions within the Zionist movement, tonight at 8 in Campus Center room 904-908.

Wolf is a chaplain, lecturer in Jewish philosophy, and Hillel director at Yale University. He is the newly-elected president of "Breira" — which means "choice" — a national organization seeking alternatives for peace in the Middle East that will be acceptable and fair for both Israelis and Palestinians. He is a national board member of Clergy and Laity Concerned.

A graduate student in the Hillel office said, "I don't usually remember speakers over a long period of time, but I can still remember a talk that Wolf gave over a number of years ago when I was an undergraduate at Brandeis, his ideas were different and I was impressed by that."

For several years, Wolf has conducted his own radio and television program over mid-west CBS and ABC. He received the Brotherhood Award of the National Conference of Christians and Jews in 1962.

He was also the first, and only, delegate to the World Council of Churches Assembly in Nairobi, Kenya, in Dec. 1975, representing the world Jewish community.

"He has the philosophy of taking the power out of the hands of the rabbi, and giving the power to the people," the graduate said.

Wolf served as assistant Rabbi of Congregation Emmanuel, Chicago. He was awarded the Korean Service Ribbon and the United Nations Medal for his work as the only Jewish Naval Chaplain in the Far East.

Wolf's talk is free and open to the public. It is sponsored by the UMass B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation.

Title IX public hearing in CC today

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

The Student Affairs Title IX Self-Evaluation Committee will be holding a public hearing today to examine and discuss issues concerning sex discrimination on campus with respect to the Community Development Center (CDC).

The meeting will be from noon to 2 p.m. in the Campus Center and students are urged to attend and discuss experiences within the community including dorm life, heads of residents, student programs and whether or not they have felt sexually discriminated against in any area pertaining to student life.

Title IX was developed by the U.S. Congress and states that sex discrimination must be eliminated in every educational institution or funds will be cut off.

To meet the standards of Title IX, UMass has set up a committee to evaluate all aspects of the university.

If standards are not presently acceptable, action will be taken to meet them and will be filed and re-examined in three years.

According to Steven Austin, evaluation consultant for student affairs, this program will not work unless pressure is put on by the total community.

O'Neill, Wright win top House posts

Compiled from wires — WASHINGTON — House Democrats, organizing for the new Congress, chose Rep. Thomas "Tip" O'Neill of Massachusetts yesterday to be their new speaker.

O'Neill, an activist liberal, was unopposed and was nominated by acclamation, with a token confirmation by the full House to come in January. He will succeed Carl Albert of Oklahoma, who is retiring from Congress.

The first all-out fight for a leadership post since 1961 was a four-way battle for majority leader, the position which O'Neill has held.

In that race Rep. Jim Wright of Texas, a dark-horse candidate, won by a single vote the bitter four-way race for House Democratic leader in the new 95th Congress.

Wright defeated his closest rival, Rep. Phillip Burton of California, by a 148-147 vote on the third secret ballot. Rep. Richard Bolling of Missouri finished last on the second ballot, trailing Wright by two votes, and was automatically dropped.

The fourth candidate, John McFall of California, who became the center of controversy after reports he had taken gifts from South Korean businessman Tongsun Park, withdrew his name after the first ballot.

Wright, considered a moderate, will succeed O'Neill when the Texan starts his 12th term in the House on Jan. 4.

The Democrats also chose Rep. Tom Foley of Washington to lead their caucus. In that race, Foley defeated Rep. Shirley Chisholm of New York, with 194 votes for Foley and 96 for Mrs. Chisholm.

O'Neill said Sunday his first action will be creation of a committee to find ways to upgrade the ethical code for Congress and restore the integrity of the House. There have been allegations that members had diverted campaign funds to personal or office uses, taken money from foreign agents seeking to influence the U.S. government or were otherwise abusing the public trust.

Rep. Edward P. Boland, D-Mass., a close friend of O'Neill, said in a scheduled nomination speech that O'Neill has built bridges between labor and management, the young, middle-aged and the elderly and between politicians, professors and students.

O'Neill said one of his first acts would be to form an ad hoc committee "to form a strong code of ethics" for the House. This committee will work closely with a committee chaired by Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., which is looking into reform of House procedures. He called the current ethics committee "toothless" and said the American public needs more confidence that the House will properly punish its own.

"We do know that the image of Congress is low and we intend to try to do something about it," said O'Neill.

Wright, standing beside O'Neill in a crowded Capitol hallway, also promised to work to "improve the substance as well as the image" of Congress. "It is of course deeply gratifying," he said of his victory. "As Mr. Speaker Sam Rayburn said so frequently, I love this House."

Israel seeks talks, refuse PLO entry

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — Israel asked the United Nations Monday to reconvene the Geneva Middle East peace conference immediately — but without the Palestine's Liberation Organization's participation.

As soon as Israel submitted its resolution, five nonaligned nations countered with an amendment asking the PLO be allowed to take part.

Another Arab-backed resolution stipulated the Geneva talks should resume by the end of March.

Israeli Ambassador Chaim Herzog said he expected the Arabs to "torpedo" the measure but added that such action would benefit the Israeli cause.

"The Arab-inspired resolution will show up their role as prevaricators, befogging the issue and making smooth sounds to American congressmen," Herzog told reporters.

He said Israel was ready to participate in resumed Geneva talks "tomorrow," but "our position has not changed. We will not sit with the PLO."

However, Herzog said Israel would not "examine the credentials of the members of the Arab countries" at Geneva.

The envoy said that at the last Middle East talks there in 1973, seven of 11 members of the Jordanian delegation were Palestinians.

Herzog said Israel would not accept a comprehensive Arab resolution, reportedly initiated by Syria, calling for early resumption of the Geneva talks with PLO participation.

The measure condemned Israel's continued occupation of Arab territories, declared an Israeli withdrawal as a prerequisite to Middle East peace and condemned all measures taken by the occupying authorities to change the character of the areas.

The resolution also asked all countries to withhold military or other aid to Israel and requested the Security Council to draft a timetable for carrying out all U.N. resolutions on the Middle East and Palestine.

Court upholds election law

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court ruled yesterday that voting in primary elections can legally be confined to members of political parties.

The justices simply affirmed, in a brief order, the judgment of a special three-judge federal court in Hartford which upheld a Connecticut state law to this effect.

Two registered voters in Winchester, Conn. — Nathra Nader and Albert C. Snyder Jr. — sued on the ground that the state had unconstitutionally compelled them to choose between their right to vote and their freedom of association.

The lower court said Connecticut's law is appropriate to preserve "the integrity of the electoral process."

The state has an interest, the panel said, in assuring "that primary election results reflect the will of party members, undistorted by the votes of those unconcerned with, if not actually hostile to, the principles, philosophies and goals of the party."

The opinion said the nominating process may legitimately be conditioned on "some showing of loyalty" to a party.

It noted that Connecticut provides petition procedures for placing independent candidates on the ballot and that party registration, enabling a person to vote in the primary, is easy.

Trial date set for December 10th

To: The Community
From: Earl Brown
Subject: December 10th — What it means to the Brown-Gether's Case

"Mr. Judge Tamburello will hold a hearing in the above entitled case (RE: Commonwealth vs. Robert Earl Brown) in the Hampshire Superior Court on Friday, December 10th, 1976 at 2:30 p.m. on the following matters only: motion to admit to bail (post-bail) and a motion for transcript (first Superior Trial transcript's where Craemen and Earl were tried together)." The December 10th date, has a number of implications toward the Brown-Gether's case. First, the date comes eight months after the last attempt for bail. Secondly, the precedent of racism in the Brown-Gether's case, was reinforced by the decision on Craemen appearance within the past five months. Finally, the trial date comes at a time when finals are appearing, and the possibility of a parole review.

On April 9th, 1976 a trial date was scheduled before Judge Tisdale who had been assigned to the Brown's case, because Judge Tamburello had retired on February 5, 1976. The April date was used for two purposes. The first dealt with Judge Tisdale's attitude toward the bail motion. Because on November 8, 1974, Judge Tisdale had reviewed and accepted a motion to obtain list of witnesses who testified before the Grand Jury, motion for inspection of Grand Jury minutes, motion to examine evidence in possession of Commonwealth, and Defendant's motion for Disclosure of Identification procedure. Judge Tisdale on February 5, 1975 decided to reserve for the trial judge (who later became Judge Raymond Cross), a motion to Suppress Evidence, and Defendant's motion to Suppress Identification. Defendant's motion for copies of witnesses statements was waived to a further date. Judge Tisdale allowed the defendant (Brown) to take a court appointed polygraph test on February 25, 1975. In the April 9th, hearing before Judge Tisdale brought out the facts on this decision of a polygraph. Thus, the result of the polygraph test which was deceptive, only reinforced Tisdale's determination to deny the motion for bail. Secondly, the bail motion was denied because of the Work Release program that was scheduled to begin on April 16th. Two days prior to the 16th, Brown was informed by the administration at the jail (Sheriff, Deputy Master, and the Educational Officer) that a schedule of my activities was needed. The schedule proved to be of little significance, because it was discovered that a meeting between the Educational Officer (Frank Godek), members from the Defense Committee, Jackie Ramos (from the Dean of Students office), and others would determine the program for Earl Brown without his attendance. The meeting only proved to be a small stepping stone, because the Boston Correctional Office had to approve the program. This was not approved until May 10th, 1976 by Commissioner Frank Hall. But it was not until June 1, and a furlough that Robert Earl Brown was allowed to resume his Educational program.

The second major problem resulted from a decision made on September 3rd by Judge Hayer to deny Craemen Gether's a new trial. The decision is important because of three reasons. The denial of the new trial has tremendous impact on both individuals. It prolonged the perpetuation of racism that was always evident, and enforces the idea of making Craemen and Earl do the illegal sentence. Secondly, Judge Hayer has not delivered an opinion on the bail, and first trial transcripts. This allows the Judge to keep Craemen's case from advancing to the Higher Courts. Thirdly, with the denial of Craemen's new trial, and Earl's bail motion, Judge Tamburello has had time to re-evaluate the situation. At this time, no one can preclude what this will mean. But whether his decision is made in the courtroom or independent, the decision will have an impact on the whole case.

The third major problem has to deal with the enthusiasm of the case in comparison to last years attitude. The situation has come about because of the systematic exclusion process, graduation, and the coming of new individuals. The changes that have taken place within the past year have reduced the steam. The fact that Earl Brown has been allowed to continue his studies, has reduced the pressures on the court. The psychology of having one of the individual's among the student population would reduce the noise that hassle the D.A., jail, and the correctional service office. Secondly, Brown was qualified for the October parole board. But because of the bureaucracy arrangement, Earl Brown cannot see the board until his package (which includes a letter from him for a one-third consideration, a letter from the Northampton jail, and supportive letters from community people) go to the Walpole board (because of his Walpole sentence (3-5 years).) The package is reviewed by Rich Ready, and then forwarded on to the parole board. As of 4:30 p.m. on Monday, December 6, 1976, there has not been a confirmation from any source on the status of Brown's parole consideration. Regardless, of the present situation, the board can be labeled as the fourth jury of the criminal process (the first being the trial jury, the second being Correctional service in Boston, followed by the jury of administrator in the institutions). The one-third consideration has to be placed as a question mark? Because of the systematic B.S. an individual has to go through for freedom, and the fact that an appearance will not guarantee anything. Finally, we have to look at the time of this case. We have both spent over a year in jail. It has been eight months since my last trial. Craemen situation is more confused than ever before (to the general population). The one important thing, is that we are nearing finals. And, how many people can spend all day to be entertained by the court. The strategy is very simple, to have the bail and first transcript trial before a huge crowd would be Judge Tamburello delight. Last time he made a decision to satisfy the crowd (on October 29, and February 5). This time he can delay his decision until the holidays. He can ask for a retrial motion to be heard, during the period when students would be home. One has to wonder about the systematic chess games that have been played by the court's, the jail, and maybe other institutions. In this respect to have a retrial motion during the

Soweto power is wielded by single student group

An elusive student group has emerged as the single most powerful group in the black township of Soweto except for the police, who are busy jailing most of the student activists they find. The group known as the Soweto Studens Representative Council has become almost a shadow government in the sprawling township outside Johannesburg.

Recently, after months of close involvement in the uprising against aparthied in which hundreds of Soweto residents have been killed since June, the student group declared a period of mourning for the rest of the year. In a community of more than a million people, it was far from clear that an edict issued by a group of students, many of whom were in their teens, the oldest about 25, would have much impact. However, the results have been an impressive demonstration of the power the students wield. Residents of the township have shown a remarkable respect for the young people's decisions.

What is now student power was forged in the chaos that followed the first confrontation between protesters and police on June 16, when the original black-white issue was the use of the Afrikaans language in Soweto schools. The Soweto Students Representative Council has surpassed a number of competing groups and has become the center of resistance to apartheid in the township.

At earlier stages of the five months of upheaval, the Government concentrated on rounding up adherents of longer-established black groups, apparently in the belief that these were the heart of the trouble. Now, with hundreds already in jail, the focus switched to the students.

For the last two weeks, security police have been combing the black townships in the Johannesburg area, seizing scores of students from homes and classrooms and from the streets. Hundreds of young people have gone into hiding and at least 600 have fled across the borders into neighboring Botswana and Swaziland. The new police chief in Soweto, Brig. Jan Visser, insists that the roundup is aimed at criminals and is not politically motivated. Helen Suzman, an opposition Member of Parliament, says that information reaching her indicates that the roundup is indiscriminate. Mrs. Suzman's version is that the police have been going from house to house in Soweto with school registers, arresting students who boycotted exams. "Apparently, the police seem to think failure to write exams identifies school children with student militants," the legislator said.

Justice Minister Hames T. Kruger, who met with Mrs. Suzman earlier this week, issued an angry denial of her charges. "This time she's gone too far," he said, implying that the legislator, long a standard bearer for the anti-apartheid cause, could find herself in trouble if she persisted in her allegations against the police. At the same time, Mr. Kruger promised, immunity from prosecution for illegal border-crossing to any student who chooses to return to Soweto within a week ... Since most of those arrested in recent weeks appear to be under special detention laws, which do not require prosecution, the offer may be persuasive.

Meanwhile the police have said they are anxious to talk to the new leader of the student council, 18-year-old Khotso Seatloho, whose first name translates roughly as "peace." He succeeded the first president of the group, Tsietsi Mashinini, aged 19, whose Christian name means "trouble." Mr. Mashinini fled to Botswana and from there to England, at the height of the disturbances. Mr. Seatloho, like many adherents, is keeping out of sight. Brigadier Visser has urged him to join in discussions aimed at returning life in the township to normal. The student leader has told the police commander through messages in the press that there can be no talks until all the detained students are released. Mr. Seatloho has insisted in interviews that he is committed to nonviolent change, citing the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. as his model.

holidays, would be comparable to the trap in the July trial of Craemen, and the October 16-22, 1975 conviction trial.

In summation, December 10th, 1976 will be an important step in the Brown-Gether's case. It will mean whether a man in a system that perpetuates rich against poor, can receive justice. It will determine whether systematic allusion of reforms are still greater than freedom. Because we have to understand that a Patty Hearst can buy freedom while Gary Tyler, Assata Shakur, Craemen Gethers, and thousands of other political prisoners cannot get the same deal. We understand that although witnesses, jurors, and the court process can lie and meet its quota system that this structure is aimed at the niggers (Black, Indian, Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, Asians, or Whites). Thus, criminals like a Richard Nixon or a Patty Hearst can celebrate December 10th at home, while the state of Mississippi is celebrating its 159th year of being in the union. And all of this reminds us of the attitudes that were apparent with the above individuals and the problems blacks had with the state of Mississippi, and are very real in Massachusetts today.

Utilities given guidelines

BOSTON [AP] — New rules making it harder for utilities to shut off service to late-paying customers were announced yesterday by the state Department of Pubiic Utilities.

The regulations seek to protect the elderly and seriously ill tenants from what DPU Chairman Harold J. Kechane termed "arbitrary interruption of services."

Keohane said the rules, which amend a set adopted by the DPU in 1973, apply to gas, electric and water companies.

A new provision prohibits termination of service to persons 65 and older if it would result in "undue hardship." Under the rules, the company first must notify social service agencies and seek to prove it has tried various bill collection methods.

Before termination, the company must get specific approval from the DPU.

Termination of services to seriously ill customers will be prohibited under virtually any circumstances.

Keohane said the rules also protect tenants whose rent payments include utility charges actually paid by a landlord.

When landlords fail to pay their utility bills, service in an entire apartment building is shut off, and the new regulations seek to prevent such terminations.

The regulations also seek to reduce estimated billing — limiting estimates to six bimonthly bills per year.

New prisons for Mass?

BOSTON (UPI) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday he hopes to form a "united front" with legislative leaders in presenting the legislature with plans in January for up to a half dozen new medium security prisons.

Meanwhile, Human Services Secretary Jerald L. Stevens, head of an administration task force exploring possible sites for the new facilties, said the group is nearly finished "winnowing" an original list of 28 locations, many of them already owned by the state.

Stevens said his group would narrow the site list by mid-December to the three or four places needed to increase the number of beds in medium security facilities by 800.

Other administration sources said they believed the list had been narrowed to about five or six choices, including the Jesuit Shadowbrook Seminary in Lenox, Grafton State Hospital, Westover Air Force Base, and Bridgewater State Prison.

PUTNAM, Conn. [AP] — Public school pupils return to classes Tuesday under a judge's order, a week after the Board of Education closed schools because the voters refused to approve a budget.

Hartford Common Pleas Court Judge Thomas J. O'Donnell ruled Monday town officials should spend enough money to reopen the schools. Schools had been closed since last Wednesday, when the town's legal authority to spend money expired.

Ellison conviction 'under advisement'

BOSTON [UPI] — A plea for a stay of execution for Paul Ellison, a former Boston School Committeeman convicted of larceny, was taken under advisement yesterday by a Massachusetts Appeals Court justice.

Ellison was sentenced to two years in prison last Wednesday by Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin. Ellison has continued to deny any guilt in the case, saying he paid the employees in cash after depositing the checks in his account.

"I've asked for no favors," said Ellison as he left the courtroom.

Henry, a former Peace Corps volunteer from Naugatuck, Conn., said he was given an unsigned letter in October which included a reference that "the subject of venereal disease was offensive and not within the scope of the course he was engaged to teach."

Japanese leader stays; scandal hurt parts's bid

TOKYO [UPI] — Japan's governing Liberal Democratic party suffered its worst election setback since its inception Sunday but eight independents united today to assure it will stay in power at least for the time being.

Prime Minister Takeo Miki blamed the poor showing on the $12 million Lockheed payoff scandal.

For the first time, the conservative Liberal Democrats failed to win a majority in the 511-seat lower house of Parliament, winning only 249 seats, seven short of a majority, final returns showed.

However, eight of the 21 independent candidates elected yesterday said they would support or join the LDP, thus giving Miki's shakey party a bare majority in the House to continue governing the nation at least for the time being.

Mike told a news conference the outcome was much worse than he had anticipated but said it did not mean the people had abandoned the Liberal Democratic party.

Trailing the LDP were the Socialist party which won 123 seats, the Komeito clean government Party 55, the Democratic Socialist party 29, the New Liberal Club 17 and the Communist party 17. Twenty-one independents, most of them conservatives, also won.

The Communist party lost 21 of the 38 seats it won in the previous election in 1972.

Tokyo: Prime Minister Takeo Miki answers questions as a press conference after a vote count of the general election. While Miki himself easily won re-election to Parliament, his pro-American Liberal Democratic Party was denied a majority.

Slayings stall peace talks

GENEVA, Switzerland [UPI] — Blacks and whites at the Rhodesia peace talks yesterday accused each other of responsibility for the ambush slaying of three Roman Catholic missionaries in Rhodesia.

Open hostility erupted between the two sides as Ivor Richard, the British conference chairman, failed in attempts to find common ground in discussions on the formation of an interim government for the period before black rule.

Richard, who flew to London Monday evening for consultations on the impasse, met privately with nationalist delegation leaders and convened a plenary session. But the attack against the three German missionaries dominated the day.

The white delegation said black terrorists were responsible, while the "Patriotic Front" of Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo said the killers were government agents disguised as guerrillas.

"The bishop was killed by agents of the regime disguised as guerrillas," said Nkomo, who added that he was married by Bishop Adolf Gregor Schmitt, one of the victims, in 1949.

Strikers jam Paris

PARIS [UPI] — Power cuts blacked out sections of Paris yesterday and the city subway stopped for an hour in rotating strikes by leftist labor unions protesting the government's crackdown on a newspaper dispute.

Twenty thousand demonstrators marched through the heart of the city demanding the resignation of Interior Minister Michel Poniatowski, who ordered the police raid that ended a 21-month printers strike at the newspaper Parisien Libere.

Ironically, Parisien Libere was the only daily on newsstands. The paper has been printed outside Paris on nonunion presses since a dispute over workers' layoffs caused by automation began in March 1975.

BOYCOTT COURSE EVALUATIONS

EACH SEMESTER STUDENTS FILL OUT COURSE EVALUATION FORMS, AND EACH SEMESTER THEY ARE CLASSIFIED "CONFIDENTIAL." WE, THE EVALUATORS, HAVE NO MEANS OF DETERMINING THE QUALITY OF OUR COURSES BEFORE WE'RE IN THEM.

When the University created the course evaluation program, it was designed to "provide feedback for instructors," ". . . provide information to departments and administrators," and " provide public information to students" (former Provost Robert Gluckstern).

WHY ISN'T THIS INFORMATION MADE PUBLIC?

The administration claims that it might be illegal to reveal the data. But practice on other campuses (including UMass/Worcester) indicates otherwise. And a legal opinion from an attorney in the Student Legal Services Office suggests that the University may be violating the open information law by witholding the results of course evaluations.

WHY ISN'T THIS INFORMATION MADE PUBLIC?

A survey of a random sample of UMass students conducted by the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) indicated that 81% of the undergraduate population feels the forms should be made public, and 95% support a published course evaluation booklet.

WHY ISN'T THIS INFORMATION MADE PUBLIC?

The Student Senate voted unanimously on November 17, 1976 to urge students to boycott the University's evaluation program, and plans are under way for students to run an independent program next semester, the results of which will be published with the Course Description Guide.

Something real

It was the bus to Boston. Each head nodded its own way and conversations detached themselves from the speakers and floated to the seats behind them.

"Things in America must be great, when we are all trying to buy the softest bathroom tissue on earth."

"Honey, Dad is not going to meet us. We won't see him for a while."

The voices are soft. The bus hums. Boston breaks down to separate buildings. We stop. The voices stop.

A dark haired girl in a fur coat steps down from the bus. She makes a phone call and walks out of the station toward Boston Common. She looks up, expecting to see the trees wrapped in the grey sunset and the glittering of white and blue lights that mean Christmas in Boston, but her expectations are met with dirty snow and dark trees. She sighs. The only time that Boston seemed beautiful is gone.

She thinks. There was a plea a few weeks ago. The city was asking for the merchants to contribute. There was no money this year for Christmas. There was no time to smile. The girl sighs.

A quarter and she's under Boylston. On and off and she's on the way to Harvard. Her face reflects the blankness, the tiredness of Boston now. Christmas is business and everyone carries the package in the printed bags. They all sigh. They miss the simple beauty of the lights. Boston sighs. The subway rolls and sighs along its tracks. It rolls and rocks and has no need for lights. It has no children, no faces to light with the simple glow. It knows about the tiredness, though, it sighs with Boston's need for financial aid. It sighs without knowing it.

Harvard — last stop. The conductor in the last car calls out.

"Harvard. Last stop ...... Have a nice weekend .... (The people silent on the black seats look at each other, it is not what they expected to hear.) And if you're looking for something to buy for John, long underwear." The conductor laughs and opens the doors. Everyone turns and smiles.

There are no nervous smiles. They are the real smiles that would have come from the lights, if the money had been there to decorate the Common.

Boston knows that it's in trouble. It knows there will be no lights simply because it is Christmas. And instead of being as detached as the voices on the bus, the people who have to face the other faces in Boston are trying hard to smile. Real smiles. Boston deserves better. Boston deserves a real Christmas. Maybe the Globe Santa will see the starving child, Boston, and give it Christmas. Maybe Boston's businessmen will give in and give Boston something to smile about. Something real.

The rape experience

By ELIZABETH KENT

Rape.

Not many people ever consider that they might be victims of rape. I know that I never did.

The emotional effect of rape is a total non-functioning of the mind, at least that is how it was with me. I don't think that any woman ever thought of how she would react to such an act; an act of violence against her mind as well as her body.

Men are not immune to rape either. Rape is being forced into allowing something to happen which you find repulsive, and you are the victim. You are raped when you are forced to compromise yourself, compromise your mind.

For women, however, the act is physical as it never can be for a man. I was at one point in time forced to participate in what I now almost look upon as a play, in which I was a member of the cast. At the time, I was a puppet used for others' personal satisfaction. I had no control and I think that it was the lack of control over my body and over the circumstances with which I was faced that frightened me the most. I felt physical fear.

The details of what happened to me are not very important now; it happened a long time ago. Yet I still feel the hurt and humiliation as if it occurred yesterday. This is why I am writing this commentary, so that others may know second hand the feelings associated with rape, and hopefully, so that others, both men and women, will never actually experience the degradation.

In regards to averting a physical raping, women should not walk alone. This is not to say that you should constantly fear other people, yet precautions are an indication that you value yourself as a human being. Few persons will ignore self-esteem in order to compromise another person's body or mind. Be careful.

If you do get raped, call the informary and follow the instructions given to you. Call a close friend to go with you when you go to the health service, to be with you when you speak to the police. Do not be afraid to consult with a police person. They are just as angry as you are that a rape occurred and that you are the victim.

Yet everyone is vulnerable to rape. At one time or another each and every one of us has been compromised. Do not be afraid of yourself or your feelings. Never apologize for your thoughts until you know that they are wrong. Most importantly, do not let other people manipulate your actions or your thoughts. Control your own fate.

Fire hazard

To the Editor:

On Wednesday night the library staff, campus police, and fire department displayed their inability to effectively evacuate a highrise building under the threat of a fire. The confusion and slowness of evacuation could have cost many lives had there been a serious fire. The efficiency and seriousness of evacuation should be a top priority where we have so many highrise buildings on campus. People had better get their shit together before someone gets hurt.

In defense of Wilding

To the Editor:

I am sitting down to write a defense of Mark Wilding and the criticism he has recently received from several readers. Maybe not so much a defense of Mr. Wilding [as his critics have chosen to refer to him as], but of the style of writing this colorful columnist chooses to use. Satire, whether cynical or not, is editorial comment in its purest form. Even when the subject does not appear outwardly to be a fair target for attack, valuable conclusions can be drawn. Let me give an example...

Mr. Wilding wrote an article about Harvard, directly and satirically abusing those good ol' boys. I do not excuse Mr. Wilding's references to the two Harvard football players who were knifed in the Combat Zone, one of whom is in very serious condition, but I do believe Mr. Wilding's plea that he did not realize the seriousness of the wounds at the time he wrote his column. But the fact remains, Mr. Wilding had something to say about the elitist education and approach offered at Harvard. Even if his humor came across as cynical, doesn't that suggest something? Is that not a prevalent thought at a large public institution such as UMass? Even if a small few take Mark's stand, does not Harvard's image deserve more scrutiny?

The two letters written in Harvard's defense, except for their criticism of the references to the knifings, appeared to be those of injured pride, and rightly so. It is par for the course for the object of any satire to react. What I am suggesting is that Mr. Wilding's cynical columns may be hinting at a deeper problem in our society that exists.

Unfair eviction

To the Editor:

Amherst has a history of tenant neglect. We condone the oligopolistic control of housing so that out of state landlords can freely exploit tenants. We permit inspection services to criminally neglect the health and safety of the tenant by ignoring violations in the state and local sanitary codes. We overlook fire prone construction permitting a disaster that promises Crown Point tenants a homeless winter while the landlord pockets insurance extras. We give pardon to bankrupt landlords who steal tenants security deposits and then raise the rents. The list goes on ad nauseum.

But tolerance, even in Amherst has its threshold. The victims of landlord liberty came to recognize that their rights to live decently and safely were not tolerated. Tenants began to organize.

In early September I attended an organizational meeting for the Puffton IV tenants union. Subsidized rentors and A.F.D.C. mothers were faced with a rent hike. One woman, Jean Cahill, offered conditional help because she was going to have to move. She was being evicted. When questioned why, she admitted that the true reason for her eviction had never been revealed. She had never received a notice to quit and when the summons to court arrived, she misread the date and missed the court hearing. The court granted the landlord the petition to evict in her absence.

A few days later her legal services attorney requested that the court remove the judgement and reschedule another hearing. He was refused. The courts denial was unexplained. Yet Jean had a legitimate argument to present. The eviction was not due to housing alleged dogs but because Steven Puffer did not like Jean Cahill. Jean was a tenants rights advocate in Puffton Village long before the A.T.A. and the resulting tenants movement. Landlords desire "legally quiet tenants." If they are not submissive, the landlord can "legally" and "quietly" remove them.

On December 1, Jean was instructed to vacate. The courts and its personnel were ordered to force a welfare mother and her children out of their home. The court system that protects property rights had consistently denied the minimal rights for the powerless — the right to be heard. We were outraged. Because the proper forum for protest was denied, we expressed ourselves publically. Our intolerance for the court's legal decision was perceived as a criminal act and we were arrested. Our actions, however, did not reflect disrespect for the law but rather the unreasonableness of the legal substance of the court's decision. For no reasonable rationale had been given for this eviction.

The charges of disorderly conduct, unlawful assembly and failure to disperse for the seventeen arrested at Puffton Village are incorrect. We perceive the event to be one of protecting justice for powerless tenants who are victims of the reign of landlords in the community. As long as the landlord holds the law which protects his freedom, the tenants must protect themselves.

The double standard

By THOMAS MAJOR

On this day after the swinish acts of members of Kappa Sigma have been brought out in all their oafishness for all the world to see, it is necessary to bring the Kappa Sigma episode into some perspective and relate it to the other fraternities on campus and as they relate to the coverage by the Collegian.

That such incidents as the Kappa Sigma fiasco badly tarnishes the reputation of all fraternities is unquestionable. Since fraternity members make up a very small percentage of the total student population (and because all fraternity names sound alike because nobody can tell one Greek letter from another), it is very easy for the student body as a whole to lump all fraternities into the same bag. And such front pages as yesterday's is a stain that spreads across all fraternities.

But it is a stain that deserves to be reported. There is no reason why the Collegian should not print newsworthy stories, pro or con, about fraternities just because frats in the past have gotten poor press. If bad stories about fraternities seem to make bigger headlines it is partially because of that ancient, universal fact that bad news is more sensational news than good news.

But the whole sleazy episode was damaging enough to fraternities, headlines or no headlines. That the Collegian chose to give front page coverage of the incident makes it far more damaging but it would still be bad for frats if the incident had been stuck back in-between ads for Miller beer and "I am Curious Blue." The truth is bad enough; the Collegian is blameless if it reports the truth.

But there is another dimension to telling the truth. There is a distinct difference of emphasis in a story that is planted on the fifteenth page and a story that makes the front page. In this case, the Collegian wandered into overkill of the entire sordid episode. It is editorializing of the most subtle and insidious variety to put a story so that it dominates the front page and add to the story a photograph so poor in quality and so lacking in resolution that it gives the reader an impression of Kappa Sigma that could give Alfred Hitchcock the chills.

An example: While the escapades of Kappa Sigma received the entire front page, the danger of high-rise fires in Southwest, an issue infinitely more important than the gaucheries of Kappa Sigma, gets nothing. Yes, the incident should have been reported, but did it deserve the front page, the entire front page, when there are other stories that are more relevant to the university population?

One could preach for days on end how and why this is wrong, but the existence of the double standard is a truth that fraternities live with. It puts them in an impossible situation, placing them in a position where they receive the bad side of a hypocritical double standard that makes bottle throwing by a fraternity member more newsworthy and sensational than the throwing of that same bottle by a resident of a Southwest tower.

Getting sidetracked

By JIM SCHPEISER

I've been majoring in sidetracking ever since elementary school, where I had below averages in handwriting. Right now I'm a student here, and after five years of college, I haven't declared a major because they're all too narrow, and once I've decided on an individual program, I change my mind.

I came to school to work in animation. I have been very animated in failing to even shoot an inch of film; besides, I've been sidetracked into planning an arts festival in order to swindle film money; and have even joined the Senate in order to plan the arts festival, and have even been nominated to the Senate nominating subcommittee which is one of the most powerful committees in the student governing sandbox.

All men are children, according to a poster in Southwest. Why bother to cope, when the senate quickly ratifies an electric typewriter for $390, but spends fifteen minutes haranguing a representative from Outfront?

Is the Nowhere man really Ed Sullivan, and if so, did Dean Field watch Yellow Submarine once too often? Send him a jetpowered glove for Christmas, so he can crush all those craftspeople who are taking possible business away from those renowned bastions of scholarship, the Blue Wall, the Faculty Club, the Hatch, the TOC, and the pinball Gallery. At San Francisco State, the faculty club was shut down because state law doesn't allow liquor to be served within a mile of a university, since the drinking age is 21. LSD could become a big hit on campus once again.

My conclusion is that getting sidetracked because one has too much to say is far superior to pressing the Carter, Kissinger, Campus Center fee and pornography button and coming out with the usual shpiel about morality and leadership, because who are all those people speaking for but themselves? This newspaper needs a little more introspection — come to the festival next week and see yourselves.

Off the record

BULLETIN — A self-described "tongue-tied, barstool, hack journalist" has reported himself missing from his Belchertown residence.

Credible sources say that a hot water pipe burst in his bedroom, freezing up other ducts, and leaving the house heatless.

Reports are still unconfirmed that the lad had overexposed himself to Sunday night's full moon. He was last seen with a cup of Hatch coffee, scribbling on the back of a dog-eared notebook. The notebook has been recovered. The following is a verbatim text of the scribblings:

Shades of Pavlov: Among the course offerings for the Spring semester is the Military Science Department's (that's ROTC, folks) "Leadership Laboratory." Class size is limited, however, due to a shortage of extra-large Skinner boxes.

Hot Tip on the Tower of Babel: A special blue ribbon study commission from the Environmental Design Department will soon release its findings on how to solve the falling brick problem at the world's tallest library. Sources say that the commission will recommend that the Physical Plant sheath our phallic book fortress in a giant prophylactic.

Reggae Mortus: Bob "I shot the sheriff (but I did not shoot the deputy)" Marley was shot Saturday in his Kingston, Jamaica home. UPI's report had it that the shooting was "politically motivated." We suspect the deputy.

Astral Projections: A huge chunk of rock — the asteroid Adonis — is expected to make a very close approach to earth in early February, astronomers tell us. But since the hot rock may be as far away as 40 million miles, it will not be observable (remember Kahoutek?) except with the aid of either a sophisticated telescope or the horn rimmed bifocals UMass President Robert Wood wore when he recently made his annual University budget request.

Cyrus Says or I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now: "I believe that we are in a just war and are seeking to achieve an honorable peace. I cannot believe there is any real doubt as to which side has taken the initiative for peace, and which has cast its lot with war." — Cyrus Vance, Jimmy Carter's newly appointed Secretary of State, in a 1967 response to mounting protest against the Vietnam War. He was then Deputy Defense Secretary.

Loquacious Licks and Newsroom Noodles: Why is it that the only campus student group that has its own WATS line is the Revolutionary Student Brigade? ... Melanie Johnson, the Collegian's new women's coordinator, has become a bit debilitated lately with some of the mail she receives each day. Said mail, arriving here in large manilla envelopes and addressed to "The Women's Page Editor," contains — you guessed it — cooking recipes — If anyone out there knews where an extraterrestrial guru can find work, former Collegian columnist Jim Paulin, now a freelance wag and bard of sorts, needs a job ... Our Typo of the Month kudos goes to the Greenfield Recorder. A feature story about the UMass porno issue identified the Collegian's most prodigious feminist columnist as "Scarlette Allen."

You Don't Want to Miss It Department: A blockbuster of a concert takes place Friday and Saturday nights at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall when superstars, Dizzie Gillespie on trumpet, pianist Mary Lou Williams, Jo Jones on drums, Ron Carter, bass, and James Moody, saxophone, join their incomparable talents for an evening of jazz ... The University Ensemble Theater will present Brendan Behan's "The Hostage" at the Frank Prentice Rand Theater on Dec. 9 through 14 at 8 p.m. The play promises to be an exciting theatrical adventure with Behan's sassy humor focusing around Anglo-Irish political spats, spiced by the drinking, dancing and dreaming of the nostalgic Irish Revolutionaries ... And if you need a diversion tonight from that 20 page paper on "Marxist Theories of Dialectical Materialism Applied to Modern Day Third World Nations," tune in to the Jimmy Breslin narrated documentary — "An American Newsreel of Crime," (10 p.m., Ch. 3).

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of "The Colonel" (my landlord), please let me know. Otherwise, I'll remain subterranean.

Tribal memberships grow as land suits near finish

OLD TOWN, Maine [AP] — Thousands of Indians across the nation are clamoring to join New England tribes who have begun separate legal fights to regain lost tribal land.

Indian leaders say the motivation of many outsiders appears to be greed or a rediscovered pride in their ancestral heritage.

The New England tribes bringing suit are the Passamaquoddy and Penobscots of northern Maine and the Wampanoags of Mashpee, Mass., and Martha's Vinyard, Mass. All are involved in land claims which if successful might bring land and cash settlements worth billions of dollars.

Nicholas Sapiel, tribal governor of the Penobscots said, "We're being swamped with applicants. They're coming out of the woodwork and are really fighting to get in."

"I'm getting the feeling," he said, "that everyone in America suddenly remembered that their grandfather or grandmother was a pure-blooded Penobscot."

The Indians are claiming that millions of acres in the two states were improperly taken from them. Under the Indian Non-Intercourse Act of 1790, land was not supposed to be taken from Indians without congressional approval.

The effect of the suits even is felt in Washington.

Harry A. Rainbolt of the Bureau of Indian Affairs says, "BIA is getting deluged with letters from all over the country and they all ask how they can get on tribal rolls."

"Even the State Department has received some inquiries from overseas," he added.

Rainbolt says he is not surprised at the response. "Just publicize a good-size land claim or talk about the money almost being in hand and there's a resurrection of those who might not have previously been members of a tribe," he said.

Most tribal leaders don't seem upset that potential wealth is the primary attraction for many new members.

Russell Peters, president of Mashpee's Wampanoag tribal council said, "I admit that quite a few applicants are looking at the possibility of getting a windfall, but it really doesn't matter."

"Whatever their motivation," Peters added, "We're glad to see people identify themselves as Indians and stand up and be counted.

"It wasn't always popular or easy to be an Indian. Many of our people, those who could do it, hid behind someone else's race. All over this country Indians who looked white enough, said they were white and disavowed their Indian blood," he said.

Peters said the publicity is creating a new awareness and breaking down longtime stigmas of being an Indian.

Gov. Sapiel said the change is similar in Maine. Indians who used to look away as he passed, are now seeking him out. Sapiel said, "Now that they know that land and money are on the horizon they want to turn back into the ol' Indian again."

Although tribal leaders are elated at the resurgence of pride, they caution that claims are limited only to members of their own tribes.

Hazel Oakley, who heads the membership screening board for the Wampanoags says her tribe is not looking for "comelatelys."

Gov. Sapiel said the Penobscots are throwing out most of the inquiries they're getting. "Most are phony claims. They're from members of other tribes who want to get in on our action, ride our gravy train and grab what they can," he said.

"There's no way we're going to let them in. We've got our claim and our Indians, and we don't need outsiders sharing our goodies."

The Penobscots are using a fulltime genealogist to trace the family origins of all tribesmen.

The Wampanoags are using a tribal census, which dates back to the 1700's, as its main method of determination.

The Passamaquoddies say the burden of proving an Indian lineage falls upon the applicant.

"Remember," Rainbolt said, "neither the BIA nor the federal government get involved in the determination of who is and who isn't an Indian. The tribes tell us who their members are and the criterion differs from tribe to tribe.

"The BIA has enough problems without getting involved in telling Indians how to judge other Indians," he said.

Meeting for child abuse prevention

A network of advisory services to aid abused children is being formed in the New England states. As part of its continuing effort to provide service to community groups, University Conference Services is hosting a planning meeting for child abuse prevention planning.

The Judge Baker Guidance Center is seeking to overcome the past problems of the lack of unified early detection and intervention programs for abused children. The two-year-old New England Resource Center for Protective Services will meet at UMass today and tomorrow. They will discuss resources materials, evaluation, future planning and data management. The formation of the Springfield center and network services will be among the major topics during the two-day meeting.

School of Ed needs people for newsletter

The School of Education Information Service has been recently formed as a means of keeping students informed on events and issues that affect both graduate and undergraduate students.

Anyone interested in helping to print a newsletter for the School of Ed is invited to a meeting tomorrow at 3 p.m. in School of Ed room 105. Any articles will be accepted for printing then also.

Sailing club plans intersession trips

The sailing club is planning trips to Florida over intersession. Chartering areas mentioned thus far have been Tampa Bay or the keys, but input is welcome. Trips will be one or two weeks as individual interests and finances permit. Transportation to Florida and back will be by car unless you've other preferences.

The cost, including chartering, food, and transportation rountrip will be approx. $150, for one week and $250, for two weeks. Boats will be 30-36 ft. sloops, sleeping 5-9 persons. Escape the polar conditions for warmer territory. Everyone is welcome and encouraged to share in this experience.

For further info, contact Nancy Morrison at 549-4758 or Vicki Evans at 545-2419. Watch for the next meeting.

Legal and financial help seminars

Legal and Financial Problems of Arts Organizations, the fourth in a year-long series of seminars for New England arts groups, will be presented by the Arts Extension Services (AES) of UMass Saturday, at the Lord Jeffrey Inn in Amherst.

The seminar offers the opportunity for professional arts administrators and students to learn about the legal and financial issues that may affect their organizations.

Assisting in the presentation will be two local attorneys. Thomas Lesser of Northampton will cover legal concerns of not-for-profit arts organizations, and Leonard S. MIchelman and Beaumier in Springfield will speak on copyrights and other artists' rights.

An accountant from a major accounting firm will discuss budgetary concerns, financial planning and reporting, taxes and endowments. The afternoon will be devoted to case study work sessions.

The cost for the day including lunch is $15. Pre-registration is urged as enrollment is limited. Sessions will run from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Full information is available from AES, Box 321, North Amherst, 01059, telephone (413) 545-2013.

The AES is a service that works to help develop the arts in western New England. Its services include consulting, booking for area artists, seminars in arts management issues, a series of publications, and the New England Artist Festival and Showcase.

Senior pix date has been extended

The senior portrait program has been extended through this week. All seniors who are graduating in January or who won't be on campus next semester can still make their appointments by calling 545-2874 or by going to the lobby of the ninth floor of the Campus Center. Sittings will be scheduled through Friday, but appointments must be made in advance. All senior pictures will be included in the 1977 INDEX.

Liberation League to hold Ed. night

The Young Workers Liberation League is sponsoring an open educational tonight at 8:00 in the Commuter Lounge on "Prospects for Fascism or Socialism in America Today."

The presentation will be delivered by Michael Grossman and Heidi Silver.

WFCR to present French singer tonight

"Tout en Francais" (WFCR 88.5 FM) will present Georges Moustaki in a recital of his songs tonight at 6:30.

This Egyptian-born singer who makes his home in France, writes both words and music of his songs and sings them while accompanying himself on the guitar.

The songs will be preceded, as usual, by five minutes of political and cultural news taken directly off the short-wave French radio and presented by Pierre Colleu and Roseline Renaud, French teaching assistants at Amherst College.

"Tout en Francais" is aired over WFCR-FM (88.5) at 6:30 p.m. every Tuesday and Thursday.

Econ council to sponsor seminar

The Undergraduate Economics Council will be holding a seminar Thursday at 8:00 in Campus Center room 917 which will concern itself with several issues which will be of importance to all economics majors sometime during their undergraduate career.

Michael Best, a professor of Economics and the current Undergraduate Economics advisor, will be speaking on the topic of undergraduate curriculum. He will discuss that course work which would best prepare one for either grad school in Economics or a career in that field.

Patty Linton, a graduate student in the economics department, will discuss the process of applying to graduate school. She will speak specifically on the application procedure and the issue of the GRE's and the Advanced Test in Economics — when one should take them and how one should prepare for them. Harvey Friedman, the director of the UMass Labor Relations Center, will talk on career's in that field and grad school opportunities in Labor and Industrial Relations. There will also be representatives from the pre-Law program and the career development center to discuss Law schools and careers in Economics.

Roister Doister's to hold auditions

The UMass Roister Doister Drama Society will be holding auditions for David Rogers' drama, "Flowers for Algernon" today and tomorrow.

Auditions are to be held in room 811-815 of the Campus Center, at 7 p.m. There are roles for approximately eight men, and nine women. There are also three roles for children.

"Flowers for Algernon", which was also the source of the movie, "Charlie", is the story of a man who through an experimental operation has his intelligence increased beyond genius level. The production will be presented Feb. 11, 12, 13, 18 and 19, in Bowker Auditorium. Auditions are open to all within the Five-College area.

Anyone wanting further information concerning auditions should contact Bridget Feeley at 546-8018, or Sheila Mathews at 546-5563.

Public hearings are topic of workshop

Methods of conducting public meetings and hearing will be the subject of a day-long workshop sponsored by the UMass Institute for Governmental Services to be held at Massasoit Community College in Brockton on Thursday.

The workshop, one of the first of series to be held by the UMass institute all over the state, is designed for municipal employes having direct contact with the public such as selectmen, city councillors, or members of commissions or boards.

Topics to be discussed will include creating an environment of informality, how to effectively publicize meetings and hearings, and ways of producing creative graphic materials and visual aids.

A public meeting handbook outlining the basic procedure for holding effective meetings will be presented.

The workshop is free of charge. In charge of registration is Sheila H. Rider, Institute for Governmental Services, Middlesex House, UMass., Amherst, 01003, telephone (413) 545-0003.

Plains' Bill Carter runs for mayoral reelection

PLAINS, Ga. [AP] — Billy Carter, making his second bid to be elected mayor of this booming hamlet, looked at the dampness around him Monday and guessed that the rains in Plains might help his cause.

With his older brother, President-elect Carter, standing beside him outside the office of the family peanut business, 39-year-old Billy Carter said of his race against A.L. Blanton, a local barber and the incumbent mayor:

"It will be real close. If it rains, the beer-drinkers will still vote for me. That will help."

When the younger Carter ran against Blanton two years ago, the barber prevailed by either six votes or four votes. The margin depends on whether Blanton or Carter is recounting the event.

Plains has about 300 eligible voters, "give or take a couple of dozen," according to Blanton. They were trickling into city hall, a small prefabricated metal building next to Billy Carter's gas station, throughout the day, to decide who will be mayor for the next two years.

The President-elect voted shortly before 9 a.m. It was raining at the time and an intermittent drizzle followed.

While Billy welcomed the rains, President-elect Carter offered another assessment of the election outlook, telling reporters, "If there is a low turnout, the better Billy will do."

Billy Carter has campaigned on a platform of avoiding drastic changes in his home town, invaded by tourists, real estate operators and entrepreneurs since his brother was elected President.

Walking from the Carter peanut warehouse to city hall, Billy Carter engaged in this spirited exchange with reporters — an exchange punctuated by frequent laughter among his listerners:

Q. Do you have aspirations for higher office?

A. Yes. I'm going to build an office upstairs, City Hall has one floor so I can live a little higher.

Q. Are the Carters looking to build a political empire like the Kennedys?

A. No, we are not.

Q. You don't plan to use this as a stepping stone?

A. I imagine it will be stepping down, if anything.

YOUR BIRTHDAY

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, December 7 — Born today, you are a reasonable and tactful individual intellectually, while emotionally you are capable of the utmost in the way of love and loyalty. Seldom overbalanced in your reaction to anything that goes on around you, you find that you are able to act according to principles of the intellect as well as of the heart. You know full well the impossibility of keeping either head or heart out of a decision while at the same time remaining healthy and happy physically and mentally. Thus, you do not try to live according to any but well-balanced rules and regulations, whether self-imposed or imposed by others.

Indications are that you will form a permanent attachment to another person of similar views as yours relatively early in life. You have little if any desire to "play the field" as far as relationships with members of the opposite sex are concerned. Rather, you are one who enjoys entering ever more deeply into a single relationship so that in the end the mutual communication and interplay is so great that one without the other appears unthinkable. Such a relationship does not, however, necessarily mean "family." That you will remain uncommitted to the idea of parenthood may well be the case.

Somewhat given to short-tempered reactions when others display their stupidity or dullness, their lack of decisiveness, you are not one whom others should think of asking for help in understanding the world around them. You would not make a good teacher, for this reason but, for those with quickness of mind and keenness of analytical spirit, you would make an excellent guide.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — There is nothing more self-deceptive than a zealous response. Dont be carried away by your own desire for another's conversion.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Progress on present projects may well become bogged down by your own effort to move more quickly toward your goals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Smooth things over between another and a personal friend. You may find yourself trying to straddle the fence with some difficulty.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor,

As a UMass alumnus and an avid fan of college basketball, I looked forward with eager anticipation to the Minutemen's debut in the Eastern Intercollegiate Basketball League. This excitement turned quickly to disappointment however, as in the course of one week, UMass struggled to an unimpressive victory over a poor Harvard team, and lost two games to supposedly "weaker" ECBL rivals. Earlier in the fall I journeyed to Amherst on successive weekends in November to watch the football team be annihilated by UNH and Boston College. These failures only emphasize the depths to which the UMass athletic program has sunk under the direction of Frank McInerney.

While UMass has been floundering during McInerney's tenure, Rutgers University, a school very much similar to UMass has been making great strides forward in intercollegiate athletics. It too is a state university located in a heavily populated eastern state, a state which has, I imagine, the same sort of budget constraints as does Massachusetts. Like UMass, Rutgers must compete in recruiting with Penn State, Boston College, and the Ivy League. Five short years ago Rutgers couldn't even hope to successfully compete against the UMass football and basketball teams, led by Julius Erving, Al Skinner, Paul Metallo and Steve Schubert. Rutgers even attempted to lure away Jack Leaman during this period. Yet during the last couple of years Rutgers has so upgraded its athletic programs that it is now nationally ranked in both football and basketball. Conversely, UMass has not had a win with any national impact in either sport since the 1972-1973 academic year. In fact with the exception of the lacrosse, cross-country and gymnastic teams, which are nationally competitive, no other Minutemen teams can even dominate against New England competition. Why can't UMass follow Rutgers lead and upgrade its athletic program so as to be competitive on the national level?

Of course the predominant argument against upgrading the UMass athletic program would be the costs involved. Yet the fact remains that successful athletic programs pay for themselves. Penn State's football team, for example, generates enough capital to be self sufficient, to contribute to the budgets of other sports such as wrestling and gymnastics, and to subsidize the University's intramural program.

A successful athletic program would serve a myriad of other purposes also. It would foster pride among the students themselves, in their University, and create both interest and excitement amongst the alumni. It would give favorable national exposure to UMass, at a time when the University is suffering from an identity crisis even within the state of Massachusetts. Personally, I would much rather have my alma mater known for its winning athletic teams, then for its administrative fiscal corruption, campus drug problems, and student suicides. Too often I've heard Massachusetts residents and UMass students refer to UMass as a second rate educational institution in comparison to the "more prestigious" Boston area schools. This is only natural when the media plays up the University's "Zoo-Mass" image, the School of Education scandal, and other campus problems. The mediocrity of UMass athletic teams only further instills the inferiority complex harbored by many UMass students.

In conclusion, I think it's time the UMass athletic department sit down, reevaluate, and upgrade its athletic goals. Joining the ECBL was a step in the right direction. But it will serve little purpose playing in a more competitive environment, without upgrading the overall quality of the UMass athletic teams so as to make a representative showing. Without such an overhaul, UMass athletes, students, and alumni can look forward to nothing but continued embarrassment on the athletic field.

Respectfully yours,
Russell W. Schott

Patriots secure 'Wild Card' berth, may be headed for Raider tilt

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The "ifs" are over for the New England Patriots. They need only worry about the "whens" and "wheres" now after clinching their first National Football League playoff ever.

After dropping New Orleans, 27-6, Sunday the Patriots secured the American Football Conference "Wild Card" berth and appeared headed for a playoff date with the Raiders in Oakland.

"It looks right now like we're going to play Oakland but we're still hoping to win our division," said linebacker Sam Hunt. "We're rooting for Buffalo to beat Baltimore next week."

A Baltimore loss coupled with a New England victory over winless Tampa Bay next Sunday would give the Patriots the American Football Conference East title. The Patriots, who would have a better inter-conference record than either Cincinnati or Pittsburgh, would host the AFC Central Division champion in the opening round.

"It could happen," said Patriots' quarterback Steve Grogan. "But we are expecting to play Oakland and it's going to be one heck of a contest. They're not going to be like they were when we beat them here 48-17 on Oct. 3.

"They'll be playing on their home field and will have players healthy who didn't play against us. They've come a long way since we beat them, winning eight straight games going into Monday night's contest against Cincinnati since then."

The Patriots also have come a long distance toward their best season in a 17-year existence. After ripping Oakland, the Patriots looked helpless in a loss at Detroit that left them with a 3-2 record.

Since that time, though, they have compiled a 7-1 mark, winning their last five games to tie a club record for consecutive victories.

"The big thing staring us in the face was that we opened the season with those four tough games against Baltimore, Miami, Pittsburgh and Oakland, and a six game stretch in the middle of the schedule against teams in our own division," said coach Chuck Fairbanks. "It was a tremendous challenge but this team has come around faster than I thought it would."

Gymmen meet lowly Lowell

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastics team will be seeking to up its season record over .500 this afternoon, when the Minutemen host the University of Lowell in a 4:00 p.m. meet in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

The Minutemen are coming off a heartbreaking 198.5-198.4 loss to the Cadets of Army last Saturday afternoon. However, UMass head coach Dick Swetman doesn't foresee his gymnasts running into too many problems against Lowell.

"I don't think the meet should be very difficult at all for us," Swetman said. "Lowell doesn't have a very strong team, as a matter of fact you could consider them on the same level of competition as Boston St., "which we easily beat last week."

The Minutemen will be using today's meet against Lowell more or less as a tune-up for this Saturday's big showdown with perennial gymnastics power, Penn State.

"We're really looking forward to the Penn St. meet," Swetman said. "In the Lowell meet today, we'll be concentrating on perfecting some of our weaknesses we had in the Army meet."

Even though it may appear that the first-year UMass coach may be looking ahead to his team's next meet, he is still very concerned that the Minutemen work on their weaknesses, especially on the horizontal bar, an event that UMass was rather weak on against Army.

"Even though today's meet should cause us few problems, as of right now I still intend to use everybody, including the first stringers who can work on polishing a few points in their routines," Swetman said.

For his all-arounders, Swetman will be going with Paul and Steve Marks, Angelo Scuderi and Bob Donohue. Against Army, Paul Marks earned top honors for the Minutemen with a score of 50.0. Scuderi turned in a fine score of 48.30, considering it was his first competitive meet of the season. With Scuderi back in practice, the Minutemen have further strengthened their all-around team.

If you haven't seen the UMass men's gymnastics team in action, today is one of those rare days that you can catch them at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. After today's home meet, the Minutemen don't perform before the home folks again until Feb. 5.

JV hoopsters take on Maine Central

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Don't expect another 94 point margin of victory tonight when the men's sub-varsity basketball team takes on Maine Central Institute at the Cage at 6 p.m.

"They're a good team," said varsity assistant Fan Gaudette. "I saw them beat the BC jv's last week by 5 points. They have Dwan Chandler, who is a good player."

Chandler was a three time all-scholastic guard, twice at Don Bosco Tech and in his senior year at Cathedral High. He is a good outside shooter and has matured greatly as a player, according to Gaudette. Maine Central has no player taller than 6-4, but it is a quick team that likes to run the fast break.

Varsity assistant and sub varsity head coach Ray Ricketts plans on going with the same starting lineup which was so successful against Westover AFB. That lineup will have 6-6 Irv McKnight at center, with 6-4 Andre Fruneaux and 6-2 Ernest Coleman at forwards. Both are strong leapers and good rebounders. Starting at guard will be 6-2 Willie Morgan and 6-0 Bob Berman.

Ricketts was pleased with his squad's shooting performance (66 per cent) in the Westover game, and also was impressed with the rebounding at both ends of the floor.

"I stress these things," said Ricketts, "and I'm big on conditioning. We've got a lot of speed and we like to run if it's working. I plan on using the zone press — they (Maine Central) are supposed to have good ball handlers, well, we'll take it to them until they prove it to me.

"This team is no pushover. If we play well we'll win, though."

After its easy first game win, Ricketts doesn't anticipate any problems motivating his team for tonight's game. "As soon as they get out there and see the fans, they're up," he said. "They're good players and they want to show the people they can play. I have no problems with that."

With no real weaknesses on his squad. Ricketts can go 10 men deep and not hurt the team. Isaiah Bradshaw and Wayne Malcolm, who each had 19 points to lead the team, along with Coleman who had a like number of markers, will be sure to see a lot of action. Other reserves are Tom McDonough, a point guard; Dave Saunders, a reserve center and streak shooting John Degutis.

Men's Swimming

Swimmers host WPI

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Coming off of a tough opening-day loss to UMaine, the defending New England champions, Bei Melamed's UMass men's swim team travels to Worcester to face Worcester Polytechnic Institute tonight at 7:30.

The Minutemen lost to the powerhouse Maine squad on Saturday, 89-24, as they managed to win only two events. The 1,000-yard freestyle, won by Ben Crooker, and the 200-yard breaststroke event, which was won by Dave Boucher, were the only races UMass could take. The bulk of the other UMass scoring was accomplished by Russ Yarworth, who garnered second place in the 50 and 200-yard backstroke events.

"The times that were turned in Saturday were a little better than I expected," Melamed said as he talked about the general performance of the team. He also said that he was pleased with the performances of some of his less experienced swimmers.

According to Melamed, tonight's meet should be extremely close although Worcester lost its first meet to Babson College.

"We've defeated Worcester three years in a row, but it should be closer this year due to the weakness in our roster caused by graduation and quittings," Melamed said.

Also, according to the coach, Worcester has a bigger roster which could allow it to place more rested swimmers in events during the latter part of the meet.

So, tonight's meet could be a good indication of how the Minutemen's season could turn out as they will be swimming against a team that is just about equal to themselves.

Bosox trade for Carbo, Scott

LOST ANGELES [AP] — Veteran sluggers George Scott and Rico Carty returned to their old teams Monday and the Milwaukee Brewers completed two separate major deals at baseball's winter meetings.

The Brewers swapped Scott and outfielder Bernie Carbo in exchange for first baseman Cecil Cooper after earlier sending catcher Darrell Porter and pitcher Jim Colborn to Kansas City for infielder Jamie Quirk, outfielder Jim Wohlford and a player to be named later.

Carty, claimed by Toronto from Cleveland in the expansion draft a month ago, returned to the Indians in a deal that sent catcher Rick Cerone and utilityman John Lowenstein to the Blue Jays.

In two straight cash transactions, Milwaukee claimed veteran catcher Larry Haney on waivers from Oakland and Boston sold infielder Bobby Heise to Kansas City.

Scott, 32, batted .274 with 18 homers and 77 runs batted in for Milwaukee. He spent the first six years of his major league career with Boston before being traded to the Brewers in 1972. In five years with Milwaukee, he set club records in homers, RBI and batting average.

Cooper, who will be 27 next week, batted .282 with 15 homers and 78 RBI for the Red Sox in 1976, his third full season in Boston.

Carbo was traded to Milwaukee by Boston in midseason and batted .236.

Scott was the key as far as the Red Sox were concerned.

"We needed that righty power hitter," said General Manager Dick O'Connell. "We're glad to have big George back and we got an old friend in Carbo, too."

It was the same situation for Carty.

Phil Seghi, Cleveland's general manager, admitted he had hesitated about exposing the 36-year-old veteran who batted .310 for the Indians last season.

"At the time, we debated about it," said Seghi. "We felt Rico would not be taken on the first round and that I would withdraw him after that."

But the Blue Jays grabbed Carty.

"We drafted Rico with two thoughts," said Toronto GM Peter Bavasi. "We felt he might be a commodity other clubs would be interested in for a subsequent deal, or he could be a fine hitter for us and a stabilizer in our youth program."

The first alternative developed when the Indians decided they wanted Carty back and were willing to part with two players to get him.

It was the second trade between the two teams. Earlier, Toronto had selected pitcher Al Fitzmorris in the expansion draft from Kansas City and then shipped him to Cleveland for catcher Alan Ashby and first baseman Doug Ault.

Minutemen tangle with Terriers

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Coming off a convincing 80-67 triumph Saturday over UNH, the UMass basketball team seeks to put two consistent back-to-back games in a row with a victory over Boston University tonight at 8:00 p.m. at the Cage.

"This is a very big game for us," said head coach Jack Leaman. "We haven't played a totally consistent game all season. We've performed well in parts of some games and had good individual efforts in others, but haven't yet put it together."

Leaman said in order for his team to prepare for the Colonial Classic this weekend against Holy Cross, Boston College and Providence, a strong and consistent effort for 40 by his squad is needed.

The B.U. Terriers come into the Cage with a season record of 1-1. According to Leaman, they lost to a "tough" UConn team in overtime, 73-69, but beat Siena, 100-88.

Junior Curtis Vanlandingham (6-7, 205) is the big guy for the Terriers and is used as either a pivot man or a shooting forward. He will be joined by 6-0 senior Steve Jones, 6-3 Phil Andrews, 6-4 Chuck Witt, and 6-4 Tom Hayes as the starting five for B.U.

The Terrier offense uses a variance of a fast break combined with a disciplined set up led by Hayes and Jones, who average 20 points a game.

On defense, Leaman described B.U. as using a gambling, run and jump defense with the emphasis on man-to-man coverage. They are, however, known to use a full court zone defense at times, similiar to UMass's when the need arises.

Personnel-wise, Hayes is the best defensive forward on the team and is considered to be the most aggressive player on the team. Playing the guard positions are Andrews and Jones. Jones is known as an excellent shooter with good offensive moves to the basket. His back court mate, Andrews, averaged better than 20 p.p.g. last year and was named the team's most valuable player. Also expected to see a lot of action are Bruce Engel and Chuck Whitt.

Under Leaman, UMass has beaten Boston University 12 times while losing twice. Last year UMass beat the Terriers, 88-73 and 67-54. But Leaman expects a tough game from them. "They went down to Storrs with those tough UConn fans and almost beat them. We're not taking them lightly," he said.

In Saturday's victory over New Hampshire, the UMass bench excelled as sophomore center Len Kohlhaas netted 15 points with seven for nine shooting while senior forward Steve Mayfield scored 12 points on six for seven shooting. The team's most consistent player at this stage of the early season, guard Derick Claiborne, topped all scorers with 21 points.

Starting forward Eric Williams will not see action tonight as the sophomore has taken a leave of absence for academic reasons.

"It is a day to day thing with Williams," Leaman explained. "There is nothing we can do to improve the situation. If it was up to us, we would take him back tomorrow, but Eric has decided at this time that he needs the time for his academics."

The UMass mentor plans to go with the same lineup of Claiborne and Alex Eldridge at guard, with Jim Town and Mike Pyatt at forwards and Mark Donoghue at center. Leaman said he plans to use Kohlhaas, Mayfield, Bill Morrison, Brad Johnson, and Chuck Steveskey throughout the game.

"The bench must keep on producing because we have some problems motivating some of our starting people, and it is important that the bench be ready to do the job," Leaman said.

UMass hoopsters play a strong BU tonight at 8:00 in the Cage. With some good individual performances behind them, the Minutemen need only put them together for a solid performance.

Icemen face Merrimack

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

This is where it's going to get tough. The UMass hockey team will be skating onto Merrimack College's home rink tonight at 7:30 p.m., a team many picked to take the whole division in March.

This year Merrimack is sporting a 6-6 record overall coming into the game, but that is deceptive because all six of those losses have been at the hands of Division I teams. The host team has lost two games to Ohio State, Providence College, and St. Lawrence College, and two of the losses have been by one goal.

While Merrimack hasn't been tearing up Division I, it has done well against its Division II foes, going unbeaten in six tries. Merrimack bombed North Adams State 8-0, dumped Lowell University 8-4, and hit Bryant College 9-3. The closest Division II game it played was with AIC, who lost 4-3.

"They're deep," Coach Jack Canniff said. "Their depth shows when they were down 3-1 to AIC and they pulled it out 4-3."

The only common opponent so far has been Lowell and Norwich University. UMass beat Lowell 3-2 while Merrimack dumped them 8-4. The Minutemen dumped Norwich 9-2 last weekend while Merrimack jumped Norwich, 8-1.

Last year, Merrimack finished first in Division II for the second consecutive year with a 10-2-0 record in the division and 21-6-0 overall. And for the second year in a row Merrimack lost to Bowdoin College for the title last season, 6-5.

They also had the Minutemen's number last year as it beat the skaters 6-3 and 9-1. The first loss was here at Orr Rink where the Merrimack team skated away from the icemen and tied it up 3-3. The 9-1 loss occurred over intersession where the team hadn't got its legs back yet.

"They have four strong lines, three good defensemen and two fine goal keepers," said Canniff. "In the long run their depth will show.

Their depth shows as Merrimack will be without two players and not really feel it because they carry an extra forward and defenseman. These two players are Bob Magnuson and Larry Nikols as they will be taking winger Brian Murphy, out with an illness, and defenseman Steve O'Sullivan, suspended for a game because of fighting, places respectively.

While Merrimack is deep, UMass has had a lot of nagging injuries that has bothered it. Canniff said that John Peters is doubtful. "He's been doing a good job skating on one leg. He doesn't have any break away speed because of it (the injury)", the hockey mentor said.

Other than Peters, the Minutemen are reasonably healthy as is Merrimack.

Merrimack's scoring is healthy, and balanced as winger Jim Crouse leads the scoring with seven goals and 11 assists for 18 points. Center Jim Toomey is on th same line as Crouse and is third in scoring, 8-6-14. Winger Greg Walker (7-8-15) is another big gun.

Hockey playoffs elusive

There is nothing in college sports quite equivalent to the weird and wacky, world of ECAC Division II hockey.

Where else, for example, can a team with an enrollment of little more than 1,000-2,000 students beat others that boast 15,000-20,000? And not only defeat them, but make the playoffs and win the title?

Of course, the sport itself is an answer to these questions. Hockey is not exactly the universal athletic pastime of the majority of the American public. I mean, kids play stickball and basketball in the city, not a sport which requires a big patch of frozen water and a bunch of expensive equipment.

Mere climate dictates where the ice sport will be played. California, Mississippi, and Georgia are not exactly mentioned in the same breath as Massachusetts and Minnesota when it comes to hockey hotbeds.

So good college hockey is limited, in essence, to the Northeast and the region around Michigan and Minnesota. Your good old basic athletic powerhouses, such as Alabama, Texas, and UCLA, don't even bother to skate teams. The sport is to them what jai-alai was to us until about a year ago.

But getting back to the ECAC Division II hockey picture, last year's top bananas were clubs such as Bowdoin, Merrimack, Union, and Salem State. They're not to be confused with teams such as Ohio State, Michigan, and USC, however, when it comes to strength of their athletic programs.

Small though they may be, the aforementioned schools are perennially top-notch, while the big universities, a la UMass and UConn, have for the most part, floundered by the wayside, due to a variety of reasons. In UMass' case, the problems are mostly fiscal.

But now the Minutemen have a chance to rank right up there this season, along with their smaller counterparts. It may seen a bit early to make such a rash judgement, but the UMass sextet could make some waves (and believe me, that's somewhat difficult to do on ice) in the division this year.

OK, here's why. Unlike a season ago, the Minutemen have, very simply, gotten off to a good start. After five divisional games in 1975-76, UMass' record was 2-3. This season, however, it is 3-1-1, and the icemen have played the exact same opponents they took on a year ago at this time.

But now come the real testers. For starters, witness tonight's Merrimack game.

Merrimack finished last season with a 23-3 divisional mark, were ranked first in the playoffs, and boasted two of the top five scorers in Division II. Although it lost to Bowdoin in the championship game, Merrimack was ranked numero uno again this campaign by the Globe. It looks as if UMass will have to come up with some kind of effort if it is to win tonight. Last year, the Minutemen lost both of their games to Merrimack, 9-1 and 6-3.

But, after tonight and before the intersession break, UMass must face Army and UConn.

The Minutemen soundly beat the Cadets, 6-2, last year, but Army made it to the semifinals in the playoffs anyway. The Cadets also have 13 returning lettermen this season, including top point-getters Dave and Tom Rost. So this Friday afternoon, the UMass skaters will be put to another early test.

UConn is a horse of a different color. Not in a class with UMass' next two opponents, the Huskies finished 8-11-1 in Division II the season past. Also with 13 veterans back, UConn must still not be considered a pushover because the Minutemen can't afford to take anyone lightly.

Why not? Simply, UMass will be forced once again this year to put up with the whims of a selection committee which doesn't always give playoff berths to the most-qualified teams.

It would only be a repeat of past unjustices, so I won't attempt to explain why or how it happens. Just take it for granted that the Minutemen themselves can't afford to lose eight games again this season and hope to be chosen for post-season play.

Remember, 31 teams will be vying for only eight tournament berths, so mere numbers should be enough to give UMass that extra incentive for a winning season.

And, considering the hockey scholarship situation here, after the next couple of seasons UMass hockey fans will most likely need a dictionary to find what out what the word playoff means.

Sugarloaf complex bankrupt

By KEVIN J. CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

Mount Sugarloaf Apartment complex owner Carroll P. Sheehan filed for bankruptcy yesterday in Boston, blaming UMass for the financial failure of his Sunderland apartment complex.

Sheehan, former State Commerce Commissioner, said the reason his 224-unit complex failed was because "the University has put me and others against the wall."

"When the University jammed everybody they could into their dormitories, that hurt us. The University has just not been responsible," Sheehan said when contacted by the Collegian last night.

Sheehan, who ran unsuccessfully against former Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent in the 1974 primary election, listed liabilities of $2.8 million and assets of about $10,000.

He said he would be back in U.S. Bankruptcy Court sometime next week and expected the court to determine the status of the resident's security deposit.

"I doubt that the students will lose anything," Sheehan said.

"We are not the only complex in the area that's suffering and I know that for a fact. The students should be free to live off campus if they choose.

"I can compete with the University if they let me, but they chose not to. It isn't a fair competition," claimed Sheehan.

The policy of the UMass Housing Office requires all students except seniors, married students, veterans and special exemption cases to live in one of the 52 dormitories.

Sheehan, who estimated that as the sole owner of the complex he pays nearly $60,000 in taxes, said the apartments were completely renovated recently.

The complex, valued by Sheehan at $2 million, is presently maintaining a 50 per cent occupancy rate and about one-third of the tenants are UMass students, he said.

"I would suggest you go around and see how many lights are on in the other complexes at night. That will give you a fair indication as to how many apartments are rented," Sheehan said.

JS faculty seeks separate department

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

A formal request that the Journalistic Studies Program become separate from the English Department has been assigned to an English Department committee which the head of the JS Program says he "refuses to deal with".

The request was made in a letter sent by the five faculty members of the JS Program on Nov. 30 to Jeremiah M. Allen, dean of Humanities and Fine Arts. A copy was also sent to David L. Clark, acting chairperson of the English Department.

Lawrence D. Pinkham, recently-appointed director of the JS Program, yesterday termed the committee "irrelevant", and reiterated the request to Allen for separation.

Clark refused comment regarding the proposed split.

The committee, formed by Clark Monday, without consultation with JS faculty, is composed of four professors. One of the members, Lee R. Edwards, is currently on sabbatical and will not be resuming her duties at UMass until next semester.

The other three committee members — Howard O. Brogan, chairperson, James P. Leheny and Charles Moran, expect to meet by the end of the semester but it is doubtful they will come to a conclusion by then.

The letter to Allen was accompanied by a revised draft of complaints from the JS Program. These complaints include the fact that the JS Program is one of the largest in the College of Arts and Sciences, and because of only having five faculty, is unable to serve the needs of students currently enrolled in the program.

Under the heading "The Size of the Program", the document reads:

"The Journalistic Studies Program has shown remarkable growth. Its complement of undergraduate majors has almost tripled in the last six semesters. It now stands at 287, one of the 10 largest in the College of Arts and Sciences. The JS program now has more undergraduate majors than the Economics Department, and its complement of majors is approaching the size of the Sociology Department.

Forms delayed

Financial aid office expects more money

By RICHARD E. BARRELL
Collegian Staff

Financial aid forms, delayed by printing problems, will be available next Tuesday at the Financial Aid Office so that students may complete the forms during semester break.

University officials are hoping to have at least $400,000 more to award in 1977 than what was awarded this year.

According to Lynn E. Santner, associate director of Financial Aid, the deadline for submitting aid forms for September, 1977 is March 15.

Late applications will not be processed until Oct. 30, with awards retroactive to Sept. 1, Santner said. These students must pay their fee bills and await possible reimbursement, he added.

According to Daniel Fitzpatrick, director of Financial Aid, along with changes in deadlines, the financial aid available to students should be increasing next September.

"We have applied for a 10 per cent increase in campus-based federally-funded programs," he said. If funded, this should increase funds available for Supplementary Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOG), National Direct Student Loans (NDL) and College Work Study (CWS) from $4.1 million to about $4.6 million, he said. The largest increase will be in work study to help cover the cost of the student labor force.

"We have also applied for increases in state financial aid grants," he said. "We will not know what will happen with state funds until the budget is settled, which will not be until June."

To be considered for aid, according to Fitzpatrick, a student must show "need" determined by submitting financial aid forms. The forms are used to determine a student's resources and expenses based on financial data, he said.

Changes, according to Fitzpatrick, will allow financial aid to utilize computer assistance to determine aid, thereby lessening problems and shortening lines. Excess funds should also be computed faster, making them available sooner, he added.

Problems and long lines this fall were due party to late financial aid awards, which caused delays in registration and housing assignments, he said.

"We wanted to be as flexible as we can be," said Santner, "but we had reached a point where the attempt to be flexible was hurting those who submitted forms on time. We process over 16,000 applications. We had to do something to level out our workload to make it possible to complete the job."

Paul Cronin, SGA co-president, said he is waiting to see the results of a survey being done by Student Affairs. The survey will cover the effectiveness of this program.

Cronin said he has not received any complaints about financial aid. He said the office has been understaffed during summer and fall this year, which partly explains the problems of this fall.

OHAG denies Third World funds

By A. TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

The Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) meeting dissolved into discussion, shouting and yelling last night after the Third World Center's request for an additional $400 was voted down.

Timothy P. Hart, representative from the Third World Center, shut-off the lights saying, repeatedly, "The meeting is over." Every time the lights were turned on, verbal assaults between Third World members and other members of the body were exchanged.

At one point, a member of OHAG, acting on his own initiative, called the police. The police left soon after they arrived.

The situation was called "very polarized", "antagonistic", "a big joke", and "a lot of bullshit" by various members of the body. The question was raised if anyone had the right to take away OHAG's right to have a meeting.

After about an hour of sporadic turning off and on the lights, members of OHAG sat down together in the dark to work out some tangible solutions for the reoccuring problems of the Third World Center.

They said they felt a lot of racism in OHAG, resulting in the perusal of their budget and tonight's refusal to grant them the extra money.

Seven points were brought up that OHAG will discuss next week, including: institute a space for the various Centers on the agenda to talk, make it mandatory for members of the executive board to take a racism and sexism course or colloq, the first meeting of every semester be a racism workshop, and once every three weeks or so supply a slot for discussing issues concerning interaction between the Third World community and OHAG.

Other points were to check out the "double standard" existing on the OHAG budget allotments, a detailed report of the budget be printed every meeting, itemizing expenditure, and that every group allotted money by OHAG review their respective budgets every month.

OHAG voted the proposal for Third World funding down, after Hart called the motion to be voted on following a brief discussion on the $400 issue.

The Third World Center presented their proposal for the extra money with the rationale that they needed the money to supplement their programs for next semester.

Programs cited as needing extra money. were Black History Week and a play. The Third World stated they would like to get five speakers and films for Black History Week and wish to put on a fund-raising play which would cost $1700 to $2200.

Arguments for and against the $400 question included the Third World stand that they had to accept a compromise money allotment of $2700 at the beginning of the semester. It was mentioned that this was a 340 per cent increase in funds for the Third World from last year.

The meeting was never officially adjourned.

Films to be scrutinized

SWA sets up review board

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

Films coming into Southwest will now be judged by a review board for possible "sexist and oppressive" content, according to a decision by the Southwest Assembly (SWA) last night that one representative called "political suicide."

President Chris Durkin said student advocates had suggested the SWA set up such a board, to be composed of 14 non-assembly members whose decisions on the films would be final.

SWA is the defendant in a censorship suit brought by Baroque Enterprises head Albert Sparks. Advocates Debbie M. Love, Niki Phaneuf and Louis A. Copponi are representing SWA in the suit brought before the Student Judiciary.

In other business, SWA narrowly defeated a bill that would have provided each dorm with as much as $300 of Student Activity Tax Fund monies that SWA currently controls, providing that the dorm establish an antisexism and-or antiracism program.

A provision in the bill would have earmarked at least 10 per cent of that amount for the establishment of such programs in dorms lacking them, in order to make the dorm eligible for further funding.

Yvonne C. Martell of Coolidge Tower opposed the bill and argued that the money left in the SWA budget would not be enough to fund big projects. She cited an earlier allocation of $3000 to Coolidge to set up a library, and said that such projects would be impossible under the proposed bill.

Rick V. Orlando of John Adams Dormitory spoke against the proposed 10 per cent allocation for the establishment of antiracism and-or antisexism programs.

"It's shoddy to pay for programs like this," Orlando said. "How can you buy people's attitudes?"

SWA is now seeking a "programmatic coordinator" to act as liaison between dorms and area centers such as the Southwest Women's Center and the Center for Racial Understanding, it was announced.

Pierpont was given $230 in SWA funds towards entertainment and decorations for its Christmas banquet. A new SWA ruling prohibits the allocation of area funds for food and alcohol.

The decision to set up a review board to judge films to be shown in Hampden Student Center was passed by a vote of 11 to six with two abstentions.

D.C. now offers private dining

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

"Pieces of Ate" and "Hampshire Down Under" are two of the many suggestions students are offering in attempts to name the new special dining room in Southwest's Hampshire Dining Commons.

The DC held an open house on Monday and Tuesday evenings to show the room to students and explain the guidelines for obtaining and using the room.

The room will be available for students to use as a private dining area where, for example, a floor could have a dinner party for itself using the room free of charge. Those using the room would be able to use their meal tickets and generally eat whatever was on the regular dining commons menu that day, according to Richard Rossi, manager of Hampshire DC.

Arrangements could be made, however, to have a special meal served if a group would be willing to make up the difference in cost between the special meal and the regular one served in the DC.

For those wanting to go "all the way", a catered meal, complete with table service, will be served. Arrangements for this type of dinner should be made through Richard Ellis of the catering department.

The reservations for both the regular and the catered dinners may be made by calling the manager of Hampshire Dining Commons at 5-2075 between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

"I have been really pleased with the response of the students to the opening of this room," said Rossi. "Most of them can't really believe that it's available for free," he said.

The room was originally built to house the basic foods section at Hampshire. However, the management became concerned the room was too small and to use it for basics would create problems such as long lines and crowding. The room now holds sixty people.

The new dining room will be open beginning next semester from 5 to 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday and reservations should be made at least a week in advance. Two weeks notice will be needed for catered dinners.

Tenants plea to students endorsed by Commuters

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Collective voted last night to endorse a letter written by the Amherst Tenants Association (ATA) urging all the area governments at UMass to stimulate participation of student-residents of Amherst in town government.

The ATA's letter pressed student government organizations on campus to insure that every student-resident of Amherst is afforded a "reasonable opportunity" to register to vote, and stressed that these organizations should "officially encourage" registered student-residents to file as candidates for Town Meeting precinct representative positions.

The letter went on to say that student governments should provide forums that enable resident voters of Amherst to meet their precinct representatives, and added that a specific time and place should be set in early February for student registration and meetings between students and area precinct representatives.

In other action the collective voted to give $1,000 to the Che Lumumbra School, which is located on campus in the New Africa House.

A motion to lend $500 to the Peoples' Newsstand was tabled until next week due to lack of information.

Collective members will meet with Jim Riley, assistant coordinator of the Student Activities Office, to explore plans of how the collective might expand the film series which they sponsored in the Herter Hall Auditorium this semester. The meeting will take place on Thursday at 2 p.m. in the Student Activities Office.

Jewish educator Wolf speaks of 'real Zionism'

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"There is a real Zionism that is not anti-Arab and not imperialist," said Rabbi Arnold Jacob Wolf, speaking last night in the Campus Center on "Zionism vs. Zionism".

Rabbi Wolf is a noted lecturer in Jewish philosophy and Hillel director at Yale University.

I think there is a Zionism that reflects the ideals of Judaism and not a rejection of Judaism," he said.

Wolf maintains that Zionism is divided against itself, containing elements of conflict.

"Is Zionism a version of Judaism, or anti-Judaism? Is there a relation to Messionism or is Messionism against Zionism?" Wolf asked his audience. Messionism is the belief of the coming of the Messiah or savior.

Wolf said he believes primarily that Zionism is a response to anti-semitism. "Zionism is a resistance to anti-Semitism and an opposition to Fucism in the Jewish Community," Wolf said.

Wolf said it is possible to convince the world that Zionism is not racism but just the opposite; the liberation of the Jewish people.

"One accusation of racism is based on the law of return," he said. "Israel lets any Jew come back, but not any others, without going through immigration procedures."

"What if the law was amended to let all people come back if they want to? Some Palestinians would come back to claim their property and maybe some other people from other countries would come in to settle," he said. "Maybe I'm wrong, and 30,000 Palestinians could stream in and the number of Palestinians entering the country would have to be cut down," he said, "but I think it's worth a try and it would start to refute the racist title if Israel was open to the world."

Answering the question of how Israel can escape domination by other countries, especially the United States, Wolf said, "the only way you can be a powerful little country is to have powerful big friends. The only way you cannot depend on the United States is not to be a powerful little country but a weak little country existing peacefully with its neighbors."

Wolf received the Brotherhood Award of the National Conference of Christians and Jews in 1962. He was also the first delegate to the World Council Assembly in Nairobi, Kenya in December, 1975, representing the world Jewish community.

Title IX could abolish Men's and Women's Centers

By RICHARD KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Anti-sex discrimination guidelines could outlaw such organizations as the Southwest Women's Center, the Southwest Men's Center and Everywoman's Center.

Mary Lou O'Neil of Everywoman's Center gave this opinion at yesterday's public hearing on the Community Development Center's (CDC) compliance with Title IX guidelines.

The fraternity-sorority system was also scrutinized at the two-hour Campus Center hearing.

The hearing, on in a series, evaluates each department within Student Affairs Title IX Self-Evaluation Committee.

The CDC includes counseling services such as the women's and men's centers, Room to Move and Career Development, as well as residence hall programs such as the Heads of Residence and residential counselors.

Asked at Tuesday's meeting if women's centers are jeopardized by Title IX, O'Neil explained that the regulations are unclear but might well prohibit the organizations on grounds of sex discrimination. The concept of "separate but equal" services for each sex has been tested only in the case of sports, she said. "Affirmative action" may be allowable "in a compensatory way", O'Neill said.

Appropriate counseling for problems peculiar to one sex might also provide a "rationale" for the center's existence, she said. In evaluating whether sex discrimination exists, she indicated that definite and strong "rationales" are needed because of the Title IX guidelines, and she is preparing them now, she said.

"Nobody's really going to do anything until it's contested," said Lisa Grant, liaison between the evaluation committee and CDC, and co-chairperson at the hearing. All who spoke on the matter said they found the legal issue cloudy and untested. Said Grant, it's "one issue that could require extensive attention."

When Grant asked about programs for men at the Southwest Women's Center, Anne Hardy responded that the Women's Center does offer at least one mixed sexism awareness section, as well as two all-women sections. Hardy, personnel coordinator for the CDC, said the Center also offered "out-reach" programs to both sexes. Hardy expressed certainty about whether the Center is in compliance with Title IX.

The fraternity issue, which received much attention at the last hearing (on the Dean of Students Office), was brought up again by Associate Dean of Students Bobby Daniels.

Daniels, citing such problems as the trouble between Gorman residence hall and Kappa Sigma Fraternity, and the frequent sexist stereotyping by fraternity members, said that something had to be done to deal with the situation.

Said Daniels, they're "in dire need of some kind of humanistic development. We're all remiss for allowing this to be perpetuated here". This statement evoked general nodding and verbal indications of approval among the largely female audience of about 30.

When contacted after the meeting, Daniels emphasized that he does not feel that the fraternities are inherently sexist. He said that programs are needed to provide fraternity members the kinds of experiences that diverse people provide and that residence hall students receive.

In the hearing, Daniels, referring to the fraternities and sororities, said, "They are both racially and sexually segregated by choice."

None of the fraternities permit segregation by race in their charters, Daniels said, but because of the homogeneity which exists by the very nature of fraternities and sororities, special efforts must be made to provide an awareness of racial and sexual issues.

In the hearing, Daniels suggested that perhaps the Greek Affairs Office belongs in the CDC, which provides programs relating to racial and sexual awareness both within the residence halls and apart from them. When contacted later, he suggested that instead of such an administrative transfer, the Greek Office might make better use of the Resource Network provided by CDC.

Either way, he said he sees a strong need for programs to provide the Greeks with the kinds of services and insights that the residence hall students already receive relating to sexual and racial awareness as well as the facts and problems of dealing with and living with large groups of people.

The CDC employment policies were given little scrutiny at the hearing. The CDC has a staff of over 50 per cent women, including the only woman director in Student Affairs, according to Sally Freeman, director of the CDC. But "it's just not enough to say we have 50 per cent male and 50 per cent female", she said.

Much of the rest of the hearing centered on evaluating whether the intent and spirit of the law were understood and being carried out. The speakers agreed the CDC is in the forefront of awareness of the issues of sexism. Although, as Freeman said, "we're all very good at the language," the question seemed to be whether, behind the rhetoric, attitudes and beliefs had sufficiently changed.

New Africa House hosts Native American activist

By MELANIE JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Yvonne Wanrow, an activist for Native American women, and Martha Pitts, a speaker from the Assata Shakur Defense Committee, will speak tonight at 7:30 in the New Africa House second floor lounge.

Yvonne Wanrow

Yvonne Wanrow, a Native American from Washington, was convicted in 1973 of second degree murder for shooting William Wesler. Wesler allegedly molested her children on previous occasions, and entered her home with the intent to molest them. Wanrow claims she shot Wesler in defense of herself and her children.

Wanrow has waited since February of this year for word from the Washington Supreme Court as to whether she will be granted a new trial.

Martha Pitts is a member of the Assata Shakur Defense Committee.

Shakur, a member of the Black Liberation Army, is presently in solitary confinement in an all-male prison in New Jersey. She was arrested in May, 1973, on charges arising from a shoot-out on the New Jersey Turnpike, and has recently been charged with the killings of one of her comrades and a state trooper in the same incident.

She is awaiting her fourth trial, to begin in January, 1977.

The evening lecture will be presented by a Women's Workshop focusing on women in prisons, at noon in the Everywoman's Center; and a Legalized Racism Workshop at 4 p.m. in rooms 170-72 of the Campus Center. Both Wanrow and Pitts will be present at the workshops.

A benefit dinner will be held from 5:30 to 7 p.m. in the basement of the New Africa House, for which a $2.00 donation is asked.

AAUP complains university waged unfair campaign

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

The Amherst chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) announced yesterday it is charging the University with unfair campaign practices.

The group also said it is seeking a second election to determine if faculty should establish a collective bargaining unit and that it again be included as a choice for representative agent.

AAUP charged that a last minute series of letters from University administrators on the eve of the Dec. 1 and 2 faculty unionization election were designed to influence the outcome of that election.

The letters offered radical changes in faculty governance and personnel procedures as well as pay raises.

AAUP had filed the complaint with the state Labor Relations Commission before the outcome of last week's election and are now pressing the matter to contest the run-off election between no union and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) which is scheduled for Feb. 2 and 3.

This run-off election was made necessary after no decision was reached in last week's election since none of the alternatives received more than 50 per cent of the vote.

The 1658 faculty members who voted last Wednesday and Thursday had the choice of a union represented by MSP, which received 48 per cent of the vote; no agent, which received 30 per cent; and a union represented by AAUP, which received 15 per cent.

Al D'Apuzzo, executive secretary of the Labor Relations Commission, said if AAUP is seriously contesting the Dec. 1 and 2 election, an informal meeting between AAUP, MSP, and anti-union faculty will meet on campus to discuss the issues of the past election. The results of the meeting will then be reported to the commission after which commission staff will decide if there is a basis for contesting the election. A formal hearing will then take place in Boston among the parties involved.

D'Apuzzo said the commission hopes the matter will be settled before the scheduled Feb. 2 and 3 run-off election.

News in Brief

Dukakis promises more cells soon

BOSTON (AP) – Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday the state will open 150 extra prison cells within four months to alleviate overcrowding, but he conceded it won't be enough.

Dukakis also said he will soon propose sites for "four, five or six" new prisons, accommodating 50 to 200 inmates, despite anticipated opposition from communities where they would be located.

Meanwhile yesterday, a gubernatorial advisory committee called for creation of 500 new prison slots by mid-1977 and 1,000 more by mid-1978.

Robert Palmer, chairman of the Governor's Advisory Committee on Corrections, released the panel's annual report, saying, "It's been hard to get his (Dukakis') attention. We can't do anything except plead, beg, push and criticize."

'Death squad' must hear charges

BOSTON (AP) – A federal judge yesterday ordered Massachusetts prison officials to tell nine inmates suspected of participating in a prison death squad what they're charged with.

But U.S. District Court Judge Joseph L. Tauro denied a request by the unnamed inmates' attorneys to have the men taken out of isolation at Walpole state prison.

The Correction Department must give the prisoners details of the charges against them by Friday and hold a hearing by Dec. 17, Tauro said.

The Correction Department transferred the men to segregation units last Thursday night while state police intensified an investigation into a wave of recent murders at the prison.

Investigators believe the alleged death squad may be responsible for some of the five slayings at Walpole since June, state police have said.

IUD manufacturer sued

BOSTON (AP) – Two suits asking a total of $3 million in damages for injury caused by birth control devices have been filed in federal court against a Virginia pharmaceutical firm.

The suits were filed against A.H. Robins Co., Inc., of Richmond, identified as manufacturer of an intrauterine contraceptive device IUD known as the Dalkon Shield.

Andrea Bachner, 36, of Andover, a mother of three, seeks $500,000. Mary and Anthony Shimansky of Ware, parents of one, seek $2.5 million.

Edward M. and Frederic A. Swartz, Boston lawyer who filed both suits, said the device was taken off the market after a number of suits were filed in federal courts throughout the country.

Both suits claim Robins "negligently" marketed an "inherently unsafe and ineffective medical instrumentality and failed to give adequate warnings or instructions to physicians and the general public."

Nude dancing issue in Boston

BOSTON (AP) – Nude dancing in Combat Zone bars will be the subject of a Licensing Board hearing Dec. 15.

The three-member board has the power to rule on whether to permit dancing in the altogether in the bars of the city's adult entertainment district.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled last September the question is one for city and town governments to decide.

Nude dancing now is banned in the area, but Police Supt. John Doyle said Monday it is still going on at seven or eight places in the Combat Zone.

He said police have been enforcing the ban and reporting violations to the licensing board.

Western Mass. racing—competitive

WEST SPRINGFIELD (AP) – The Massachusetts Racing Commission is expected to decide early next year which of two competing applicants will be awarded 60 days of harness racing authorized for the western part of the state.

Proposed racing sites here and in Hatfield are listed on applications filed by Western Massachusetts Racing Associates, Inc., and Pioneer Valley Raceway, Inc.

While Pioneer Valley Raceway has showed interest in a harness operation for several years, Western Massachusetts Raceway is a new corporation that filed a surprise application just before Monday's deadline.

DiGrazia divorcing shocked wife

BOSTON (AP) – The wife of former Boston Police Commissioner Robert diGrazia says her husband's decision to divorce her after 22 years of marriage came as a complete surprise and days after the couple had completed plans to move to Montgomery County, Md.

Patricia diGrazia, in a statement issued yesterday through her lawyer, said she felt it necessary to respond because "my husband and his lawyer have seen fit to publicize our situation to humiliate me."

DiGrazia resigned as commissioner Nov. 15 to become a chief of police for Montgomery County.

Robert McGrath, attorney for diGrazia, said last week the couple was seeking an "amicable settlement."

DiGrazia said in her written statement, "Two days before Thanksgiving he had me join with him in completing the arrangements for the sale of our property.

Food strikers complete second day

MEXICO CITY (UPI) – U.S. and Latin prisoners at three Mexico City jails refused food again yesterday in the second day of a hunger strike to try to win early release.

The inmates reiterated their pledge to refuse any food "until we drop if necessary" in an effort to force the Mexican congress to enact promised legislation to parole prisoners who have completed one-third or more of their sentences.

Virtually all the estimated 470 prisoners involved in the hunger strike are held on narcotics-related charges.

Monopoly players—look here

ATLANTIC CITY (UPI) – Hey, Monopoly fans: a hotel on the corner of Park Place and the Boardwalk sold yesterday for $3.5 million.

A real hotel. at the real Park Place and Boardwalk, here in Atlantic City – the city whose street names were borrowed by the originator of the Monopoly board game.

Pregnant women get shaft

WASHINGTON (UPI) – In an opinion affecting women workers all over the country the Supreme Court ruled 6 to 3 yesterday that excluding pregnancy from an employer's disability insurance plan is not a violation of federal law.

Speaking for the majority, Justice William H. Rehnquist said leaving pregnancy out of sickness and accident plans is not based on sex at all. He said the plan of the General Electric Co., the employer involved in the test case, is no more than an insurance package covering some risks but not others.

The plan was challenged by 43 present or former women employes at plants in Richmond, Portsmouth and Salem, Va., Tyler, Tex., Fort Wayne and Tell City, Ind., and Philadelphia.

Attorney Ruth Weyand, who represented the women and the International Union of Electrical Workers, said an immediate attempt will be made to have Congress overcome the effects of the decision.

"Our prospects are very good," she said, for a bill dealing with all aspects of discrimination regarding pregnancy.

She said otherwise she is "concerned" about the effect of the GE decision on medical and hospital plans when contracts providing them come up for renegotiation.

The National Organization for Women, commenting in a statement, said: "NOW protests. The court, in a 6-3 decision, stated that men and women are treated equally under such a plan, because if a man is pregnant he will be treated in the same way as a woman.

"Such a definition of a sex discrimination is indeed unique. Justice Rehnquist stated in the majority opinion that there was no intent to discriminate. However, the result is exactly that."

Rehnquist accepted GE's argument that the case was governed by a 1974 Supreme Court ruling which allowed California to exclude normal pregnancy from a disability insurance system for persons in private employment.

Oil drilling

Dukakis looks at environment; while N.H. Gov. checks purse

BOSTON (AP) – Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis testified yesterday the most important aspect of offshore oil drilling should be its impact on the environment, but New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson is more concerned about rising oil prices.

At a hearing by the U.S. Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management, Dukakis stressed environmental concerns but Thomson said they should not delay the project.

"Environmental integrity must be maintained," said Dukakis. "Imposing stringent environmental controls does not mean we will be hampering oil companies. It means more jobs and an expanding economy."

Thomson's testimony focused on the rising cost of oil in New England. He said the project should proceed as fast as possible to offset recent oil price hikes.

He estimated each New England household will pay an extra $73 a year if oil exporters raise their price by 20 per cent, as has been speculated.

The Republican governor also contended the project was necessary to national security. He said delay of the development would be considered "treason" if the United States gets involved in another war.

The hearing was the first of several on oil exploration on the Georges Bank fishing area 100 miles off Cape Cod might harm the environment.

Further hearings are scheduled Wednesday in Boston and Thursday and Friday in Providence.

Further hearings are scheduled on Wednesday in Boston and Thursday and Friday in Providence.

John A.S. McGlennon, regional administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, warned air pollution could result from an oil storage facility or refinery.

Massachusetts Environmental Affairs Secretary Evelyn S. Murphy called for a new environmental impact statement once basic exploration ends.

Waldheim re-elected

UNITED NATIONS (AP) – Kurt Waldheim, the Austrian diplomat who has tangled with the United States over Vietnam and other issues during his five years as U.N. secretary-general, won a second term as leader of the world body yesterday.

The Security Council recommended the 87-year-old Waldheim for re-election in the second round of secret voting after a first-round veto by China, diplomats said. But the Chinese supported him on the next ballot, they said.

The General Assembly will make the final decision within a few days, but it is a formality.

Although the names of several other candidates had been mentioned in recent months, diplomats emerging from the closed meeting said former Mexican President Luis Echeverria was the only other person actually considered.

U.S. Ambassador William W. Scranton told reporters he was "delighted with the outcome."

"Waldheim is a splendid secretary-general and I am sure that we can all look forward to another excellent term and that he will maintain the high standards of the United Nations," Scranton added.

Diplomats said the second-round vote for Waldheim was 14-0 with one abstention – Panama. An official U.N. spokesman read a brief announcement saying Waldheim had been recommended for a new five-year term to begin Jan. 1.

China, which has wanted someone from the Third World as secretary-general, vetoed Waldheim in the first round in order to show its support for Echeverria, the diplomats said. That had been expected.

Anzanian leader here today

Tseitsi Mashinini, the 19 year old organizer of the Soweto student uprising will speak at University of Massachusetts-Amherst today. Mr. Mashinini, the former president of the Soweto Student Representative Council, will speak on the "Revolutionary Role of Black Students of Azania" at the Student Union Ballroom at 2:00 p.m.

All the world is aware of the national uprisings in Azania of last September. What was never clear from the reports of the western news media was just who were these young Africans who seemed so unafraid of the lethal military force of the Afrikaner army? Who organized and kept the demonstrations going despite the murderous response from the police and army? Where, since all black political leadership was supposed to be in jail or exile, did the skill and militant leadership of the demonstrators come from?

The answer to all these questions are beginning to emerge: a new generation of young black students acting within an organization called South African Student Organization (SASO), patterned after the American student movement of the 'sixties,' under a program of "black consciousness" was the agent of the uprisings. Only now is the story of the courage, dedication and sacrifice of these young people being told. (Over three hundred students were killed, some no more than ten or twelve years of age.)

Currently on tour of the United States are Jeff Baqwa and Tsietsi Mashinini of SASO. They will only be here for a few weeks, and represent a unique opportunity for American students to get a first hand picture of conditions and events in South Africa during and after the uprisings.

Tsietsi Mashinini is the symbol of the uprising. A young student, he was president of the Soweto Student Council where the uprising began. He became a legend as he travelled from township to township organizing demonstrations. He also became the subject of an intense nation-wide manhunt, the top priority for South African security forces, but was never caught. He was hidden by the black community, and his series of escapes from police traps and continued work became a focal issue between the students and the white authorities.

The "Giants" will be out this Friday and Saturday at the Fine Arts Center, as the legendary trombonist Dizzy Gillespie, pianist Mary Lou Williams, drummer Jo Jones, Ron Carter and James Moody join together their incomparable talents.

Gary mad at Mom

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Gary Gilmore and the State of Utah told the U.S. Supreme Court yesterday that the convict's mother was an "interloper" who had no right to thwart his death wish.

The state's answer to an appeal of Gilmore's death sentence — and the stay which prevented his execution Monday — was drafted by a team of attorneys who worked through the night and almost to a 5 p.m. EST yesterday deadline set by the court.

The legal documents were transmitted to Washington on FBI and US. Senate telecopiers, then taken to the high court by aides to Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah.

Justices of the U.S. Supreme Court were expected to take up Gilmore's case at their conference today. They must decide whether to extend the stay of execution granted last week in order to review the constitutionality of Utah's death penalty statute.

The Utah Attorney General's Office prepared nearly 70 pages of arguments on why the convicted killer's mother, Mrs. Bessie Gilmore of Milwaukie, Ore., had 'no legal standing' to file an appeal against her son's wishes.

Gilmore's attorney, Ronald Stanger, offered the same argument in a six-page response to the appeal filed last week by civil rights lawyers representing Gilmore's mother.

The high court stayed the execution last Friday, and the 36-year-old convict missed his second date with a five-man firing squad at sunrise Monday.

Assistant Utah Attorney General William Evans said the state was arguing that Mrs. Gilmore had 'no legal interest that she is protecting.'

Evans said the state's brief also contended that Gilmore was sane and competent when he waived his right to appeal, that he had effective legal counsel and that he acted properly when he fired his court-appointed attorneys.

Stanger said he was making the same arguments, but in less detail.

"His mother just doesn't have the proper standing," Stanger said. "Gary is not very happy about this."

The lawyer also said he would fight attempts to try Gilmore immediately on a second murder charge because publicity "has made it impossible to have a fair trial in this county."

Stars defend arts

BOSTON (UPI) — In her first opening "with my back to the audience," Helen Hayes, first lady of American theatre, yesterday urged a legislative commission to support increased public funding of the arts in Massachusetts.

"I've had many openings in Boston, but none more important than today," Hayes told the Special Commission on the Performing Arts. "I'm a little nervous because in 71 years I've never played an opening with my back to the audience.

"This hearing and others like it are important because what is at stake is the survival and growth of the performing arts in America."

Hayes said the arts are "an absolute essential part of American life... They spring from the creativity of the American people.... and enrich the lives of all Americans.

"It is wrong to think of the arts as frivolity... They are as necessary as schools and food... They are the food of our spirit."

She said expanded revenue sources are needed "to meet the ever increasing costs of the arts."

Colson cautions Carter about D.C. 'worship'

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (UPI) — Watergate figure Charles W. Colson said yesterday fellow "born again" Christian Jimmy Carter will find it hard to maintain his religious commitment "amid the idol worship that goes on in Washington."

Colson, a former White House aide who was convicted and imprisoned for his role in the Watergate scandal, said he prays that president-elect Carter will survive the forthcoming attacks on his faith.

"If there is one place in the world where everything is there to separate a man from a relationship with God, it is Washington, D.C., and particularly the White House," Colson said. "Everybody is bowing and scraping and you begin to think you are God.

"One of the most difficult things for a man who has been born again is to maintain that belief amid the idol worship that goes on in Washington. I pray for Governor Carter that he'll be able to do so."

Carter, when asked during the presidential campaign, said he "accepted Christ" about seven years ago, and now refers to himself as a born again Christian.

Colson said people "should not expect miracles" from Carter because of his religious faith and said he doubts whether Carter can do much to change the moral climate of the country.

"I see a spiritual awakening coming in America," Colson said. "But it will not come from the leaders of government. It will come from the hearts of the people."

Colson said he "found Christ" before he was implicated in the Watergate scandal. Following his release from prison he wrote a book, "Born Again", and now travels the country speaking about his religious experience.

Travelling piano rests

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Smithsonian Institution yesterday finally acquired the travel-scarred Steinway piano that Ignace Jan Paderewski hauled across America in a railroad car during a 75-concert tour in 1892-93.

Eight members of the Steinway family came to Washington for the presentation.

Among them were Henry Z., John and Theodore Steinway, the three brothers whose great grandfather founded Steinway and Sons and who run the firm now a subsidiary of the Columbia Broadcasting System, and William Steinway, 28, who represents the fifth and next generation, and is learning the business.

Van Cliburn came to perform on the piano at a ceremony.

Paderewski, a red-haired Pole, was lured to America for his first tour by Steinway and Sons, which saw the promotional benefits of such an event.

Nuke blast leaves miles of emptiness

REHOVOTH, Israel (UPI) — A professor who said he witnessed the aftermath of a nuclear accident in the Soviet Union says the catastrophe turned hundreds of square miles into a "vast nothing" that left the land barren "for perhaps hundreds of years."

"As far as the eye could see there were no villages, no towns, no people," said Leo Tumerman, professor emeritus at the Weitzmann Institute, who once spent seven years in solitary confinement under Stalin and emigrated to Israeli in 1972.

"Only chimneys remained of the towns that once were there," he said in an interview with UPI.

Tumerman, 78, described a trip he took through the area with a group of other scientists, driving along the main north-south Urals highway in June, 1961, three years after the explosion reportedly took place.

First reports of the disaster reached the West last month when Soviet scientist Zhores Medvedev published in London an account of a 1958 nuclear explosion in the town of Kyshtim that killed hundreds and resulted in the evacuation of the local population.

Tumerman said the scientists were on their way to visit the construction site of the first major Soviet atomic plant at Beloyarsk, in the northern Urals.

"We reached a point on the highway where signs appeared telling drivers to close their windows and to drive as quickly as possible without stopping," he said.

"I asked my driver why we could not stop and he told me that there had been a tremendous explosion several years before and ever since then it had been like this," he said.

"On either side of the road there was nothing — an empty, empty land. There were trees and grass, but where there once were villages and herds and industry there was nothing. Only chimneys remained."

The professor said they drove for almost 20 miles and on each side of the main road the land was a "vast nothing."

"It must have been at least 60 square miles that we could see in the valley and we were not really close to where the explosion occurred," he said. "The entire area was hot, very radioactive."

King Amin?

HONOLULU (UPI) — Uganda's President Idi Amin lost his chance yesterday to become King of Hawaii.

It wasn't a "letter from 175 Hawaiians" that Amin received Saturday, it was a phone call, and it was not from native Hawaiians asking him to lead an independence movement. It was from a group of University of Hawaii law school students who were having a party.

Student Don Dzura told the Honolulu Star-Bulletin he and seven friends were in his room at about 1 a.m. when the call to Entebbe was made.

"It just seemed to be the thing to do," he said. "We had been laughing about this article we'd read in which he said he was prepared to be king of Scotland.

"Somebody said, 'what the hell, if he's good enough for Scotland, he's good enough for Hawaii.' "

Hoax dies

BRUSSELS, Belgium (UPI) — The famed "senior American official," an institution in American journalism and diplomacy during the secretaryship of Henry Kissinger, quietly passed away yesterday at the age of three.

The mythical "official" actually was a Kissinger device born in late 1973, suddenly appearing before the American reporters who traveled abroad the plane that also carried the Secretary of State through the Middle East.

Without explanation, or further clues to his identity, the "senior American official travelling on Kissinger's plane" became the attributed source of thousands of news stories charting the progress Kissinger was making in his negotiations.

People

Lily 'pink'

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — He's color blind and allergic to lilies, so it wasn't easy for Peter Ascher to develop what he says is the first pink Easter lily.

Moreover, declared the University of Minnesota horticulturist, "I really don't like lilies." And he isn't sure the world really needs a pink Easter lily.

When Ascher's plan first got some notice four years ago, he was deluged with hate mail.

"One woman wrote to say she felt Christmas had been sullied by the pink and white poinsetta and now I was trying to ruin the only 'pure' holiday left," Ascher recalled.

The idea for a pink lily was born of Ascher's study of sexual discrimination among plants. Many plants have both male and female reproductive parts and they tend to develop complex mechanisms to prevent self-fertilization.

Leg admirer

PROVIDENCE (UPI) — A lost notebook of 19th Century American novelist Nathaniel Hawthorne shows he had an eye for the shapely legs of his women neighbors in Salem, Mass.

The 86-page notebook, found this year in an antique chest inherited by a Barrington woman, was described yesterday as "a literary treasure of immense value" by Hawthorne scholar Hyatt Waggoner of Brown University.

The volume is the first of seven "American Notebooks" Hawthorne was known to have kept between 1835 and 1853, jotting down ideas for his novels and short stories.

It was missing since 1866 when Hawthorne's widow published passages from all seven diaries.

Waggoner, a Brown English professor, called the newly found 1835-1841 volume perhaps "the most revealing and interesting of all the notebooks." He said it helps explain Hawthorne's state of mind in his years of near-seclusion in Salem.

second annual

Collegian Person of the Year

By MARK WILDING
and BILL SUNDSTROM

For the second straight year your two humble authors have nominated the ten individuals whom we think most deserve this paper's highest accolade — "Collegian Person of the Year". These are the people who have inspired, amused, and captivated the public eye. Some will remain center-stage on the platform of history, others will exit into the stage right of oblivion. But for this year at least each had his or her moment of glory. The task has been left to us to detail their achievements.

This has been a year in which we've heard much talk of gay oppression but the year has also been a tough one for heterosexuals. We have fallen into disrepute due to the antics and pronouncements of some of our nation's leading politicians.

Take the admirable Wayne "Let's go for a roll in the" Hays. Last June, after two days of lying to America, Hays admitted that he had carried on an affair with his $14,000 a year committee clerk, Elizabeth Ray. Fair enough, he'd grown tired of the wife he'd been married to for only 38 years. His constituents would forgive him this libidinous trespass. Ah but there was a hitch! The comely Miss Ray claimed that she could neither type nor file and that Hays employed her solely for the purpose of lying around on the job. Meanwhile Hays also had weekly assignations with (screwed) Pat Peak, his home office secretary in Ohio. So, much like Amtrak, Hays was laid all over the eastern U.S.A. Why should we nominate this unpleasant dirty old man for "Collegian Person of the Year"? Simply because we could pin nothing on Robert Wood.

But lust we forget Jimmy Carter, the born-again peanut who promised to restore morality and dentu-creme to our national life. This promise appealed to many and last month America voted him president, saying in effect "In lust we trust". A year ago his critics suggested that he didn't have a prayer, but they were wrong. Being a Southern Baptist he had many. We have made Carter one of our ten nominees for Person of the Year because, in truth, we feel sorry for him. Anyone with a gas-pumping lout brother, a wild-eyed, bible-pinching sister, and a Southern belle mama deserves a four year respite.

Though we don't normally permit nepotism in the "Person of the Year" nominations, the rules had to be bent somewhat this annum to make room for another obvious nominee, Amy Carter. Amy has certainly made herself a model child — she's a spunky, lusty, all-American kid whose example our youngsters would do well to follow. A true-blue capitalist through and through, Amy enchanted an entire nation with her overpriced sandwiches and lemonaid outside her dad's Plains, Georgia, home as she put the proverbial screw to gullible reporters. And who can wait to see AP photos of the littlest Carter sitting in her integrated Washington schoolyard, opening her "Waltons" lunchbox, and sharing a Twinkie with one of her friendly secret service agents?

In this world of gilded and out and out madness there goes one individual who will not succumb to the inherent international insanity, who marches instead to the beat of a sane drummer. He is a pulsating mass of energy who will not be stifled in his efforts to bring order and justice to worldwide chaos. He is the inimitable Idi Amin Dada. Although racked by tertiary syphillis Amin stated less than a fortnight ago that he is willing to assume the crown of Scotland. He claims that his Scottish friends have written him and told him that they regard him as the "king of Scotland". And who, we ask, would be more qualified than this splendid humanitarian?

In an attempt to better Israeli-Ugandan relations Amin hosted the famous Entebbe Airport clam-bake this summer. For several days he amused an Israeli entourage of one hundred passengers, joking and playing the buffoon to the hilt. Unfortunately Israel spoiled the get-together when several hundred paratroopers dropped in unannounced. Amin, though obviously upset by this breach of etiquette, said little except to accuse the Israelies of tossing nuclear hand grenades at his soldiers, or rather co-hosts.

> "Surely some revelation is at hand;
> Surely the Second Coming is at hand.
> The Second Coming!..."

When William Butler Yeats scribed these words in 1921, he had little idea of "what rough beast, its hour come round at last, slouches towards Bethlehem to be born." But now we are well aware. The Reverend Sun Myung "Flash us a" Moon and his Unification Church have been carrying a powerful new religious message to an alienated and atheistic American youth.

Surprisingly, worried parents seem only to see Moon's dark side. Certainly young believers vow that they would murder their parents to prove their faith. But did not Abraham offer his own son as similar proof? Surely these parents are merely a moral fanatics whose motivations are striclty selfish. And to the recent allegation that Moon may be connected with the Korean CIA we can only reply, is not every intelligence agency divinely inspired? Repent, sinners!

Miss Claudine Longet,
Had a mean streak they say,
But alas no proof couldxe found,
'Til along came a Spider,
Who sat down beside her,
Now he skiis six feet under the ground.

This year we witnessed the supposed death of one of our nominees for Person of the Year — Mao Tse Tung. Many have been led to believe that Mao has joined the thousands of misguided Chinese that stumbled during the Great Leap Forward and were never heard from again. Not so. Since his death he has been a director for a swimming camp, he has toured New England handcuffed to a bed (naked), and at last report he was signing little red books in Macy's basement for the Christmas rush. He spends his leisure time gambing for mooncakes and posing for handshakes with former world rulers (although he himself is a leader, not a ruler).

As we all know, the American system of justice is courting with disaster. In this country murderers, rapists, arsons, kidnappers, bombers, even prostitutes and marijuana peddlers — social leaches of every size and description are being released by bleeding-heart candy-ass judges and allowed to roam the streets again, spreading their gospel of moral decay and criminal havoc.

But one figure stands out in bold defiance to this ugly trend — Gary Gilmore. Yes, Saint Gary — and we call him Saint Gary somewhat prematurely, as he will surely be canonized when he finally returns to his Creator — who committed bloody murder so he might bring the direly needed Reform. And against what odds? All odds, to be sure — God, countrymen, and even mother all persecute this poor soul who wants but his just execution. We could receive no deeper honor than to serve on this man's firing squad.

Television has neither made or extended the careers of countless performers. This medium's contribution to Person of the Year is the dynamic and versatile Ed McMahon. The former marine raider has ushered Johnny Carson on stage for over 14 years with the line "Here....s Johnny!" After his first seven years with the show Ed had the line memorized. He has brought into our homes (among otther things) slice-a-dice vegematic, Alpo, the Clydesdales and a hearty laugh that blows across the airwaves, blowing the millions in NBC advertising revenue that would have resulted from higher Nielson ratings if only Ed had never graduated from boot camp.

Earl Butz is a broken man, a tragic hero, as deserving of this recognition as Lear would be, were he with us today. After long years of unerring service to the agricultural community and dedication to higher prices for everyone, Earl the Pearl was forced to resign for a single tragic flaw in his personality — he knows Pat Boone. Now it seems that the stress brought on by his downfall has affected Earl's health. According to his personal physician, the ex-Secretary suffers from three terrible maladies that are surely traceable to his ignoble demise — severe foot cramps, acute sexual frustrations, and rectal frostbite. We can only recommend the obvious remedies, Earl, and wish you a speedy recovery.

Once again, dear readers, we ask for your kind assistance. Enclose, if you will, your choice for Collegian Person of the Year in an envelope with a small donation. Anything would be appreciated.

Mark Wilding and Bill Sundstrom are former Collegian People of the Year.

Belchertown reference callous and inaccurate

To the Editor:

In reading Martha Newcomb's article entitled "Sharp — art?", I was appalled by the ending paragraph which read: "If you really enjoyed Willoughby Sharp, you ought (sic) to take a tour through Belchertown State Hospital. It's full of unpaid 'artists'." I wonder if Ms. Newcomb has ever been to the state school. That callous paragraph indicates probably not.

To begin with, the correct name for the institution is Belchertown State School, not Belchertown State Hospital.

Secondly, I'm confused about the correlation that Ms. Newcomb was trying to make between the art exhibit and the "unpaid 'artists' " at the state school. I feel that Ms. Newcomb was trying to say something negative about the ability of the residents at the state school and the form of art exhibited at the Willoughby Sharp exhibition. I think her comment was made in poor taste; it also demonstrated her total ignorance of what mental retardation is and of what that has to do with the state school.

During various periods of history, society has assigned different kinds of negative roles to developmentally disabled and retarded people.

Retarded children and adults are human beings. Like all human beings, they possess certain basic rights, among which is the right to be treated with dignity.

After reading Ms. Newcomb's article, I wonder if she knows the meaning of the word "dignity"!

I would like to suggest that Ms. Newcomb become a little more familiar with the state school and the people who live there. I say this because if she intends to include mention of them in any more of her articles, the mention had better be accurate.

Taking a stand

There have been complaints, from time to time, that this column never really takes a stand on anything. And indeed, we prefer to gently chide from the sidelines rather than to become involved in the hurly-burly. However, such a stance invariably leads to speculation as to whether we are cowardly, or whether we are merely lazy. So to counter any possible charges of Dutch courage (read pusillanimity), we'll try this week to say what we feel, not what we ought to say.

We also figured that it might be useful to comment on a subject appropriate to this season of good cheer. (That is, Final Exam time — OUR Christmas season does not start until December 22nd). So, here are some of our honest reflections on sundry academic injustices that oppressed students must put up with. After all, is there any other time when matters of education are as close (or close, period) to students' hearts and minds as during these weeks? Enfin, a list of some of our heartfelt grievances.

— The University's Rhetoric requirement is insulting as well as irrelevant. It is insulting in that it implies that this institution admits students who have not learned how to write properly while in high school. It is offensive in that it suggests that some students here are actually morons. It is absurd in that a University student by definition knows how to write well.

Furthermore, even if it were really true that the University admits illiterates, a basic writing requirement is still nonsense. People don't hurl prose at one another; they communicate with each other. It's content, not form, that matters. Eloquence certainly has no place outside of the Looking Glass world of academia.

— Now this is not to say that core requirements have no place in the curriculum. Indeed, the University is remiss in not making certain things prerequisites for graduation. A case in point is the lack of a racism and a sexism core. Everyone should know something about the insidious, invidious forces of racism and sexism. We realize, of course, that some people are already experts in these areas by virtue of previous experiences and study, and thus should be exempted. While we are still unclear as to precisely how a Placement Test should be formulated, it is obvious that members of the Third World (they have already learned) and students from South Boston (they will never learn) should be automatically exempted from the racism requirement, and that a sexism course would be superfluous for Feminists.

— And speaking of the curriculum, two examples will suffice to illustrate some of its inadequacies. First, it is unfair to require pre-med students to take calculus. Forcing medical students to take mathematics and other difficult, abstract courses is precisely the cause of current complaints that doctors are too clinical in their work. Who has time for a bedside manner when visions of limits and derivatives are dancing through his head?

Secondly, irregular verbs should be excised from language courses, or at any rate, only taught in honors sections. Not only are irregular verbs extremely tedious, but they lead to bad grades. Add to that the fact that few UMass students realize that there exists a foreign world beyond their own reality, and one is forced to conclude that there is no reason to learn the conjugations of ill-mannered verbs. An illiterate might then ask why any verbs at all should be learned. The answer, of course, is that a University student by definition knows a foreign language. It simply should not be made difficult for him to become fluent.

— All professors should wear watches. There are few things as annoying as professors who attempt to lecture beyond their appointed time. This is very rude. We have heard that some professors actually go a few minutes overtime because they wish to make a final point or to make sure that there are no questions remaining to be answered. While their intent may be admirable, their action is deplorable. To such boors who would delay their students from going on to better things, the courtly response might be a gentle admonition of the following sort, to be uttered in a vaguely menacing manner just as the class is supposed to end. "Sir, your pleasantry is liable to be misunderstood — a circumstance at all times unpleasant."

A more effective way to indicate displeasure is to rustle coats and notebooks a few minutes before the class is over, thereby giving the professor a hint of impending inattention. The true coup de main, of course, is simply to walk out in unison whether or not the professor is still speaking.

— The University is being very regressive in refusing to allow students to see course evaluations. However, SGA Co-President Jay Martus is being unimaginative as well as childish in begging students to boycott them this semester. There are much more clever ways to get around the University's obstructionism. For example, students could simply fill out the evaluation forms and send them to Mr. Martus instead of handing them back in. Or if students didn't want the University to know what they were up to, the Senate could secretly issue every student a piece of carbon paper with which to make a copy of their course evaluation, which they could then smuggle out of the classroom and send on to Mr. Martus.

An easy way to get even with the University would be to fill out the forms in pen. Another good way to sabotage the evaluation forms would be for students to answer every question with a "4". That way the University would get a lot of information, but some of it wouldn't be accurate. In any case, we are sure that if Mr. Martus pondered the matter at length, he too could come up with a creative solution.

— Finally, we would appreciate it if the University would please give us back the reading day that used to come between the end of classes and the start of exams. Most students would probably not be unwilling to start school on August 15th so that they could have an extra day in December. Our kingdom for a day!!

A great time of year...?

Blleeccchhhh!!!

That's how any self-righteous Charlie Brown would categorize the way that we all feel as the cold, damp, ugly days of December wind down around us.

We struggle to keep our eyes open as we sit in dull lectures, after having stayed up all night to write a 25 page paper. Unfortunately, we fell asleep just as we went to write the last page, and now cannot remember the fantastic ideas that we had for the conclusion.

We drink coffee until we feel like a Mr. Coffee machine. After awhile, we can no longer tell how terribly Hatch coffee tastes. Cigarettes, bubble gum, and candy bars fly over the Student Union candy counter. Nutritious meals are abandoned for those things which can be grabbed quickly and eaten on the run.

We sit around and talk, complaining about all the books we have to read, all the papers we have to write, all the exams we have to take, and all the Christmas presents we have to buy. Three hours later, we realize that we haven't done any of these things.

We sit and watch the snow flakes fall, and dream of family scenes or Florida. We listen to Mitch Miller records, or join in off-key renditions of Christmas carols with the rest of the corridor. We have dorm Christmas parties, drink eggnog, and slide down the hill on dining commons trays. Anything to break the monotony and the pressure.

We fall into mindless routines; we become capable of doing only those things which require no thought. Imagination and creativity disappear as we try to "beat the clock." And a certain Collegian Women's Coordinator finds that the only topic about which she can write is the end-of-the semester-blues.

Everything we attempt to do requires incredible effort. To go to a meal, take a shower, go to class, or pick up the room are mind-boggling tasks. More often, we abandon these tasks for more pressing matters. These tasks become luxuries for the privileged class of those persons who have no finals.

Yes, it's a great time of year — the gloom creeps up on us suddenly, and we find no relief until after exams have ended and we are at home, safe from the terrors of trig equations, history dates, and chemical formulas.

The fires that we set at the beginning of the semester have all expired; quiescent, we all muddle through, dreaming of the rest and release that vacations promise. Until then, you can find me in the library, trying to catch up on a semester's work.

Prejudice problems

To the Editor:

I am writing anonymously as a white female with some questions on prejudice. My particular situation is that having recently been seeing a black guy, I've encountered several realities that some of you may never have been faced with. The fact is — none of my friends (white) have hasselled me at all about seeing this male. In fact, he's admired by them. The problem is that his friends (black) have been giving him considerable grief about seeing a white girl. Not only that, but many; probably not all and not even most; but many black women find it to be in very, very poor taste for a black man to be with a white woman. The poor guy is being branded out of his own race. Now, who keeps telling everyone about how prejudiced whites are? Granted, there are a lot of bigoted whites roaming around.

But what about the rest of the world? ... Reactions welcome.

Faculty group urges boycott

To the Editor:

We, the undersigned faculty members, support the student boycott of course and teacher evaluations. We believe that such evaluations can only have real meaning if they are open and available to students and faculty alike. As confidential information, the evaluations are too easily used against faculty, as in the case of Gary Tartakov who was recently fired from the Art History department. Gary was well liked by most of the students and faculty in his department. Because he was controversial, there were some (though not a majority) students who gave him critical evaluations. When the Administration fired him, they gave "mixed" evaluations as justification. Had such evaluations been public, the Administration would have been forced to reveal the real reason Gary was fired. They didn't approve of Gary's politics.

We agree that student evaluations should be a major factor in determining faculty promotion and tenure. And we also agree that students should have access to this information so that they can use it to decide which courses to take based on what their peers have to say. While the Course Description Guide is a useful tool, it is not sufficient as long as it is written only by faculty members with no student input.

We faculty members welcome student evaluations and are anxious to see them made public. When we pass out the evaluation forms this semester, we plan to inform our students of the boycott so that they can determine whether to participate in the administration's bogus evaluation program or demand publically accessible evaluations.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Student recitals held at Smith

Two student recitals will be held at Smith College next week.

During a formal recital tonight three students will play the piano: Pamela Adams, '78; Ann Lichty, '77; and William Wright, Amherst College, '80. Also, Sally Larson, '79, will play the flute. The recital will be held in Sage Hall at 8:00.

The program for tonight's recital will include selections from Beethoven and Hindemith.

Sunday, Dianne Terp, mezzo soprano, will give a senior recital in Sage Hall at 8 p.m. She will sing songs by Gluck, Purcell, Schubert, Schumann, John Duke, Mozart, and Donizetti.

Both recitals are open free to the public.

'Bilingual law' title of panel discussion

"The Transitional Bilingual Law in Massachusetts Schools: Is It All Talk and No Action?" is the title of a panel discussion to be presented by CCATV tonight at 8:00 on cable channel 8.

The discussion will focus on how and why the bilingual law was implemented and what effect it is having in area schools. Panelists include Robert Marquez, Hampshire College English professor, Marcel Ringawa, UMass Bilingual Program, Edward Korza, Holyoke Schools Bilingual Program, Diana Rivera, UMass Bilingual Program, and Lee Porter, Springfield Schools Bilingual Program.

This is the last program in the Humanities and Public Policy in Amherst series produced by the Center for Community Access Television in conjunction with the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy. Cable 8 viewers can phone in questions and comments, and the public is also invited to come to the Town Room of the Amherst Town Hall to participate.

E.S.I.C. offers 'different' classroom

The classroom form of education is constantly under attack. An example of an alternative to the classroom is the Engineering Service to Industry and Community (E.S.I.C.) program at UMass.

A department within the School of Mechanical and Aeronautical Engineering, the E.S.I.C. program provides engineering students the opportunity to work directly with local industry and their community on engineering projects. The successful completion of these projects and the comprehension of related self-taught engineering skills are the requirements for graduation from the E.S.I.C. program.

Tune in Cable Channel 8 tonight at 7:30 to learn more about this "Engineering Service to Industry and Community."

Portrait sittings still available

It is still possible for seniors graduating in January or who won't be on campus next semester to have their senior portraits taken. To schedule an appointment, call 545-2874 or go to the lobby of the ninth floor of the Campus Center. Sittings will commence Friday, but remember, all appointments must be made in advance. So call now and get your senior picture in the 1977 INDEX.

Swine flu case worries officials

ATLANTA (UPI) – Federal health officials said yesterday a check was being made to determine whether there is any evidence of person-to-person transmission of swine flu in the Brodhead, Wis., area, where one case already has occurred.

Dr. Donald Millar, coordinator of the national swine influenza immunization program at the national Center for Disease Control, said that if evidence is found of person-to-person transmission of the disease in the Brodhead area "we may be starting to see the first seeding of swine flu."

The so-called "seeding" of the influenza virus occurs shortly before outbreaks of the ailment.

The CDC confirmed that Don Harris, a 23-year-old farm worker at Brodhead, had contracted swine flu. At the same time, the agency said it had dispatched three medical investigators from Concordia, Mo., scene of another swine flu case, to the Wisconsin town to aid in the medical inquiry being conducted by state health officials.

"Additional blood specimens from the farm worker are being tested to insure that contamination did not occur in the collection or handling of the laboratory specimens," the CDC said.

"Concurrently, an investigation is underway in the Brodhead area to determine if the reported event is an isolated one or if the spread to other individuals has occurred."

Dr. Millar said it was his "gut feeling that the occurrence of these two cases in Missouri and Wisconsin is significant but what it means is not quite clear."

Off-campus housing information available

The Off-Campus Housing Office (OCHO) is operated through Commuter Collective funding. The Off-Campus Housing Office (OCHO) is located at 3 Munson Hall and it is open Monday to Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Saturdays 11 to 4 p.m.

The OCHO makes available information on tenants rights (we are currently compiling a list of tenant complaints so if you have any, please call us at 545-0865, or come on in and we will try and help you), day-care facilities, subsidized housing, housing codes, model leases, information on basic rent and utility rates, etc. All staff people are available to counsel students on what constitutes reasonable housing requests as well as being available as referral people (if we can't help you, we know who will be able to).

The OCHO also operates a table on the Campus Center concourse on Tuesdays (so if you can't find us, we'll find you). We are also compiling articles from local newspapers on the current housing crises, as well as articles pertaining to local issues that affect commuter-student-residents such as the Northeast ByPass, Nuclear power, etc. We have complete listings on houses, apartments, rooms, people needing roommates.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, December 8 — Born today, you are one of those determined individuals who is deterred from his purpose only by the most dire and unexpected of circumstances. Whatever you can anticipate, whether good or ill, you can prepare for -- and whatever you can prepare for, you can deal with successfully. Thus, you fear more than anything else the surprise situation. You do not demand excitement in your daily life; you are quite satisfied to move smoothly, happily through a relatively ordinary day, just so long as your established aims remain within reach. Interested always in progressing toward your goals, you would not prefer stability to career success, regardless of the chaos such success might generate.

Highly instinctive, you make your decisions more on the basis of "feeling" than reason. You discovered relatively early in life that to intellectualize too much was to forfeit precisely those things your intellectualizing indicated were necessary to your happiness. Thus you make it a habit to get in touch with those aspects of the decision making process which are heartfelt before making up your mind definitely and irrevocably.

There is every chance that you will make your mark on the world well before your middle years. Determination in combination with ability characterizes your approach to all that you do and very nearly guarantees you success in whatever enterprise you take for your own.

Thursday, December 9

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This may well be a critical morning for the attainment of goals. Make an effort to employ the latest means to your ends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Apply a little perspiration and a degree of inspiration to your general approach, and success is yours today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your own circle of friends may cause you more concern than you anticipated. Don't expect gains to grow out of present losses.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Unless you are willing and able to stand behind your words, you would do well to keep silent. Another's principles may serve you well.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Pursue your own goals quietly or you may not be able to pursue them at all. Make your intentions known to all involved.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take care that in seeking out romance you don't cause yourself more personal trouble than you can successfully handle.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Business as usual today. Make no move to change things on the home front until you have gained the consent of family members.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take care that those to whom you listen do not speak with forked tongues. Yield to one who possesses more skill along professional lines.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — If you insist upon comparing persons one to another, you may lose out in a personal relationship. Refer children to another's wisdom.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An exciting morning leads you to new knowledge about yourself. You would do well to keep new yearnings to yourself for the time being.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Up your popularity rating through a liberal use of charm. Personal property may cause some concern late in the day.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Conversations with those who have "been there" could lead you along new lines of successful endeavor. Listen carefully to another's plans.

Harmony in hard work

By JACOB LOVE

The sky this morning may be filled full of guilt and insecurity for everybody who hasn't been keeping up with their homework. We may wake up groggy and foggy, wishing that we could act more practical to bring our dreams into reality. But wishing for a goal is only effective if it leads to action.

Towards early afternoon we'll feel lots of energy for hard work and practical action as the Sagittarian Sun forms an angle of maximum harmony with Saturn, the hard-work planet.

"Sag" is the sign of The Centuar, half-human and half-horse. While ol' Sol is in Sag we'll get the soul message to utilize our human intelligence to steer our animal passions — our horse. Saturn is the wise old horse-trainer, ready to give us practical advice for getting our horse in shape for the big race.

But Saturn is currently "retrograde", going backwards in the sky, symbolically suggesting that we have to take care of unfinished business before we can get into shape.

Saturn's retrograde motion also suggests that we have to internalize the Saturn-function; we have to become our own horse-trainer, our own disciplinarian. Hard work brings its own rewards and we'll win that race if we train for it.

The emoceanl Moon is moving thru her favorite sign, Cancer. Today and tomorrow as the Moon flows thru Cancer we'll flow best emotionally if we're feeling cozy and secure.

Next year you could be on a scholarship.

An Air Force ROTC two-year scholarship pays your tuition and gives you $100 a month allowance. And it picks up the tab for books and lab fees, as well.

After college, you'll receive a commission in the Air Force ... go on to additional, specialized training ... as you get your start as an Air Force officer. There'll be good pay and responsibility, and lots of other benefits ... and a great opportunity to serve your country.

It all starts right here — in college — in the Air Force ROTC.

Marvin Barnes just can't win. Yesterday he received a parking ticket on his car after he left court, seeking a leniency on his one-year jail sentence. (UPI)

Court reviews Barnes' case

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — Marvin Barnes' future brightened yesterday when a Superior Court judge asked for a specific alternative to a prison term the troubled Detroit Piston faces for violating probation in assault case.

Judge Anthony A. Giannini recessed the case until Jan. 17. He said he agreed an alternative like work with inner city youths "might be something more meaningful than incarceration for Mr. Barnes."

Barnes, a 6-foot-9 forward, was ordered to serve one year in jail.

Nov. 30 when Giannini found his October arrest for handgun possession in Michigan violated his three-year probation in an 1974 assault case.

"We are coming here on our knees begging the court, for leniency, begging the court to give Marvin Barnes a chance to prove he is a man," said defense attorney Alton W. Wiley of Providence.

Prosecutor Henry Gemma opposed any reduction of sentence, although he said the state had no objection to delaying Barnes' jail stay until the end of the current basketball season.

Attorneys Wiley and Neil Fink of Detroit suggested several options which the judge called "too indefinite". They include extended probation coupled with work among ghetto youngsters, reduction of sentence or its delay until after the current NBA season ends next spring.

"The court can see some value to having Mr. Barnes serve youth," Giannini said.

lead. The quintet of Mike Pyatt (12 points for the game), Len Kohlhaas (4), Bill Morrison, Eldridge, and Brad Johnson dominated both sides of the court forcing seven turnovers, two blocked shots, and while controlling both the offensive and defensive rebounds.

A Pyatt jumper along with a Town stuff, a layups from sophomore Jim Maquire, Brad Johnson, and Chuck Steveskey clinched the victory.

"UMass always plays tough defense and they did it again tonight," said a disappointed BU coach Roy Sigler. "We are a very young team with several inexperienced players. I think UMass has an excellent shot at beating Holy Cross but they have to erase their turnovers."

Gymmen romp past Lowell; Scuderi tops in all-around

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastics team had little trouble in defeating an undermanned University Lowell team yesterday afternoon in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym, as the Minutemen walked off with a 192.1-160.8 victory. The victory was the second of the season for the Minutemen and now brings their season record up to 2-1.

The meet was never really in doubt once it began, as the Minutemen took a commanding lead after the first event — the floor exercise. Behind fine performances in the floor exercise from John Forshay and Paul Marks, the Minutemen raced out to a quick 32.7-27.15 lead.

The Minutemen further increased their lead on the pommel horse event, in which UMass outscored Lowell, 32.25-25.35. Dave Kulakoff turned in another masterful performance on the pommel horse, as he recorded a fine 9.2 score. At this time, after the first two events, the meet already belonged to the Minutemen.

"We scored just about what I expected we would," said UMass head coach Dick Swetman following the meet. "As a matter of fact, I predicted yesterday that we would score 192."

Minuteman co-captain Angelo Scuderi captured top honors in the all-around competition with a score of 49.3. Scuderi had impressive scores in the parallel bars (8.7), still rings (8.65) and in vaulting (8.15).

UMass' Paul Marks placed second in the all-around with a 49.0 and Lowell's Dick Bissen finished third with a score of 41.3. Marks' moment in the spotlight came on the last event — the horizontal bar — when he scored a very impressive 9.2 for his routine, which brought the crowd to its feet in appreciation of his work.

"I certainly wasn't expecting scintillating performances today," Swetman said, "because we really worked the guys hard in practice on Monday, and that may have burned them out."

UMass was without the services of its co-captain Steve Marks yesterday afternoon. The all-around performer sat out the Lowell meet because his knees were bothering him. However, Swetman enthusiastically pointed out that Steve will be ready and in good shape for the big meet this Saturday at Penn St.

"We scored very high today, and we did so even though we didn't hit on all our routines," Swetman pointed out. "With the return of Steve Marks to our lineup, and a little better execution on our routines, I think we will havoe a good shot to beat Penn St.," said Swetman who was an All-American gymnast in his college days at Penn St.

Event by event, the UMass gymnasts scored 32.7 in floor exercise, 32.25 on the pommel horse, 31.05 on the still rings, 33.95 in vaulting, 30.75 on the parallel bars and 31.4 on the horizontal bars.

So now, with a record of 2-1, the Minutemen must prepare themselves for Saturday's showdown with Penn St.

Aquamen victorious over WPI

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — The UMass men's swimming team won its first meet of the season last night, as the Minutemen narrowly defeated Worcester Polytechnic Institute, 49-46 at the WPI pool.

Umass swimming coach Bei Melamed received very strong performances from Russ Yarworth and Ben Crooker, which were very instrumental in the UMass victory.

Yarworth was victorious in two individual events and he was a member of the victorious UMass 400-yard medley relay team. Yarworth won top honors in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 1:41.5 and he also finished ahead of the pact in the 200-yard breaststroke with a time of 2:13.6.

Crooker copped top honors in three individual races. He captured first place in the 1000-yard freestyle with a time of 11:35.5 and he also won the 200-yard freestyle in 1:51.5. Crooker's third triumph came in the 500-yard freestyle when he finished ahead of his competitors in a time of 5:10.6.

Dave Boucher won the 200-yard breaststroke for the Minutemen with a time of 2:21.2. Boucher also combined with Yarworth, Dan Connally and Fred Leonard to win the 400-yard medley relay. The UMass team clocked the 400 yards in 4:00.5.

This is the fourth year in a row the Minutemen have defeated WPI. After last night's victory, the UMass swimmers now possess a 1-1 record on the season.

The UMass men's swimming team will return to action this Friday night when the Minutemen host the Eagles from Boston College in the Boyden Pool.

Town, Eldridge lead attack

Hoopsters dominate Terriers

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

It looked so very easy. The strangest thing is that many of the UMass basketball players felt that a lot more had to be done before the team really played its best basketball.

Before an excited 2500 Cage crowd, UMass utterly dominated Boston University 84-57. The Minutemen controlled almost every phrase of the game drawing three standing ovations from the crowd.

UMass head coach Jack Leaman felt it was his team's best performance to date as the Minutemen went over the .500 mark for the first time this season. With the season mark presently at 3-2, Leaman's men are waiting intently and with "revenge" for their next game this Saturday night against Holy Cross in the Colonial Classic in the Boston Garden.

"Our overall play was excellent," said Leaman. Our bench came through again and I thought everybody on this team played as well as I have seen for an entire game."

"However we are still not good enough to beat Holy Cross. Our turnovers (33) are going to have to decrease tremendously if we are going to beat them," Leaman said.

UMass' Jim Town led all scorers with 19 points while guard Alex Eldridge, in perhaps his finest game this year, hit for 18. But the secret key to his game was the superior defense of all the UMass players. Time and time again, UMass shut off the fast break entirely, allowing only 27 points the first half and only 30 points the second.

A combination of nine team steals, three team blocked shots, and a team rebounding edge of 56-22 highlighted the total team defense. Aiding Donoghue in the rebounding were Town, and Eldridge with seven apiece while Mike Pyatt chipped in with six.

With the decided rebounding edge, UMass was able to run at will.

"We love to run and it's awfully hard to defense us when we are able to get the break started," said a happy Alex Eldridge after the game.

Eldridge said that the total team offense still had to work out minor problems but feels that the cohesion and execution was the best so far this season.

Steve Mayfield, a surprise starter over Town ignited the UMass offense as UMass outscored the Terriers 14-5 in the first six minutes of the game. Mayfield hit two jumpers, grabbed three rebounds, and handed out two assists in the time period. It marked the second consistent game for the 6'7 senior.

Fine execution of the fast break, excellent passing, and 57 per cent shooting marked the UMass first half. After taking the 14-5 lead, UMass was never bothered by the Terrier defense as the lead increased to scores of 26-16, 35-19 and finally 45-27 before halftime. Eldridge in as many offensive moves, twists, and shakes, captivated the Cage crowd as he shot 5-8 and hit 2-2 from the free throw line to lead all scorers with 12 points at the half.

Town, who said after the game he "played very tired" came off the bench to add 11 points. Derick Claiborne, again the most consistent player of the team, shot 4-6 and supported the offensive show with eight.

UMass put away the game with 12:25 left in the game as the Minutemen pulled away to a 51-35

Athletic dept. up to its old tricks

You can fool some of the people some of the time.
You can fool some of the people all of the time.
But the UMass Athletic Department will never fool us.

If you are a loyal follower of the UMass basketball program, you really must be in your glory this year. I mean your ship must have just sailed in. After all, this is the year the Minutemen said so-long to that poor imitation of a college basketball league — the Yankee Conference, and said hello to that new impressive league — the ECBL.

No longer do you have to be bored out of your mind watching the Minutemen battle Maine or New Hampshire in meaningless conference games in the Cage. You are probably so thankful that things have now changed. Who wouldn't though? When you get a chance to see a national power like Rutgers play UMass, along with several outstanding teams like George Washington, Duquense or West Virginia, it just has to make you happy.

I'm sure that's what the men and women in the Boyden athletic offices had in mind when they decided to upgrade the UMass basketball. They could sense the natives were getting restless and borned under the old league and schedule, so they upgraded the basketball program for the fans, in order to recover some of the interest that has escaped over the past couple of years.

Gee, that is really nice of those people to do that for us. Now we all can't wait to see big-time basketball at UMass.

I'm so excited over what has happened, that I am going to check out my official UMass Winter Season Athletic Schedule for 1976-1977, and see what big name powers are going to be playing UMass in the Cage. Boy, I hope Rutgers is here and Duquense, well I'll just quickly go down the home schedule.

Now let me see, the Minutemen opened the season in Springfield against Syracuse and West Virginia, two really good teams. Oh, but that was in a tournament and that's why it was played in Springfield. Then there's Penn St. and even though they're supposed to be the worst team in the league, I suppose they'll be good to see for a change.

After Penn St. comes Fordham and Boston College, two teams that are going through major rebuilding stages. Not exactly big-time teams, but the best I suppose is yet to come.

Hey wait a second, what's this? Do my eyes deceive me, or do I see UNH, URI and Maine on the home schedule again? It is true, the fearsome trio return to the Cage again this year to remind us of days past. Not that's the pits.

Hey wait another second. Do my eyes deceive me again, but I don't see any big-time teams playing in the Cage this year. Hey hold on a second here, what's the story? Where are all the big-time teams we were told we were going to see.

What's this I see now. UMass will play Rutgers, Duquense and UConn in the Springfield Civic Center. Why is this so? Why must we travel to Springfield to see good basketball? And why do we have to pay for tickets to go to a UMass basketball game there? I thought our athletic fee covered our expenses to all UMass regular season athletic contests?

I think I'm beginning to smell a rat, and it seems to be coming from the Boyden Building. Now let me get this straight. All the really good basketball teams will be playing UMass in the Springfield Civic Center, where we have to pay for gas to get down there and back, and where we even have to pay three dollars just to get in. Meanwhile, back at good-old Curry Hicks, we get to see the same teams we've been seeing for the past who knows how long once again.

Something doesn't seem right?

If I didn't know better, I'd swear that the UMass Athletic Department is trying to make a few extra bucks off of us. They hit us in each of our semester bills with an athletic fee which is supposed to cover our costs to all UMass home athletic contests. Now they are trying to lure us down to Springfield, where we have to pay to get in, by staging the best games of the season down there.

Ah yes, now I realize what's going on, it's the old how to rip the students off some more by staging the best games in Springfield trick, the most classic of all. Now how do you suppose I missed that one?

'Mass murder' in Merrimack as Warriors blast icemen

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER — A sign in the Merrimack crowd declaring "Mass. murder" pretty much told the story last night as the UMass hockey team was victimized by Merrimack, 10-2, here.

Despite the lopsided final tally, Merrimack didn't score its first goal until 14:37 of the first period, when Tom Kilduff took a pass from Rick Curran and beat UMass goalie Dana Redmond to the right side.

But the Minutemen knotted things up with 59 seconds left in the first stanza when winger Carl Burns slipped a backhander by Merrimack netminder Jim DeSimond.

While the opening period was slow paced, the home squad picked up the going in the second while UMass was beset by penalties. Merrimack scored five times to take an insurmountable 6-1 lead into the locker room. Pat LeBeau, Ron Doherty, and Bob Magnuson all scored single goals, while Randy Curran tickled the twine in back of Redmond twice during the 20-minute UMass torture.

To emphasize Merrimack's complete control of the play, Curran's first tally and Doherty's score came within 43 seconds of each other.

But Merrimack apparently decided that one scoring binge was definitely not enough, for in the third period it laid it on thick and heavy by picking up four goals to UMass' one.

Buddy Goudain began the punishment inflicted on UMass' new goaltender, Doug Janik. The senior was making his second appearance of the year in the Minutemen nets and he bore the brunt of the Warrior outburst.

A scant 1:17 after Goudain's goal, Jim Toomey tipped in a shot from the point for yet another score.

UMass was finally able to answer the Warriors seven straight goals at 15:15 of the final period, when winger Frank Pycko tallied to make the count 8-2 at that juncture.

But the number one Division II pre-season pick garnered two more scores before the debacle was over. Randy Curran sent headpieces a-flyin' when he scored his third goal of his team's lopsided win by flipping the puck over a sprawling Janik. Doherty then finished the red light business up with a late goal.

The Minutemen will get a chance for revenge in February, though, when they will host Merrimack early in the month. But the loss last night dropped UMass' mark to 3-2-1 on the year, as the iceman are entering their final week of competition before a long intersession break. Army will be the next foe Friday at Orr Rink.

The struggle continues

Soweto leader speaks at UMass

By KATHE SANDLER
Collegian Staff

"I want to talk to you about the one million people who live in the land I come from and the one million people who are going to take that land from the white man," said nineteen-year old Tsietsi Mashinini, exiled president of the Soweto Student Representative Council yesterday afternoon.

Mashinini's visit was sponsored by the D.V.P. and the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies.

"What happened to the black heroes who went down in Soweto the racist regime still has to account for," said the key organizer of the June 16 Soweto revolt, speaking to a crowd of about 175 people at the Student Union Ballroom.

The object of a national manhunt by the Boer forces in South Africa since June, Tsietsi (meaning "trouble") Mashinini escaped South Africa via Botswana and temporarily resided in London before coming to the U.S.

Speaking of his successor in the student movement, eighteen-year-old Khotso Seatloho (whose first name translates roughly as "peace"), Manshinini said, "He is going to preach Malcolm X and Martin Luther King the whole day in South Africa, but when it grows dark he'll be the first person to organize people to go out and sabotage the regime."

Contrary to portrayals of disunity among the three racial divisions in South Africa, Mashinini explained, "When we refer to 'blacks' in South Africa we refer to all the members of the oppressed community which include the African, the Coloured and the Indian. Most of the demonstrations in Cape Town were carried out by the Coloured people. The Coloureds are with us all the way."

BLACK AFFAIRS

Opposition to the students has escalated this year under the Voyster regime, the most powerfully equipped army in Africa and the fifth best armed army in the world, resulting in the killings of over 600 students, thousands detained and 1500 forced into exile.

Garnering both material and political support in his three week stay in America in behalf of the students and workers of South Africa, Mashinini struck a responsive chord in the audience when he said, "We would like to get apartheid out of South Africa and the only way we can do it is if you play the same role you played during the Vietnam war. You have the right to demonstrate and protest your government and what you are doing is absolutely nothing."

Later, specifically zeroing in on the black audience protest he said, "You were brought in this country as slaves. The white man does not need you anymore. There are no jobs for you out there. There are jobs only for white people. Come back home. We need you."

Wanrow, Pitts discuss injustice

By VUKANI MAGUBANE and MARCIA HOSPEDALES
Collegian Staff

The theme of "legalized oppression" was discussed before a capacity audience at the New Africa House last night. The speakers featured were Yvonne Wanrow, a Native American, and Martha Pitts, a member of the Assata Shakur Defense Committee.

Talking from the standpoint of a native woman who described herself as being "beaten, kicked, raped, and scorned" by the American society and system of justice, Wanrow told of her struggle to obtain an acquittal from her 1973 conviction of shooting a child molester. Because of the "sexism and racism" she has faced in the courtroom in the last four years, Wanrow feels she has been "chained to the courts by the continuation of her trial."

Wanrow, speaking in a serene manner, stressed the Indian feeling of spirituality, and "getting back in line with nature." Referred to as a "murderous, cold" woman because of her calm attitude when she was arrested, she was viewed as a dissenter who did not respect the law.

Based on that opinion which the probation officer had formed, the judge sentenced her to two concurrent 20-year terms and one five-year term. Stressing that she could not receive a fair trial because of the "hatred against Indians stemming from Wounded Knee," she went on to say that there is an "undeclared war on Indian people in this country."

BLACK AFFAIRS

Wanrow ended by saying to the audience that if they could not help her in any way, they should try to help the person next to them, especially if the person is a Native American.

Speaking for the Assata Shakur Defense Committee, Martha Pitts, in contradiction to Yvonne Wanrow, said to the people to "help yourselves first and then if you have anything left over help your neighbor."

Shakur is awaiting trial on charges stemming from a shootout on the New Jersey turnpike in which she was wounded and a comrade and a state trooper were killed. She is charged with both killings.

She continued to say that "the undeclared war Yvonne talked about has in fact been declared, and we the people are the victims." She stressed that "we are all oppressed prisoners of a capitalist society and a political system which will not permit us to be free."

The only "free people of this society are the capitalists," said Pitts.

The night was ended by a taped from Assata Shakur which can be heard today between 9 a.m. and 12 noon on WMUA.

FAC to sponsor skating party on last class day

By SUE McDONALD
Collegian Staff

An "old-fashioned Christmas skating party" will be sponsored by the Fine Arts Center (FAC) Wednesday, December 15, the last day of classes, on the large reflecting pool outside the building, from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m.

David Letters, spokesperson for the FAC, said that this free event, open to students, staff, and townspeople, will hopefully be an annual affair.

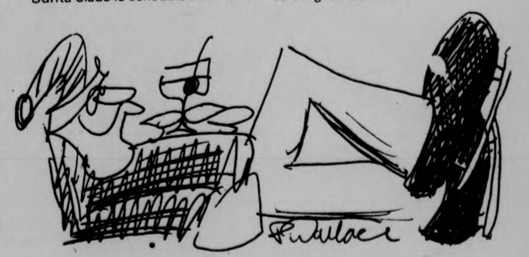
"We hope parents will bring their children," said Letters. "Everything's being donated."

According to Letters, Sun Music is providing records to be taped. The music will be traditional Christmas music and skating waltz music. "Dee Greaze" is providing the sound system.

The FAC is donating floodlights and personnel have donated their time to work at the party.

Santa Claus is scheduled to make an appearance, and hot drinks and food will be on sale.

In case of poor skating conditions, the event will be held "sometime next semester, according to Letters.



Sylvan-NE Area opens its doors to women

[illegible] MELANIE JOHNSON
[illegible]llegian Staff

Do you need a quiet place to study? [illegible]meone to talk to? A book of feminist [illegible]erature for a term paper?

The Northeast-Sylvan Area Women's [illegible]nter, located in B-4 Lewis House, just may [illegible] the place for you. The small but cozy [illegible]ing room and office are staffed almost [illegible]ntinually during the day on Monday [illegible]rough Friday, as well as on Monday, [illegible]esday, and Thursday evenings.

"Even though we're so small, we really [illegible]ave done a lot of things this semester, and [illegible]e have more planned for next semester," [illegible]ays Marielizabeth LeBlond, co-ordinator for [illegible]e center. Included in those plans is the use [illegible]f space in the Sylvan Cultural Center in Cashin as a resource center.

Although the center has not received any funds this semester, LeBlond expects to receive funding within the next week from the Northeast-Sylvan Area Finance Committee. According to Karen Klopfer, a staff member, the center has requested "around $1400, to cover both semesters." The Northeast and Sylvan Area governments also have an option to give the center money.

This semester the center has held a weekly one-credit colloquium, "Issues for Women". LeBlond says the issues discussed have included lesbianism, natural childbirth, growing up female, rape, and massage for women.

The workshops have been conducted in various dorms in the area, "so that it would be easier for women to come down to a meeting in their own dorm, rather than go out," said LeBlond. Many of these events [illegible]nded.

[illegible]eBlond said "It is important that women [illegible] about their own worth as women [illegible]t having to identify themselves with a [illegible]. We feel that women need a space to together — that this space exists is the [illegible]mportant."

[illegible]ond said that the staff needed to talk [illegible] ways to deal with these misper[illegible]ns about the Women's Center and [illegible]ists in general. "Right now, we're [illegible] to get on our feet and get more [illegible]arity within the staff. We're really [illegible]g a lot of energy into staff develop[illegible]." LeBlond feels that this effort within [illegible]staff will make the staff more effective in helping area women.

[illegible] addition to the present "Women's Issues" colloquium and the support group, the center plans several events for next semester. Among these are an Assertiveness Training colloquium, and a general support group for women.

The support group "would have sort of an undefined structure," says LeBlond. "It would just be an opportunity for women who need to talk about women's issues."

The Center also hopes to sponsor a Women's Art Exhibit, featuring artists from the Northeast-Sylvan Area, as well as a monthly coffeehouse with women performers. "We'd like it to be a women's coffeehouse — a women's kind of mellow evening."

The Center also plans to have a film series, and to show the film, "Lucia". LeBlond said this film deals with cultural differences that exist between white and Third World women. "White women and Third World women are not involved in the same kinds of struggles," explained LeBlond. LeBlond hopes to sponsor some workshops on Third World women, as well as work with the Sylvan Cultural Center on programming catered more towards Third World women.

LeBlond said that the workshops have been well ha[illegible] attended by both men and wo[illegible] and are open to the whole area.

[illegible]er also has a smal[illegible]ary of fe[illegible]rature, as well as [illegible]mation fro[illegible]ous women's [illegible] and ca[illegible]ncies. Klopfer claims [illegible]rary wil[illegible]ger next semester, [illegible]nore boo[illegible]e been ordered.

[illegible]ounselors are often a[illegible]enter to [illegible]eople with campus a[illegible]sonal prob[illegible]s. These counselors deal [illegible] legal ques[illegible]s, career and academic [illegible]seling, healt[illegible]nd nutrition, and con[illegible]ption, pregn[illegible]cy, and sexuality.

Fo[illegible]hose women who are [illegible]oning their [illegible]xuality, the center sponsors [illegible]upport group, "Women's Sexuality and [illegible]ploring Alternatives." LeBlond explains that "there are lesbian support groups, and just general women's support groups, but there really are no places for those women who have questions and want to talk."

LeBlond and Klopfer agree that one of the center's largest problems is its lack of publicity. "It's so disappointing to step into an elevator and see the poster you put up has been ripped down," says Klopfer.

Another major problem for the center has been the misconceptions that people have about the center and the people who staff it. LeBlond said that some people feel that those women who work in the center are "manhaters". LeBlond explained that their knowledge of these faulty impressions came largely from the responses they got from a center questionnaire circulated earlier this semester, and from the general underuse of the center itself.

Although there are more than 800 women in the Northeast-Sylvan Area, only "about two women a day" come into the Center. The questionnaire was sent to all the women in the area, but according to Klopfer the center only received 19 responses.

The cast of The Hostage was in fine style at one of their last rehearsals. The play, which will be staged December 9 through 14 in the Fine Arts Center, deals with the conflict in modern Ireland in a manner which is alternately rollicking and thought-provoking. 'Hostage' opens tonight in FAC

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"The Hostage", the University Ensemble Theater production of the Brendan Behan play, opens tonight for a six performance run through Tuesday on the Rand Theater stage.

The play is set in an old Georgian mansion in contemporary Dublin, which serves as a boarding house-brothel populated by "Gaels, patriots, and Republicans on the run," as well as a collection of pimps, prostitutes, and their clients. The characters live in dream worlds based on the glorious "good old days" of Ireland, when Irish nationalistic fervor was in its heyday. These reveries in the production are highlighted by the singing of Irish ballads and bawdy songs in a Vaudeville format.

The reality of modern Ireland quickly hits home as the I.R.A. brings into the house a captured English soldier named Leslie. An I.R.A. volunteer is to be executed in Belfast the next morning, and it is announced that Leslie will be shot in reprisal unless the boy in the Belfast Jail is reprieved.

The play's action follows the hostage and the householders through the long night. Their reactions to each other are explored through more songs, dance, slapstick comedy and serious political commentary. The play changes gears at a moment's notice.

The set design, by Jeff A. Fiala, is a multilevel representation of the mansion structure. June B. Gaeke's costumes and Kay Haskell's makeup will highlight both the characters' fantasies and the reality underneath.

The cast includes Luise Balakeir, Kathie Baldwin, Greg Bernet, Jay Charbonneau, David Cole, Karen Cowe, Barbara Crook, Susan J. Danizio, Helena Donovan, Rina Miller, Harry Munns, Jim O'Connell, Jane Perkins, William Pullman, Stephen Shea, Wendy Thompson as well as Gary Kaplan, Rick Martin, Francis Pichanick and Robert Tupper who recently performed in this years production of "Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead". Don Boros is the director, assisted by Robert Verini.

Tickets for "The Hostage" are priced at $2.50. On campus students presenting an ID and meal book at the box office can purchase tickets for $1.75. Curtain time is at 8:00 p.m.

Five Colleges dance together

By ANN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Jean Cohen, executive secretary of the Five College Dance Department Council, has been looking forward to tonight for a long time. The Five College Dance Faculty Concert tonight is the first cooperative dance program by the five colleges.

The program will be given tonight, Friday and Saturday at Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts at Smith College in Northampton.

The concept of a Five College Dance Department was approved by Five Colleges, Inc. last spring. As a unit, members agreed the Five College Dance Department would bring together all the schools for a greater strength in their curriculum.

Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges have already approved the plans for a Five College Dance Department. Approval by Amherst College and UMass is expected this year.

With the creation of the department, the dance faculty at the five colleges will operate as one professional group, coordinating their course offerings, their performances and their services to students.

Mount Holyoke has two professional dance teachers; Hampshire, two; Smith, three and UMass, five. Amherst has no regular faculty in dance. The Contemporary Dance System, a visiting company, will be in residence at Amherst in the spring. A permanent dance teacher probably will be appointed during 1977-78, Cohen said.

The 27-member Five College Dance Department Council meets weekly to discuss courses, special events and proposals. The council is formed by dance faculty, non-dance faculty representatives and students. The council also coordinates performances so they don't overlap. Video equipment and space is shared to maximize group facilities.

The council's main concern is to organize the curriculum at the five colleges "so we can maintain integrity at individual colleges and their approaches to dance, to have a thorough, tight department," Cohen said.

She also said there is an increase in students interchanging dance courses within the five colleges, especially in advanced level courses.

"Each school has its strength," she said. For example, UMass is the only school that regularly teaches jazz. Smith is strong in ballet and dance history, which is taught by Prof. Rosalind DeMille. Hampshire offers labanotation the recording of dance scores, which is taught by Prof. Francia McClellan.

Cohen said that students major in dance at their home institution but ultimately all dance courses will be in each school's schedule book.

The concert is open to the public. General admission is $2.50. Five College students can attend the concert for $1.50 and children under 12 are .75.

Food engineering to begin program next fall semester

By DEBBIE ALLIEGRO
Collegian Staff

A new undergraduate program in food engineering will begin next fall semester here and deal with the engineering aspects of processing foods, the department of Food and Agricultural Engineering has announced.

The program is the first in the country and will provide training in the development of methods for preserving and enhancing the safety, storagibility, nutritional and asthetic qualities of food, said Doctor Henry G. Schwartzberg, protessor in the College of Food and Natural Resources.

In what is termed the largest industry in the country, the food industry employs some 1.6 million people, and according to Schwartzberg the job opportunities in the field are "excellent."

The program will cover methods of measuring and controlling food, designing of safe and efficient processing plants and equipment, and basic physical, chemical and biological phenomena regulating such qualities.

The food engineering programs started in Europe, and a professor from UMass went to Poland to inspect their programs. The four-year curriculum here will lead to a bachelor of science degree in food engineering.

Schwartzberg said the curriculum will be shaped to the needs of food engineers. The program is aiming for 10 to 15 students in the fall.

The program will also cover "characteristics and growth dynamics of existing and potential new food raw materials, food processing wastes and their treatment, consumer food product interactions, and the engineering economics of food production and processing," Schwartzberg said.

Jobs for engineers in the food industry include developing new processing techniques, designing new equipment and plants, developing new products, and supervisory, managerial and academic positions, he said.

Residents of New England states other than Massachusetts can qualify for admission into the program under the provisions of the New England Regional Student Program.

Life in a wheelchair

Collegian staffer Dorothy Clark spent a day in a wheelchair to ascertain how accessible UMass is for handicapped students, and to get a first-hand experience of being confined to a wheelchair. She was aided with the story by Kristi Furrer and Nancy Murphy. Here are her impressions:

Some UMass students often complain about having classes on the other side of campus, or having to go to classes when it's cold or raining. I know I have, and I have discussed this problem with my friends. But I learned Tuesday that for the physically handicapped student, each day of classes can present difficulties. As a Collegian assignment, I spent about five hours in a wheelchair to report what it is like to be physically handicapped.

Physically handicapped students are a small minority at UMass, yet they are here and their needs must be met. The physically able student does not have to put very much thought into entering a building on campus, but the handicapped student must deal with the barriers of curbs, stairs and swinging doors.

It was raining that day, and I was questioned by my friends as to why I was wheeling around campus on such a bad day. I simply replied that handicapped students have to got around in the rain and on other bad days, too. So with the aid of Kristi Furrer, I attempted to travel on campus as I usually do.

I contacted the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs, located in Whitmore, to obtain a wheelchair. The office provides auxiliary services and suport for handicapped students, information about the accessability of campus housing and suggestions about off-campus housing, a campus guide for the physically disabled, personal assistants, preferential scheduling and two vans with hydraulic lifts which provide door-to-door on-campus transportation for permanently or temporarily disabled students who request it.

Nancy Murphy, a student, spoke to the office about their vans. An office spokesperson said that all of their temporarily disabled students use crutches.

"We take them on face value," said the spokesperson when asked if a doctor's authorization was necessary.

Each passenger's schedule is noted and an appropriate pick-up is made in the van by a work-study student.

"We try to be there 10 minutes early," said one female student driver, "but the going gets pretty hectic threading through students who won't budge."

She added, "In the winter, students like to use the van for target practice. It gets pretty annoying."

"Right now there are 13 permanently disabled users of the van, and they all use wheelchairs," said the spokesperson.

We decided not to make use of the vans. We wanted to see what getting around on campus would be like by foot and by wheel.

Despite the provisions made by UMas for handicapped students in wheelchairs, we found that many buildings on campus have either minimal accessibility or no accessibility at all. Perhaps we approached this project from the wrong angle. Neither of us being physically handicapped, we didn't plan accordingly. That is an important factor in being confined to a wheelchair.

We began at Whitmore and made our way to the Student Union Building. After making a few detours and splashing through puddles, we arrived at an entrance ramp but encountered some difficulties because the ramp was covered with ice. A male student quickly came to our aid and helped us into the building. As we made our way through the crowd, we received sympathetic glances and people who were eager to get out of our way. Some people even tried to avoid looking at us. It reminded me of my actions and feelings when I saw a handicapped person. I always felt sorry for the handicapped, but I never really understood that it is not sympathy that is wanted. You can't really understand unless you are in that wheelchair.

To get to another floor in the Student Union, it is necessary to use the service elevator which requires a key for operation. We took the elevator to the basement so that we could enter the Campus Center without having to go outside again.

At the Campus Center, we decided to see how easy it would be to shop in the University Store. We found that the University Store does not cater to the needs of handicapped students. Our entry required the removal of a turnstyle, which was done by one of the persons standing near a cash register. We discovered that we could not shop in any aisle we randomly chose. We had to use those aisles which were wide enough for the wheelchair and those aisles which were not blocked by displays. Turning corners proved to be difficult also. Kristi had to move several small displays before there was sufficient clearance to push the wheelchair through. We decided to leave the University Store, since we were not able to shop.

Our next stop was the library. We chose to stop here because we wanted to find out how difficult it is for the handicapped to get books in the stacks. The handicapped person's entrance to the library requires ringing a doorbell on the west side of the building. The door was opened by a library staff member. From that point, the library was ours to explore.

In the stacks, books are easily reached, but aisles barely accommodate a wheelchair. With the assistance of a library staff member, a handicapped person who is alone can find information.

After leaving the library, we wheeled our way to the Fine Arts Center. The Center has nine ramps. The entrance we chose was steep, and without assistance I could not have made it alone.

The Center is easy to travel in when confined to a wheelchair, but we came upon a coffee shop whose doorway was not wide enough for a wheelchair. Because of this, I was not able to go in and see what I was paying for. A handicapped person without an assistant would either have to pass this coffee shop by, or ask for assistance from a passerby.

Back at our dorm in Southwest, we found that there is no way possible to enter in a wheelchair, because there are no ramps. We then thought of other Southwest dorms which we had visited, and remembered that they, too, were impossible to enter while confined to wheelchairs. We were angered by this thought. The only Southwest dorms accessible are JQA, Patterson and Washington.

Dottie Clark learns first hand what it's like to be a handicapped student on campus. Clark discovered obstacles all over campus that she had never noticed when she was on foot. (Staff photo by Stuart Eyman)

We decided to have dinner at Franklin Dining Commons because of its interior ramp to the second floor. The ramp is long and steep, and if a handicapped person gets caught in the dinner rush of long, slow-moving lines, having dinner could be exhausting. We arrived at the dining commons at 4 p.m. so we would not have this problem.

Yesterday I spoke with Pamela S. Hibbs, a handicapped student living in Patterson dorm in Southwest. Hibbs feels that UMass has done a lot for handicapped students, and the University is still working to make this campus accessible.

Now that she uses an electric wheelchair, Hibbs said she does not have to rely on the van for transportation.

For Hibbs, the days are basically easy. Her classes are easy to get to because of arrangements made by the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs. "The office is fantastic," she said.

"Getting around campus is not that difficult," she said. "It's a challenge, too."

Yes, for us it was a challenge, but it made us think, too. It also made us angry too, because we feel that many students, including ourselves, are insensitive to handicapped persons. Having pity for handicapped persons is not being sensitive. Understanding and helping is.

The next time you walk to the Student Union Building, think about what you are doing. I know I will.

Senate upholds SWA decision

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

In its last meeting of the semester, the Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night after lengthly debate to ".... endorse and support the Southwest Area Government in their right to restrict the showing of motion pictures, with racist and sexist natures, in their area."

Karen Kelly, the ex-officio representative of the Southwest Assembly introduced the motion on their behalf.

"The Senate has finally passed a motion that supports the stand of the Southwest Assembly has taken on this issue. It should help greatly when the case goes to court tomorrow," Kelly said.

The case between the Southwest Assembly and Baroque Enterprises will be argued before the Student Judiciary tonight. Paul Yanowitch, the Student Attorney General, will prosecute the case against the Assembly.

Opponents of the motion urged the Senate not to intervene in the matter and cited "the right of the majority of people to see what they want."

A second motion to instruct the Attorney General to represent the Area Governments in any cases arising over the pornography issue was tabled until the next meeting of the senate.

Representative James G. Collins (D-Amherst) also appeared before the Senate last night to explain the bills he filed in the legislature and to answer any questions concerning these bills.

Briefly, the three bills are as follows: a bill to create a commission to study the effect of faculty unionization on possible student unionization, a bill to transfer the deposit of the Student Activities Tax Fund to the Student Federal Credit Union, and a bill to have the state assume the bond debt of the Campus Center now held by the students.

Mt. Sugarloaf to continue their operations as usual

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

The beleaguered Mt. Sugarloaf apartment complex, which Monday filed for reorganization in the United States District Bankruptcy Court in Boston, will continue operations as usual, according to owner Carroll P. Sheehan.

The former gubernatorial candidate said yesterday that reports released by the Associated Press and printed in the Collegian which stated that he had filed for bankruptcy were inaccurate.

The 224-unit complex will be reorganized under federal bankruptcy guidelines with the assistance of the six Massachusetts banks which hold the mortgage on the apartments.

The court will appoint a manager to run the complex, floundering under a troublesome fifty per cent occupancy rate, until the owner is released from any debts owed creditors.

Sheehan said he expected to meet next week with court officials and representatives from the banks and creditors of the complex.

H. Richard Hartzler, UMass professor of business law, said the primary function of the court will be to "make the business survive so that it can pay off its creditors."

He added that filing for reorganization and not bankruptcy indicates that the business "wants to survive. If it files for bankruptcy then the owner is giving up."

The reorganization procedure is a "protection" from creditors who cannot sue a business for unpaid bills when the court is managing the organization, said Hartzler.

Sheehan said his accounts are largely paid to date and that he, in filing for reorganization, is planning for the future.

He said that he has already started offering enticements to attract new tenants for the complex. The complex will begin offering six month leases starting in January.

In September, Mt. Sugarloaf was the only area large scale housing complex to reduce its rents. Most complexes raised their rents.

Sheehan has said the low occupance rate at the Sunderland complex was the reason he was forced to apply for reorganization.

Steven Murphy, assistant operations manager of the Student Senate Transit Service (SSTS) said a SSTS survey showed the number of daily riders on the buses that service the apartments were off by 800, compared with last semester's survey results.

Murphy added that ridership had increased at apartments located closer to campus.

Sheehan said he filed for reorganization because of the cash-flow problems resulting from the complex's poor occupancy rate. He blamed the university's housing policy for the low tenant population.

News in Brief

Gilmore's sentence appealed

SALT LAKE CITY [UPI] – Gary Gilmore's lawyer yesterday asked the courts to free the killer from his death sentence because the state did not carry out his execution within 60 days as required by state law.

Attorney Ron Stanger filed the request for a writ of habeas corpus in Fourth District Court, contending the condemned man is "being illegally restrained" at the State Prison because his sentence has run out.

"He was sentenced to die, not to serve time," Stanger said.

But the lawyer added that his client would not be released if the court granted the writ of habeas corpus, since he is also charged with a second murder – the killing of service station attendant Max Jensen, 24. Gilmore was sentenced to die for the slaying of motel clerk Bennie Bushnell, 26.

Books closed on Liz Ray

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Justice Department disclosed yesterday it has closed its investigation of the Elizabeth Ray sex scandal and will not prosecute former Rep. Wayne Hays, Miss Ray's onetime paramour.

Under constraint of a judicial gag order, Justice Department spokesman Robert L. Stevenson refused to discuss the decision except to say the case is closed and "prosecution has been declined."

The Washington Star quoted a source familiar with the investigation as saying there was not enough evidence to support the only potential charge against Hays: That he misused federal funds by maintaining Miss Ray as his mistress on the public payroll.

Treasury Dept. aiding Arabs?

WASHINGTON [AP] – The Treasury Department was accused yesterday of coaching businesses on how to get around a new law aimed at halting U.S. participation in the Arab boycott of Israel.

Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D-Conn., author of the law, called Treasury's actions "an affront to the Congress of the United States, the President and the Ford administration."

On Nov. 4, Treasury issued proposed guidelines for implementation of the law, which denies certain foreign tax benefits to U.S. firms that cooperate with the Arab boycott of Israel and of Jewish businessmen.

Ribicoff, in a Dec. 7 letter to Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, said the guidelines "totally disregard the substance and clearly expressed intent" of the law, which was passed as part of the Tax Reform Act of 1976.

Lebanon prepares to rebuild

BEIRUT, Lebanon [UPI] – President Elias Sarkis met with political leaders yesterday on his plans for a new government to rebuild Lebanon as soon as possible.

Sidestepping the political problems that divided the country during 19 months of civil war, Sarkis is expected to name a cabinet of 10 to 12 "technocrats" – engineers and economists to guide the reconstruction process – instead of political or factional leaders who might produce divisive results.

Sources close to Sarkis said he will name a new premier by Thursday, probably Salim Al Hoss, 46, an American-educated Moslem banker who is his chief economic adviser. He already has drafted a multibillion-dollar plan to rescue the country's shattered economy.

Bomb scare in Moscow

MOSCOW [UPI] – An anonymous telephone bomb threat yesterday sent 1,000 Russian visitors hurrying out the American Bicentennial exhibition, the second time the popular show was interrupted in less than a month.

No bomb was found.

Several thousand people waiting on line outside the exhibition hall at Moscow's Sokolniki Park were turned away after the hoax, Exhibition Director Frank Ursino said. About 9,800 visitors had toured the hall before the threat.

The Bicentennial exhibition, "U.S.A – Two Hundred Years," cost $1.2 million to stage and features continuous showings of a travelogue film on a 360-degree screen, plus exhibits of U.S. prime-time television programs, the latest rock music, scenes from American history and Russian translations of historical documents.

More than 10,000 Russians have visited the show each day since it opened Nov. 12. Muscovites waiting to get in stand on line for three to four hours in raw, wintry weather.

Carter to select Cabinet of 'tough managers' by Xmas

WASHINGTON (UPI) – President-elect Jimmy Carter said yesterday he will complete selection by Christmas of a Cabinet that is made up of tough managers, but that he probably would not announce any more appointments this week.

Carter completed interviews in Atlanta with nine prospective officeholders – including four members of previous administrations and then flew here for two days of talks with members of Congress, governors and Pentagon officials.

En route, Carter, as he frequently does, stood in the aisle of the cabin and conversed with reporters during much of the flight. Much of his discourse was philosophic in nature, dealing with his thoughts as he approached the midway point of the transition period.

Carter responded mildly to consumer advocate Ralph Nader's criticism of some of Carter's appointments and interviewees so far.

"I would say there are at least 120 names that are being assessed and the only appointments that I've made are Bert Lance and Cyrus Vance," Carter said. "I don't know whether Ralph Nader had any criticism of them or not. When I move toward domestic affairs, even including Secretary of Treasury and Commerce which have dual responsibilities, then I would consult much more closely with consumer groups."

Carter had no comment on whether he would replace FBI Director Clarence Kelley, whom he criticized during the campaign for accepting gifts. But he hinted he would when he said that among appointments remaining after Christmas would be "a lot of other secondary, very important positions, some of the agencies, CIA, FBI ... "

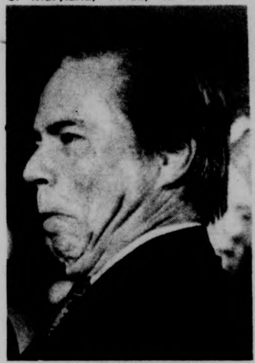
Republicans elect House leaders

WASHINGTON (UPI) – Relaxed, joking and swifter than their Democratic counterparts, House Republicans yesterday elected the spokesmen who will lead their first opposition to the presidency in eight years.

In the key contested election, House Republicans chose the more conservative of two candidates to head the Policy Committee which will coordinate the House GOP stance on issues for the next two years.

Del Clawson of California defeated Lou Frey of Florida, 71-63, to head the committee. In the only other contest, Bill Frenzel of Minnesota outpolled Marjorie Holt of Maryland, 77-53, to become chairman of the Research Committee.



Rep. John Rhodes

In the three top-ranking posts, John Rhodes of Arizona was re-elected GOP leader, Robert Michel of Illinois his assistant and John B. Anderson of Illinois chairman of the GOP Conference, all by acclamation.

For the first time in eight years, congressional Republicans will not have a Republican in the White House to speak for the party and be defended in Congress.

In a brief speech after his re-election, Rhodes said there existed an "opportunity for the Republicans which may not be repeated for many years, to take their story to the people."

He said, "We will oppose them (Democrats) when they are wrong and compose our own program and take it to the people."

Rhodes said the party must appeal to Americans better than it has and attract minority groups "without diluting Republicanism."

He told a news conference the recent election may finally have rid the party of the "political albatross" of Watergate.

Although congressional Republicans had nothing to do with the scandal, they have been made to suffer its consequences, he said. "The punishment has been rather protracted and perhaps was cruel and unusual."

The GOP meeting ended after only three hours while Democratic congressmen were in the middle of a third day of deliberation over new leaders and rules changes.

NATO agrees to purchase 2.4 billion dollar radar

BRUSSELS, Belgium (UPI) – The North Atlantic Treaty Organization agreed in principle yesterday to buy a $2.4 billion flying radar system but delayed the actual purchase until financial details could be worked out.

Defense ministers of the 15-nation alliance also ducked a decision on whether Spain should be admitted as a NATO member.

In a final communique, the ministers said they agreed on the need for a timely decision on the acquisition of an air warning and command system.

The system, housed aboard 27 Boeing 707 airliners, would enable the alliance to keep watch inside the Soviet bloc and give ample warning of low-level aircraft or missile attacks that would not be detected by ground-based radars until the last minute.

The ministers called for a detailed examination of financing before meeting again in a social session early in the new year.

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger held a series of meetings with NATO foreign ministers, giving a final assessment of the world situation and reviewing America's relations with its European allies. He also heard their opinions.

Kissinger said he would "pass on to my successors" views gleaned from his meetings with his European opposite numbers.

In a series of statements, Kissinger agreed with Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, also here for a NATO defense meeting, that the alliance is showing encouraging signs of unity.

Rumsfield stressed, however, that the continuing Soviet arms buildup could shift the balance of power unless NATO maintains a high level of defense spending.

Kissinger, scheduled to address the NATO Council Thursday, spent yesterday in meetings with some of the officials he has dealt with in the past three years as secretary of state.

Kissinger had a breakfast meeting with Sir Chrisopher Soames, co-president of the European Community executive commission and soon to leave office as well. Afterwards, a spokesman said, "The two men could look back to 1973 when Kissinger became Secretary of State with some satisfaction."

Then, Kissinger drove two blocks to the Royal Palace where he had a private audience with Belgium's King Baudouin.

Socialists want no US bases on Spanish soil

MADRID, Spain (UPI) – Spain's Socialist Party Wednesday ended its first national congress since losing to Generalissimo Francisco Franco in the Civil War four decades ago and called for scrapping U.S. military bases in Spain.

The Socialist Workers Party of Spain, expected to play a key opposition role in a future, democratic, Spain, also called for sweeping democratic reforms and drew up a charter of women's rights including the legalization of divorce, free abortion and free contraceptives – all banned under the Franco regime.

The congress was the party's first on Spanish soil in 44 years. The party was in power at the time Franco's Nationalists rose against the government and started the 1936-39 Civil War. In one of a packet of resolutions approved Tuesday night and released yesterday the Socialists called for the scrapping of the military bases treaty with the United States.

Judicial system 'on brink of disaster'

Report hits Mass. courts

BOSTON (AP) — A special commission appointed by the governor has proposed a major overhaul of the Massachusetts court system, including state takeover of court costs amounting to $99 million.

The plan, according to Harvard Prof. Archibald Cox, commission chairman, would streamline a justice system that "is clumsy and inefficient, indifferent to the needs and feelings of those caught up in a creaking machine."

The proposal submitted to the governor yesterday would:

—Consolidate the 72 district courts, Boston Municipal Court and juvenile courts into a new statewide District Court system;

—Merge the probate courts, housing courts and Land Court with the Superior Court.

—Establish a single budget to be financed by the state instead of separate budgets now financed by the counties;

—Make the Chief Justice of the state Supreme Court the head of the entire court system and create the position of court administrator to manage the system.

The governor's Select Committee on Judicial Needs recommended the state assume the cost of the court system over a four-year period. Now the state pays 20 per cent of the budget, and the county pays 80 per cent with property tax revenue collected from cities and towns.

The proposal calls for the state to contribute about $8 million to court cost next year, but Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Senate President Kevin B. Harrington said they could not be sure the state would have the money.

"I can't say whether we will have the funds in the coming budget to begin the process immediately," Dukakis told a news conference. "I have felt for a long time the cost ought not to be continued to be saddled onto cities and towns and their property tax system."

Harrington, D-Salem, said he believed the state would eventually take over the court budget, but added, "I don't know whether it will be next year."

The commission recommended consolidation of the courts into a two-tier system, according to Cox, to eliminate duplication and confusion.

The courts, the report said, "present a maze of separate tribunals with overlapping jurisdiction and, often, with inconsistent rules. There is no effective machinery for overall planning or coordination."

Under the recommendations jury trials could be held in district courts in both civil and criminal cases

EPA will review local decision against Seabrook

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Agency will review because of its potential national impact a regional decision against the ocean cooling system for New Hampshire's controversial Seabrook nuclear power plant.

EPA Administrator Russell Train refused yesterday to summarily reverse the Boston regional administrator's ruling against the $2 billion plant now being built by the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire.

He said he would review charges by environmentalists that the thermal discharge and intake design of the plant were inadequate to protect the ecology.

"I recognize that the proposed plant is of major importance to the people of the New England area in terms of its potential impact on environmental protection, job opportunities, energy supply and future economic growth," Train said.

"At the same time the case presents important issues of national significance. A number of other power plants in various parts of the country could be affected by the decision reached in this case.

"Every effort will be made to expedite this review consistent with the procedures established for handling such appeals," Train said.

"It only proves what we've been saying right along, that the regional administrator's decision does have an impact on further construction of steam generating stations on coastal waters regardless of whether there's nuclear, oil, coal, wood or garbage fuel," Norman Cullerot, spokesman for Public Service, said.

"It does also have an impact on plants that are in operation at the present time since EPA only issues a permit for five years," he said.

Public Service will have until Jan. 7, 1977, to submit its brief to Train. Other parties will have 30 days from receipt of the PSC brief to submit their own briefs.

Republican Gov. Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire, an ardent supporter of nuclear energy, said Train's refusal to reverse the regional decision immediately "can only be characterized as a cop-out on the future of America."

The Seabrook station will use ocean waters to cool and condense fresh water steam heated by nuclear power. Ocean water will not enter the reactor.

Bomb threat at Logan Airport

BOSTON [AP] — An American Airlines jetliner bound for Los Angeles from Boston was delayed for about an hour yesterday when 135 passengers were evacuated following a bomb threat, according to a spokesman for Logan International Airport.

The DC10 jetliner was searched and no bomb was found, said Clem Dion, the shift supervisor in the tower at Logan.

The plane, American flight No. 11, was to have departed from Boston at about 1 p.m., he said; it was delayed until about 2 p.m.

"It was called into the American Airlines operations reservations office," Dion said of the threat.

An American Airlines spokesman said there were 135 passengers, three crew members and eight stewardesses on the plane.

Ellison begins jail term

DEDHAM [UPI] — Paul J. Ellison, a former member of the committee which runs Boston's public schools, began a two-year jail term yesterday for stealing School Department funds through a complex check-cashing scheme.

Ellison was sentenced last week of depositing checks made out to School Department workers in his own bank account. He maintains he is innocent and said he paid employes in cash after depositing the checks.

"This is a very sad day in my life. I'm sorry for my wife and family," Ellison said prior to entering the Norfolk County House of Correction.

Ellison was a member of the Boston School Committee for a single two-year term from 1972 through 1974. He was on the board during the controversial and violent first phase of desegregating of Boston schools.

Judicial crisis in Conn.

HARTFORD [AP] — Saying that the Peter Reilly case has caused a "crisis of confidence" in the Connecticut justice system, three state Senate leaders yesterday called for a special prosecutor to investigate the state's handling of the case.

Reilly's manslaughter conviction in the slaying of his mother was dismissed last month after a new state prosecutor revealed three-year-old suppressed evidence that cleared the 21-year-old Canaan man.

The senators, Joseph I. Lieberman, D-New Haven; Joseph J. Fauliso, D-Hartford, and Robert D. Houley, D-Somers, said they planned to introduce a bill in January to establish the special prosecutor's office.

The case has put a cloud over the entire criminal justice system," said Lieberman, who is Senate majority leader. "And it can't be cleared when those whose judgment is being questioned are investigating themselves."

Pill problems

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — The executive secretary of the Maine Pharmacy Board said yesterday birth control pills are being dispensed illegally by some birth control clinics in the state — often to minors.

Richard Campbell, testifying before the Health and Institutional Services Committee, said the pill was being distributed in some clinics with or without prescription, but in any case without an examination of the patient.

"Birth control pills are being made available to 13, 14, 15 to 18 year olds and the doctor never sees the patient and doesn't even know the patient," he told the Health and Institutional Services Committee.

Black protest hits NYC Police Dept.

NEW YORK (UPI) — New York City's finest, their morale torn by thousands of recession layoffs, yesterday faced a new crisis — the decision of 2,000 black police officers to quit the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association to protest the union's support of a white officer accused of killing a black youth.

The vote late Tuesday by the Guardians Association, which represents most of New York's 2,000 black officers, was the latest development in the shooting incident that has fanned racial tension in the city.

The Guardians are angry at the PBA's supplying a lawyer and $40,000 bail for officer Robert Torsney, charged with second-degree murder in the Thanksgiving night slaying of 15-year-old Randy Evans.

Torsney allegedly shot Evans at close range for no apparent reason outside the public housing project where the youth lived. The officer was responding to a report of a family disturbance at the time of the shooting.

"For the PBA to put up the bail for Torsney, that was the whole thing," a Guardians spokeswoman said Wednesday of the association's vote to leave the 18,000 member union, already depleted by the layoffs of some 6,000 officers.

PBA President Douglas Weaving said he was "genuinely disappointed" at the Guardian's action and denied there was any racial reason for the union's support for Torsney, who is charged with second-degree murder.

"If the circumstances were reversed and it was a black cop who shot a white youth, the PBA would have done exactly the same thing," Weaving said. "We provided legal assistance on numerous occasions to black officers."

Weaving himself created some resentment among blacks with statements made shortly after the shooting that the incident may have been the result of Torsney's feeling threatened in a high-crime area.

"It was no ethnic slur," Weaving insisted.

The repercussions from the shooting even reached the chambers of New York's City Council which Tuesday elected PBA lawyer Edward Rappaport, who is representing Torsney, to fill one of its vacant seats.

Some council members took the occasion to level charges of police racism and brutality and eight councilmen, including five minority legislators, abstained from the voting in protest.

Ford receives job offers, may teach at Michigan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford has received "a wide range" of job offers, including one from the University of Michigan to teach at his alma mater, but will make no commitments before leaving office, an aide said yesterday.

Other White House officials said Ford probably will take wife Betty to the Palm Springs area of California after Jimmy Carter's inauguration and they are likely to settle permanently near that desert resort, where they vacationed after the election.

Ford has repeatedly declined to give any clues to the life he will lead as a private citizen, and the officials said no final decisions have been made.

Army Maj. Robert Barrett, the military aide handling Ford's personal transition affairs, said the President "has received a wide range of offers" from schools, businesses, organizations and other groups.

He declined to provide specifics and said Ford would consider all options, but had yet to give extended thought to any — including possible affiliation with the University of Michigan where he graduated in 1935 after starring as a center on the football team.

"The University of Michigan has offered a visiting professorship in political science," Barrett said when asked about a report by the Detroit News.

"But that is one of a large number of other offers received and, consistent with past statements by the President, all such offers are being held for review — with no decisions planned until after Jan. 20."

It's slightly discriminatory but we'll we'll have fun doing it anyway!

A Christmas Ralph

T'was the night before finals
When all through the dorm
Not a student was stirring not even a snore.
The qualudes were hung on the bedpost with care in hopes that a party would soon be there.
The parents were waiting for children to come
While thousands were dreading that annual run.
I had been up for seven days straight taking little white pills that kept me awake.
When out in the hallway I heard such a sound
That I jumped from my room and nearly fell down.
I pulled the door open and to my surprise, was a very large man with twinkling eyes.
He was dressed all in red from his cuff to his hat with a jolly old laugh that shook all his fat.
A white furry beard hid part of his face and he seemed out of breath from moving in haste.
"If you would, if you please," he started to speak,
"I'm having some trouble, I'm lost, you see."
"Man, you're so heavy," I wanted to say
But all I could do was stand there amazed.
"I'm heading due North but I seem to forget,
Do I turn left at Boston or go further yet?"
"Turning at Boston is your better choice"
I managed to say before losing my voice.
"Thank you, my friend, you've been a good boy and when I return, you'll get a new toy".
I stood there bewildered, perplexed and confused,
I had to tell someone this astonishing news.
"Hey Bosso, come out here!" I shouted next door, and Bosso came out and waited for more.
"I saw him!" I screamed. "Old Santa himself!"
"Completely in red and asking for help."
"You're crazy!" said Bosso, "You're just feeling ill.
"You better stop taking all of those pills.
"Haven't you learned? Weren't you told?
"The story of Santa is a bit too old".
I turned around and went back to my room wondering what it was I should assume.
Have I gone crazy? Have I cracked up?
or did jolly old Santa really show up?
As to answer my worries and to claim my fears,
I was called to the window by sounds in the air.
It was Santa and reindeer adrift in the sky and just before leaving he said his goodbye.
"Don't worry my friend I'm real all right happy intersession to all and to all a goodnight".

What happened America?

By KEN FONDA

"No nation can be strong except in the strength of God, of safe except in His defense," —Secretary of Treasury Salmon P. Chase 1861.

It has been almost a month now since our national elections and the eyes of our nation are now focused upon a man, Jimmy Carter. When will America wake up and realize that the quote I made above is true. No man can save this country, but the people with a firm trust in God will.

When was the last time you read the Constitution and Declaration of Independence? The Constitution is the very foundation upon which this country stands. The men who wrote this document were men of vision. If they were not, this paper could not have stood for the centuries that it has.

The times we live in today are not much different than those of 200 years ago. We are being taxed today almost beyond our capacity. We are in a period of social and political unrest. Our nation is as troubled today as it was in the time of the Great Emancipator, Abraham Lincoln. In our pledge of allegiance we say we are "one nation under God, indivisable," but our country has become a nation divided. The old contend with the young, parents struggle with their children, women against men, people of modest means with those who desperately seek basic sustenace. These problems that we face are seemingly engulfing us, bringing forth many social and political responses which are completely missing the mark.

The Statue of Liberty stands out in New York harbor as a beacon guiding those "huddled masses yearning to be free" to America's golden door of opportunity. Today the opportunities we once had have become problems. The people who were once the greatest example of freedom are becoming those huddled masses yearning to be free.

What has happened to the spirit of America? A look at the final line of our Declaration of Independence could hold the answer. That final line reads, "And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm Reliance on the Protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor." These were men who trusted in God. In the second paragraph of this declaraion, who does it say has endowed us with certain unalienable rights? Society? No! It is our Creator.

On November 20, 1861 Salmon P. Chase, who I quoted before, continued in what he wrote the Director of the Mint and said, "The trust of our people in God should be declared on our national coins. You will cause a device to be prepared without unnecessary delay with a motto expressing in the fewest tersest words possible this national recognition." The words choosen were "In God We Trust", and those words appear on all our coins and paper money. It has been this country's trust in God that has kept this country going.

Our nation must come back to God if it is to survive. We must as Lincoln said "...renew our trust in God and go forward without fear and with manly hearts. That this nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." Wake up America, you've got to come back to God's Word.

Gads of gossip

Scarlet Allen here, ace reporter for the Daily Confusion bringing you the latest update on UMass gossop. You can always depend on me to give you the benefit of the dirt. I just started writing since they closed down the topless restaurant up the road a few weeks ago.

Let me take this opportunity to clear my name and deny allegations of kinship to the derelict duo, Charlotte and Karl Allen. He's the chairperson of Senate Governmental Affairs and the one you occasionally see with the fuzzy head in the photos of the Senate meetings. No sex scandal in the Senate — everyone is too tied up in meetings to have time to fool around. The closest thing to it is the controversy over the relationship between Karl and Miss Allen. Their parents almost lost them when they were little, but didn't take them far enough out in the woods.

Speaking getting lost, the present Board of Idiots of this paper will be soon and we will have a new bored group next semester to tiptoe through the tulips. In keeping with Affirmative Action, there are two women in the ten managerial positions. And one doesn't have voting rights on the Board — our Women's Coordinator no less. I guess the present Board feels that if she has a desk and a sign, that's enough of an effort for them to make to deal with the blatant and inherent sexism within the paper.

I wish the heavy student politicos would practice what they preach and open their eyes and minds. I'm real tired of all the bad-mouthing that they do about ROTC — that 'heartless and oppressive' organization that mars our otherwise peaceful and harmonious campus. How 'bout some credit where credit is due! For such a terrible organization, I've seen many ROTC people spending long hours behind the Globe Santa table which is set up on the concourse until the 15th.

Collections are being made to give to needy people who would otherwise have a miserable Christmas. The money goes to people who have written in to the Boston Globe with special requests for gifts. One girl asked for a mattress so that her large family would have a second one to sleep on. If you're looking for the perfect gift for the person who has everything, donate your hard-earned money to a person who has virtually nothing. My congrats go to ROTC for their compassionate efforts.

— — — —

The Student Senate Transit Service is looking for a volunteer to jump out of the cake at the Christmas party tomorrow night. They asked me to do it but I can't afford to lose any more pasties in the frosting on the way up and out. Since women have traditionally been the ones to have the honour, I think a man should do it this year in keeping with Affirmative Action guidelines. Mighty Murph would look darling with frosting on his moustache...

Rumor has it that the SSTS is considering purchasing buses equipped with automatic pilot robots as drivers. I guess they figure it doesn't make any sense to pay people to drive when a robot can do it and not feel the frustrations of being treated like a piece of the machinery. Each route's robot will be programmed with the appropriate responses to the numerous stupid questions that people ask; "no, I don't go to Southwest" when the sign says South Deerfield, "I heard you the first time" when 47 people pull the chime to get off at the Fine Arts Center, among others which would undoubtedly be censored if I tried to print them.

— — — —

A gossip column would not be complete without more dirt on the lives of Charlotte Allen and Albert Sparks. When I heard they were holding hands in the Campus Center, I blushed from head to toe. I knew Albert was loose but I didn't think he would carry on in public like that!

It will be curious to observe any changes in the membership of Baroque Enterprises next semester. I'm sure that after all the publicity in the past few months that there are many people who are eager to get into the porno scene...

Another end

The end of the semester is stampeding toward us. Like any other semester, it refuses to go peacefully, but to die out in a ball of flames, sort of like your old toaster. I'm handling it like most deaths — grinning.

A friend of mine went to a Catholic high school. He had a very old nun for a teacher that used to fall asleep a lot. The class paid no mind to it and would file out at the end of the period. She'd usually wake up before the next class came in. One day when she went to sleep in the class, she died. It took three classes to find out that her nap was going to be longer than usual.

Or, how about the family that went camping in Europe. The grandmother passed away one night when they were pretty far away from a town; so they wrapped her up, tied her on top of the car and drove to the nearest town. When they got to the town, they went into the police station to find out what to do and their car was stolen, complete with Grandmother.

I've got a whole bunch of unusual death stories; but how about just one more... A woman came over from Ireland when she was in her teens and lived in Brooklyn for the rest of her life. For years she had been saving her money so that she could be buried in her native soil. After she died, her family sent her, in her casket, on a boat to Ireland. Off the coast of Ireland there was a big storm; so a helicopter had to come and take the passengers ashore. The old dear never made it to the soil, for the casket fell from the helicopter, plummeting into the depths of the Atlantic; never to be found again.

All right, if I've offended you, or the way you think about death, I'm sorry. We probably just look at it differently.

I used to work at the reception desk at one of the big churches in Boston. The sanctuary was very large and was sometimes rented out for graduations. Once when I was working, a graduation was going on for mortuary school. The hundred-plus class read (in unison) a code of ethics that was very descriptive. I started to laugh. Don't worry, I was far enough away that no one at the graduation could hear me. But, one of the ministers was in the office with me when I was laughing and he said that he'd like to see me after work so we could talk about my "problem".

The ministers were always bugged with me because I was involved in the social (not fun, but people oriented) programs, and not the church. I was always bugged with them because they were involved in Sunday things and not the programs. So we were coming from different directions when we sat down to talk about death. The big "D".

The way I see it is, the only sure thing that we know about life is that it is accompanied by death. The variables surrounding death are almost infinite, but the big "D" is the same. That minister tried for two hours to get me to say that I was afraid of death. The biggest concession that I would give him is that I was curious. That poor guy got so mad that he was shaking. I almost laughed, but I was afraid he'd have a heart attack.

Well, the point of this whole thing has been to say that I'm looking at the end of the semester in the same way that I look at death. The process itself may not be a piece of cake, but it's an end and a beginning at the same time. And I'm curious as hell (no pun intended), to find out what comes next.

Events of '76

By JON HITE

Now that the semester is almost over, it is time once again to review what has happened on campus. It is popular for magazines, newspapers and even the Collegian to present us with a "person of the year" but that is impossible this year due to a lack of noteworthy events. In lieu of that, may I present you with an undated chronology of the semester events. (Picture if you will the sound of a UPI wire machine ringing in the background and Lois Lane running to a Daily Planet staff car. Don't picture Walter Cronkite or Barbara WaWa, as they wouldn't be bothered):

Speaker of the Senate, Annette Guttenberg, made it two in a row when she quit that job in September. Guttenberg, who misjudged the ability of our Co-Presidents, resigned because "It's the job of the Co-Presidents to tell students what they know". Had Annette realized that Cronin and Martus had done that months before, she could have kept her job and the large salary that goes with it. Dear Annette's resignation, however, brought about the beginning of a powerful political machine based in Hilo, Hawaii and led by Brian DeLima, Jack Lord, Danno and Don Ho.

The Board of Trustees, who hadn't been on campus since the "student uprising" last April (actually they got lost in the library), returned to campus to hold their November meeting. The meeting, held in Memorial Hall, was "sparsely attended". That means no one came.

UMass President Robert Wood, who wants to be Governor but will settle for Secretary of HEW, has made a deal with President-elect Jimmy Carter. After hours of negotiation it has been decided that Wood will be Secretary of Agriculture and Amy Carter will be given a doctorate from the School of Ed. Said Amy, "I've been playing doctor with Uncle Billy, now I'll really be one." Wood, on the other hand, has promised to stop telling Kitty-litter jokes. After our last Agriculture Secretary, Wood and his Dukakis jokes will be a pleasure.

Barry Averill of the University Health Services appears to have been right when he said that "nothing illegal or immoral" has been going on in his department. You will remember that former SGA co-president Ellen Gavin and others accused Averill of all sorts of bad things. After an investigation by Hampshire County D.A. John Callahan, it appears that the charges are not worth pressing. We question why, then, Averill hasn't sued Gavin et al for all they are worth. Probably he figures that either you can't get blood from a stone, or maybe he might lose.

Porno King, Albert Sparks, and anti-porno monarch, Charlotte Allen, who debated earlier this semester have announced their engagement at the end of the school year. Said Albert, "I promised to stop showing Deep Throat if Charlotte would read the First Amendment." Said the happy Charlotte, "I promised to stop writing for the Collegian if Al would stop trying to play William O. Douglas." Rumors that Larry Parrish and Marilyn Chambers will be the seconds are false.

"Oh yea, I remember that", department. There are now 9 books in the JFK Memorial Library...Belchertown police are still looking for the dog killer ... Senate mourns bear Various able commentators, including the current Student Attorney General, have from time to time written about the farcical distortion of parliamentary procedure commonly known as the Student Senate. Though the literary critic may consider such writings to be the classic example of knocking down a straw man, to an actual observer, these expositions are if anything, understatements.

I had the privilege of covering the Student Senate meeting for this paper the evening of Nov. 10, the day it snowed, and the comic flaw of this particular session was the difficulty of achieving and maintaining quorum. Quorum, for those unversed in parliamentary procedure, refers to a particular minimum number of members of a governing body who are present. When attendance falls below this number, such a body may not legally conduct business.

This session began late as there were an insufficient number of members present at the scheduled beginning. Even after quorum was achieved, attendance was below normal. Later, about an hour before the scheduled adjournment, some solon, apparently eager to recess to the Blue Wall, discovered that enough senators had slipped away from the session to invalidate the quorum, thus making any further deliberations illegal. School's out, kids!

But this wasn't the only thing illegal about the Student Senate since the Senate itself is illegal! This disorderly turn of events was recently revealed by none other than Chancellor Bromery when he told the SGA that the Board of Trustees had never approved the SGA constitution. Oh laugh, sayeth the muse, but in the meanwhile, they are spending student funds without authorization. Hopefully, the Board of Trustees will soon rectify what could be construed to be embezzlement.

As Collegian newshound Rick Gureghian noted about the meeting he covered a week later, the Senate voted support for the 5 Puerto Rican Innocents ....I mean Nationalists. Apparently, the Senate believes a good thing is worth repeating. At the session I covered, they voted to wire the President and Attorney General of the United States to release "The 5". To prove there is some fire in the Senate, a lively discussion then ensued about the proposal, along the predictable it's-a-criminal-act-vs-it's-a-political-act lines. I learned that "The 5" could get parole anytime, if they would be admit they were citizens.

Now, Puerto Rico some years ago voted to maintain Commonwealth status with the United States, which makes every Puerto Rican a citizen. You would think that the Student Senate, itself a democratic body, could appreciate democracy at work and would therefore shun this nonsense. Well, you elected 'em.

And finally, the Senate outdid itself that night by observing a moment of silence for the late Smokey the Bear, who, until his recent demise, resided at the Washington National Zoo.

While such a touching scene could make a hyena weep, it should also make the taxpayer blanche. Need I say more?

Christmas Fire Safety Hints

Nothing more can ruin your holiday than to be devastated by a tragic fire which could have been prevented. Follow these suggestions on your way to a Fire-Safe Holiday Season.

— Natural trees: Select a tree, that suits your space limitations. Remove the base of the trunk at an angle, one inch above the original cut. Place the tree firmly in a sturdy stand and be sure it is supported well. Keep the tree watered well above the angulated cut. Check the water level daily, as the tree will consume large quantities.

NOTE: Do not rely on aerosol-type flame-proofing to fire-proof your tree. In order to adequately protect it, the process would be too expensive as every needle has to be coated all around several times its width. Keep the water level sufficient to tree consumption. When the tree begins to dry out remove it immediately outdoors for disposal.

— Artificial trees: Yes, you should carefully select an artificial tree, also. Plastic and metalized trees can burn, too. Be sure to select those that are labeled as made of slow-burning materials. Those with their own electrical systems should bear the Underwriters' label.

NOTE: Do not place strings of Christmas lights on metal trees. It is possible for electrical charges to develop on the tree, creating a dangerous hazard of shock, fire, or both. Use indirect lighting only on metal trees.

— Tree placement: Keep the tree away from any heat sources, and don't block any exit of any sort on campus. Do NOT use natural trees in your room. They are permitted in the lobbies and lounges, if you exercise the above care for them. Artificial trees can be used anywhere (with UL label).

— Lighting: Inspect lighting strings beforehand for signs of wear, loose bulb sockets, or broken plugs. Be sure your light s [illegible] are UL approved, and when i [illegible] are on an electrical circuit of [illegible] over 15 amperes. The same goes for electric candles. For outside use, be sure extensive cords and lighted displays are listed for outside use.

Thank you for your cooperation, and have a happy holiday season.

This is one of those days that makes an astrological forecaster happy because it's all good news. The morning will start off quietly and we'll even feel happy if we're feeling productive. The afternoon could be very productive, then become increasingly cheerful. The evening will be fantastic.

The emotional Moon is in her home sign, Cancer. It's the sign of feeling and emotional sensitivity. So we'll flow happiest if we're feeling cozy and secure. And if we're not quite as cozy as we want to be, then it's a great time to work in that direction.

Our spiritual focus, the Sun, is over half way thru the sign of The Archer, Sagittarius. The purpose of this sign is to encourage us to shoot for a distant target. Whether the target is on a map — travel, in a book — wisdom, or in the subconscious— enlightenment, it will feel good to take careful aim and then — shoot.

"Sag" is half-horse and if we're in control of our horse today the riding weather is perfect for galloping to the end of our farthest dreams. Neptune, the dream and compassion planet, is in Sag and this evening Mars, the high energy planet will line up with Neptune to give us a superboost towards our dream target. Especially if we're flowing with compassion. A similar configuration occurred last Sunday at noon; if you had a good time then, tonight's energy will be similar.

A few words of caution however: Mars is sometimes the god-of-war and Neptune governs drugs and drinking. So the energy of the day could lead us to over-indulgence, barroom brawls, and wild parties. If we lean towards the sober side and avoid glutting ourselves into hang-overs, today and tonight could be the most exciting of the year.

Pluto, the planet of rebirth, also comes harmoniously into tonight's configuration. So it'll be prime time for shedding the old and opening up to the trance-end-ental.

This is to be held the week of March 6 to 12, International Women's Day being the 8th. The week of events is being coordinated by the Title IX Task Force of the Campus Center-Student Union Complex which seeks to eradicate sexist policies and programs within the complex. All people interested in providing input are urged to attend by organizers and bring a xeroxed list of possible women speakers, musicians, artists, theatre and workshop ideas-contacts.

Those already involved in the planning are reminded to bring financial arrangement information. This is the last gathering of the semester, and organizers say it is crucial to "get the ball rolling" before intersession. Those who want to help out and are going to be here in January should call Charlotte Allen at 545-0341 or contact Irene Richards in Student Activities.

Pats' Sullivan wins, sole owner of team

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — William H. Billy Sullivan Jr., once an $18 per week sports publicist, became sole owner of the New England Patriots football team yesterday, parlaying a $25,000 investment into full control of the NFL franchise.

Seventeen years after he bought the franchise in the old American Football League, Sullivan bought out 2,500 public stockholders for $15 per share.

By his own admission, Sullivan, 61, now is nearly $8 million in debt.

Two years ago, Sullivan's corporate enemies kicked him off the management ladder of the franchise. He borrowed more than $5 million and bought his way back in.

On Wednesday, by a vote of 82,470 to 34,535, Sullivan got approval from the public — including many fans who paid $5 per share for Patriots stock in 1960 — to buy up all publicly traded non-voting shares.

The team, enjoying its best season on the field and heading into the playoffs, was publicly owned almost since its inception.

Only a handful of other professional sports teams trade stock publicly, and no others in the NFL. The league has a rule against such public ownership, but the Patriots had a waiver.

Rice balks at trade, left's his spot

SALEM, Mass. (AP) – Boston Red Sox veteran Carl Yastrzemski "has had his best years" and should settle for the designated hitter's role next season instead of competing for a starting spot, Jim Rice says in an interview with The Salem Evening News.

"A guy like Yaz has got 16 years in," Rice said Wednesday. "You've got to look to the future. I'm not only shocked over this trade, I'm disappointed."

The source of Rice's anxiety was Monday's trade in which the Red Sox sent first baseman Cecil Cooper to the Milwaukee Brewers in exchange for George Scott and Bernie Carbo.

Sox manager Don Zimmer said Scott would displace Yastrzemski at first base, leaving him to challenge Rice for the leftfield slot. The loser would become the designated hitter.

"The DH is for older guys," Rice told the News in a telephone interview from his Anderson, S.C. home. "Someone who has 16 to 18 years in the league, that's what the DH is for. A guy who can't run, and isn't up to it — who is just a good hitter and hanging around.

"The DH is only half a player. If you're 23, you've got to play every day. Yaz belongs in the DH. How many 37-year-old guys play regular?"

But the key man in the trade-Scott-says he might refuse to return to Boston if the Red Sox deny him a long-term contract.

"There is no trade," Scott said this week. "There is no trade until I okay it."

Rice was asked if he and Yastrzemski are friends?

"We have been, but right now it looks like a big mess when spring training comes because he, Yastrzemski, figures he can do what he wants. But if I go out there and beat the man it's my position, period.

"I'm out to make my living and he's out to make his.

"Yaz has won his batting titles but what else can he do? Is he trying to play 20 years? He's not going anywhere. He's already had his best years.

"He can't play every day because of his age. Especially if it's a hot day or a doubleheader or a day game that follows a night game. He can't do it.

Rice said the Red Sox made a mistake in trading Cooper.

"The way 'Coop' produced, how could they trade the guy?"

The 1977 season will be Rice's third with the club.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Thursday, December 9 — Born today, you are one of those impatient individuals who tends to complicate issues and actions as a consequence of your habitual jumping of the proverbial gun. Though intellectually you realize the importance of allowing things to ripen in their own time, emotionally, you seem virtually unable to withstand the strain of waiting. Destined to come very close to fame and fortune, whether you actually attain either will depend upon how successful you are at keeping your impatience from spoiling some of your more valid opportunities. Fail in establishing such control at crucial moments in your life and you may well forfeit even the minor gains otherwise promised you.

You may well enjoy a position of authority and envy during your middle years, but wheere -- whether such a position will be yours on the employment scene, the home front, or in the community at large -- may remain unknown until very shortly before you are initially so honored. You would do well to attempt to gain favor along whatever lines are necessary to secure your chances for success. At the same time, however, you are a person of tremendous integrity who finds it not only distasteful to compromise on principles, but downright impossible. Outwardly calm, you are inclined toward the kind of inner turmoil that ulcers ar made of. On the other hand, you are not one to fool yourself. You try very hard to keep your finger on your own pulse concerning career matters, family concerns, and your own emotional strength and health. You are careful not to allow yourself the luxury of slight ill health and, thus, will very likely avoid serious ill health.

Letter to the editor

Critics' views wrong

To the Editor:

We are but five games into the 1976-1977 basketball season and already we have experienced two problems with unity. The first dealt with the basketball team. Apparently, the problems are over. Alex Eldridge put on a super performance against Boston University, and Mike Pyatt is comfortably back in his starting position. Coach Leaman has his house in order.

The second disunified group is a small portion of the student body, whose spirits are voiced by those such as Nick Kotsopoulos and a '74 alumnus, Russel Schott. They would respectively like to see UCLA and Indiana playing against UMass twice a week, while a dummy of Mr. Frank McInerny is burned in effigy outside the Cage.

Mr. Kotsopolous, it's not our fault. The fact is Rutgers, Duquesne, and even lowly UConn won't play us at the Cage any more. It just isn't profitable for them to do so. Providence has refused to play us at the Cage for years. The reason is they get a percentage for the ticket sales, and they get a heftier percentage from the Springfield Civic Center than they would from the Cage. If you would like to see more games at the Cage, than you had better consider a varsity lineup of Amherst, Williams, and AIC. The idea doesn't thrill me, but I am willing to put up with a little inconvenience to get a better schedule.

Mr. Schott, it's not Frank McInerney's fault. Your comparison between ourselves and Rutgers neglects to mention one thing — Rutgers receives scholarship funding from the state of New Jersey, while UMass does not get one cent for scholarships from the state of Massachusetts. The athletic fee which students here pay every semester goes towards the administration, certain coaching staffs, and the various intramural activities which most of us participate in. UMass gets all its scholarship money from ticket sales. I am also surprised to hear you dump on a team that has scarcely started its season. You can believe that no one on the UMass basketball team, Coach Leaman included, expected to have an easy time with their new schedule. No team can commit miracles overnight.

This year, students at UConn will have to go to the Hartford Civic Center five times to see their basketball team in action. Nobody there is complaining; they are enthusiastic about their schedule and pulling for their team 100 per cent. The UMass basketball team is getting its act together. It's time we all did the same.

Respectfully,
Bob Paquette

Boomer, Bernie bounce back

It seems inappropriate to discuss, or even think about baseball when cold rain turns the weekend snowfall into a slushy soup that would even make daily D.C. diners tremble.

I should be writing about the UMass basketball team's unenthusiastic start or the hockey team's fast start. I could write about the Patriots, the Celtics or the Bruins, who are all at least tied for first place in their respective divisions.

But what do you do when a long lost friend knocks at your door? You don't just ignore the person. And when two old friends appear together? You stop whatever you're doing, because you're surprised, you're curious, and you have an inexplicably warm feeling within you.

Red Sox fans, welcome back George Scott and Bernie Carbo. They've come knocking at your door this week after doing time in Milwaukee. Sure, we had to sacrifice Cecil Cooper for the return of these old friends, but it was worth it, wasn't it?

At first I didn't like the trade. I didn't like the idea of the Red Sox trading Cecil Cooper for anybody. "Coop" is just too good a hitter, perhaps the best hitter in Boston last season.

As Brewer manager Alex Grammas said, "I like the way Cooper swings a bat. Cecil Cooper hit us as hard as any human being in the league last year."

Maybe some non-human beings hit Brewer pitching harder last year, but Cooper does swing a mean bat. He keeps everyone on the field on his toes, anticipating a vicious line drive. He even keeps the fans in the right field bleachers alert. He can run and field quite well. Also, he's six years younger than Scott.

George Scott — we all know him. How can such a big, strong man make a wild throw or hard ground ball such an effortless play? He looks so threatening when he points that bat at the pitcher, and sure enough, his towering drives have earned him the nickname of the "Boomer". Who can forget the Boomer in '67 with his gold-capped teeth flashing in the sun, smiling and joking with Ken Coleman after another incredible Red Sox victory?

Remember George Scott, the third baseman? Although he's recognized as a Gold Glove first baseman, Scott manned the hot corner very capably for several seasons in Boston.

Sox manager Don Zimmer said, "Scott will play first base. As for Yaz and Jimmy Rice, spring training will take care of that situation."

Winter commitments like these are often forgotten in the spring. Even though Butch Hobson was in junior high when Scott played third base, he must realize the Boomer's versatility. Spring training will take care of Hobson, too. The possibility of Scott playing third base will make Hobson a better player.

The Sox didn't just exchange first basemen. They also received Bernie Carbo, who is easily remembered. As did Scott in '67, Carbo played a key role in a pennant year. No one will forget his dramatic home run against the Reds in Game Six of the '75 World Series.

Zimmer described Carbo's role: "Evans will be in right field, but we might be two runs down in the eighth and Carbo will come up and hit one into the left field screen."

Other managers have pencilled in Evans' name in the winter, but Carbo always seems to start the season somewhere in the outfield. He'll make Evans, as well as the other outfielders, work a little harder.

In all probability, Scott will not play third base and Carbo will not start in the outfield. Their return is especially welcome, however. Maybe they can bring back some of the winning spirit of the '67 and '75 Red Sox. As well as providing home run power, the Boomer and Bernardo will provide some more competition and versatility on the squad.

The return of long lost friends is popular this winter. Willie McCovey's back in San Francisco and Rico Carty just returned to Cleveland. In this age of the free agent, maybe the owners and the players want some familiarity in their dealings. It's usually easier to negotiate with someone you know. Whatever the reasons for their return, welcome back, Boomer and Bernardo.

Wicks belts old 'friends'

BOSTON (AP) — Sidney Wicks, acquired from Portland just before the start of the season, scored 17 of his 19 points in the second half Wednesday night in sparking the Boston Celtics to a 104-95 National Basketball Association victory over the Trail Blazers.

Wicks, who played five years in Portland, also grabbed 15 rebounds as the Celtics posted their fourth victory in the last five games and snapped the Trail Blazers' five-game winning streak.

Tommy Boswell and Jimmy Ard, sharing the pivot duties since Dave Cowens left the Celtics last month, combined to outscore Portland's Bill Walton 25-20. Boswell had 17 points, including 15 in the first half which ended in a 52-52 tie.

Ard had only eight points. However, he turned in an outstanding defensive performance in holding Walton scoreless in the fourth period.

The Giants Speak

EVENING OF GIANTS

by Prof. dee Greaze

What is billed as an Evening of Giants may very well be more than just a concert, more likely it will quickly become legend in these parts.

The All Star jazzmusic concert featuring living legends in an international scope of jazz will be recorded by Pablo — RCA Victor records for the Fletcher Henderson Scholarship fund, a fund for Music students at UMass.

The concert features Dizzy Gillespie on trumpet, Jo Jones on Drums, Mary Lou Williams on Piano, Ron Carter, bass, and James Moody, Saxophone. The living legends are donating the recording profits from the album to the scholarship fund. RCA will record the concerts using two 16 track recorders. Producer for the album is another living jazz legend, Max Roach.

Informed sources indicate Friday evening will feature a Very Special Master of Ceremonies, an individual whose popularity on the Amherst campus is one of the highest esteem. The Friday concert will feature work by Duke Ellington, Fletcher Henderson, Fats Waller and others. The Saturday performance of the Giants will feature original compositions of the Giants themselves, both traditional and some premier work.

Tickets are still available for both performances of the Giants. Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets.

Suspending my self motionless, beating into the rhythm of cold hearts, breaking waves, conscious of nothing excluding self.

Had I impressed upon them,
those who would satisfy me? Their blank stares hovering in polluted space over castle walls,

crumbling under shovels
(forced into tiny hands).
Infants begin to understand the value of remaining clean free of sand.

They eye with wonder the spotless blankets until they follow the stares and find
- with me - an escape from sandlessness, slapping their tender feet they rush to be near (I no longer look... over them)

a smiling juggler thinking, and the children gathering loving my doing, wanting to see more and doing more for me than any near naked blanket

bikinied in the distance.

A Winter's Tale in Dance

by Leila Bruno

The Christmas spirit and tradition was blithely ushered in by the Boston Ballet's classic adaptation of The Nutcracker.

In contrast to the lustrous, polished production we were treated to Monday night, Sunday's matinee looked unprofessional and colorless.

It is not a ballet that relies on a soloist for its' success, thus the elements of the production values and ensembles are extremely important to its effectivesness.

Although I've seen more elaborate and eloquent Nutcracker's by the company in Boston their evening performance was nevertheless enough to discredit some of the blasphemy that was recently printed about them in "The Globe".

Based on an old Russian fairy-tale, the story involved a toy nutcracker being brought to life magically by its' creator--the mystical Dr. Drosselmeyer.

Together with little Clara (the recipient) the nutcracker takes her on an enchanting journey to the "Place Of Sweets".

Once there she is royally entertained by the Sugar Plum Fairy among the other dancing delights in Wonderland.

Actually the first act doesn't involve very much dancing, being primarily a series of three scenes enacted preceding the trip through Wonderland.

The interplay onstage by an abundance of children and dancers in Edwardian costume (looking shopworn and lacking lustre) was effectively accompanied by the strains of Tchaikovsky by an orchestra that hadn't previously rehearsed with them.

photos by Rob Carlin

The children worked well together in short sequences of movement giving the presence of gaiety and cheer in the "Christmas Party" scene.

E. Virginia Williams, the artistic director had told me that two sets of children were used in rotation--totalling almost one hundred.

Selected by audition from the Boston Ballet School they generally looked organized despite the fact that rehearsals had started only three weeks before.

Elaine Bauer, who has been described as being a "soloist in the best Ballanchine tradition" danced the role of the Snow Queen with characteristic stateliness and regality.

"The Christmas Tree Forest" scene was brought to life by Bauer and Snow King David Brown in a pas de deux supplemented by gracefully dancing "Snowlakes".

The aura created in this particular scene was glowingly resplendent due to snowfalkes falling delicately onstage which captivated the audience.

In Act II there was an abundance of dancing with considerably less children and mime at the "Palace Of Sweets".

Described as being "a smooth and polished soloist for both classics and modern works", Laura Young as the Sugar Plum Fairy exquisitely danced a solo that preceded the Grand Pas De Deux.

Whether executing intricately-laced fouette turns or leaping soundlessly across the stage, Ms. Young never lost the combination of the ballerina presence coupled with a candysweet sheen of lyricism in her solo.

Polish trained Woytek Lowski, a premier dancer from the Kirov danced the Cavalier well but despite the impressive height of his pirouettes en lair he apparently had some difficulty from landing without a distinct thud.

Together in the Grand Pas De Deux both Lowski and Ms. Young gave the musical climax a thrilling visual equivalent by precise performing and artistic projection.

The episodes enacted of "Coffee", "Tea", "Trepak", and "Marzipan Shepardesses" were all performed with more flair and accuracy than when first seen on Sunday.

At the matinee principal Anamarie Sarazin barely escaped falling into the wings when the four "Russian" male attendants that should have been lithely carrying her off stage clumsily lost hold.

Again in "Coffee" where a taste of Mocha-Arabian is offered the lifts and poses were as shaky as on Sunday--although the cues were at least acceptable.

Although both dancers gave the appearances of looking exotic and sultry, the female enchantress had an unsightly midriff uncharacteristic of a dancer which was all but enhanced by her scanty costume.

The final scene or "Waltz Of The Flowers" was very effective if somewhat confusing with a profusion of "Candy flower", "Bee", and "Dragonfly" dancers all growing and buzzing simultaneously.

Here a chubby but nonetheless graceful Dew Drop Fairy pique-turned and arabesqued her way daintilly through the assemblage, and remarkably enough landed soundlessly after each leap and turn.

The overall picture was a pretty one, but at that point I was making analogies to a dance recital.

Also in Act II was an improved Pas De Quartre which still showed signs of facial and muscular strain towards its' end.

The Grande Finale was a colorful sight with all of the company dancers and apprentices onstage; with only little Clara representing the peanut gallery.

Overall, Monday nights' performance was much better than the matinee regarding both the technical and dancing aspects.

Ms. Williams had said that the company had had only two hours to set up upon arrival Sunday from Springfield, with no rehearsal that day.

Although that would be taken into consideration for Sunday's mishaps it still doesn't explain why there was such poor planning. (Which was just one of the many attacks made on the Boston Ballet by the Globe.)

Ms. Williams had said that the adverse publicity hadn't affected ticket sales or the company's morale which seemed to be the general consensus of the dancers upon questioning.

Despite the technical and artistic limitations of The Nutcracker it was nevertheless an entertaining, non-thought-provoking, and attractive spectacle to watch.

Most of the audience in the capacity crowd seemed enthusiastic at the program's end, and doubtless every little girl went home with Sugar Plum Fairies dancing in their heads.

WHO KILLED MY BALD SISTER?
by Tom Eyen
CHICAGO by Sam Shepard
City Studio Theater, Northampton
Reviewed by
Tyla L. Sawyer and Richard Barrell

The City Studio Theatre is the perfect setting for any series of one act plays. Hand-built, two-tier mobile benches form a semi-circle (seating about 36 people) around the floor set aside for stage. Black curtains define backstage. Any set required can be placed anywhere between the curtain and the benches -- a truly versatile small theatre. There could be sound problems -- echos from the large room; swallowed muted voices, but fortunately the room itself is well suited to its new function.

Who Killed My Bald Sister Sophie? or: Thank God For Small Favors, a one act play by Tom Eyen, was directed by Joel T. Cotter. The script is full of intellectual puns and simple gut humor that bring two desperately sad lives into a new light.

The play opens in a carnival and, in the strange weave that one act plays are made from, moves to Egypt where the characters of Hanna O'Brien and her sister Sophie O'Brien are developed. They are on a low budget package tour. And they are talking to us about how they got there, how they got together after years of separation and how they became what they are. None of this is really important. What matters is that there exists a love-hate relationship between the two. Sophie, always one for the straight and narrow, wants the freedom and lust of Hanna's life. So she takes it in the form of Hanna's 'son.' Arizona is a young Narcissus. If he is, in fact, Hanna's son, then they are having an incestuous affair. It is likely that he is merely a young boy being kept by this aging woman. Hanna has had several illegitimate children, so it is possible that Arizona is her son.

Hanna, on the other hand, has always searched for affection and permanence and does not even realize that this exists in Sophie until she mysteriously dies. They are trapped forever in the play, in the carnival arcade.

The Barker, Joel T. Cotter, was perhaps the weakest character in the production. It was necessary to have a strong transitional character between the carnival and the Egyptian scenes. Because of Cotter's weakness as a voice, as a detached salesman, the meaning of much of the beginning of the play was lost, and with it, much of its continuity.

Veronica Lewis and Emily Kahn Terry gave life to what could have been an interchange tween two-dimensional characters. If not for them, the production would not have been as believable, as absorbing as it was. They covered, most professionally, for the softness of Arizona, David Kyle. Mr. Kyle was excellent as a silent body, either standing by the mirror or lying on the floor. If he had been as dynamic as both Ms. Lewis or Ms. Terry when speaking, the production would not have seemed as low-budget as Sophie's package tour. With a few costume changes and better male actors, this production would have been at its best. Unfortunately, Veronica Lewis and Emily Kahn Terry had to support the entire production on their acting talents alone and this made for an interesting, but not satisfying version of this play.

Following Who Killed My Bald Sister Sophie?, Mark Cuddy provides an outstandingly strong performance as Stu in Chicago by Sam Shepard.

Cuddy also directs the play which explores the ending of a relationship between Stu and his wife Joy, played by Margaret Van Sant.

Stu, who speaks to the audience from a tub on stage comments wittily on the life and motion outside of his bath tub, womb, world. When Joy attempts once more to enter his world, his fear causes him to construct images of barracuda to frighten her away. Stu cannot share his world freely.

Myra, played by Ann Marie Tessier, along with Joe, played by James W. Bowser, Sally (Sheri Sussman) and Jim (Neil Lazzaro), enter the apartment dressed in coats, sun glasses and carrying fishing rods, all joining Joy in the kitchen for biscuits. Stu rejects biscuits calling them a substitute for food. Imitating a pitcher, he throws away the biscuit Joy brings him.

Joy's departure at the play's end causes the others to seek their own identity. Without Joy, they must search for a purpose. The first casting motions with the rods are followed by blind walking, and finally hyperventilating, each imitating birth in a rhythmic dance-like sequence. Stu escapes from the tub womb and we feel the sense of relief which is felt on stage. Stu has reentered the real world.

Cuddy is an excellent performer and brings Stu to us with strength. By contrast, the other players are somewhat overshadowed.

One wonders whether Cuddy should have avoided both directing and acting in this piece to concentrate on the acting and leave the direction to another, who could have developed the other characters more fully. This is the only real flaw in this otherwise enjoyable experience.

One hopes that the next offerings at the City Studio Theatre will draw bigger audiences. They most certainly deserve the attention.

Bard a trois

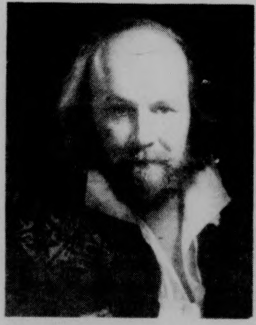
Shakespeare on Shakespeare
reviewed by
James F. B. Sawyer

Shakespeare on Shakespeare, a production of the Bay Colony Concert Company, was sponsored by the Roister Doister Drama Society and performed in the Bowker Auditorium of Stockbridge Hall Thursday Through Saturday last. Under the direction of Caroline Allen, the program starred Duncan Inches as William Shakespeare, Penelope O. Page as "His Dark Lady", and Deborah Hull, a theatre graduate of UMass as the Special Guest Performer.

With less than a tenth of the available seats in the auditorium filled, the program opened with Shakespeare delivering Antony's soliloguy from Julius Caesar from the audience on his way to the stage. This opening was the high point in the evening with only a few exceptions.

As the bard, Duncan Inches did an exceptional job, skimming through a stack of scholars' speculations about him and tossing each to the floor as he discovered more and more seemingly ridiculous "information" on himself. As Shakespeare playing his favorite roles, however, Inches fell short of the excellence which he exhibited originally.

Penelope O. Page was given second billing on the program. But somehow, I could not be impressed when I saw,her scanning her previous credits, that Ms. Page had studied at Emerson College in Boston, and "while there, she was a classmate of Henry Winkler, now known as Fonzie." It is my opinion that perhaps Ms. Page Felt that she did not have enough experience to credit herself with.



Duncan Inches
as Bill

Without question, the most moving scene of the evening was a portrayal by Deborah Hull of Richard II. Hull was seated in a stuffed easy chair that stood on a protruding lip from the stage. Displaying barely-checked emotion, Hull gave the audience a most perfect Richard, the human King of England. It could be that Ms. Hull should have been given Ms. Page's recognition.

Medieval-like music was provided by Mark Hopkins on the guitar. Near the opening, Hopkins walked out and began playing the opening strains to "Roundabout,' by the rock group Yes. This in itself was not bad, but when Hopkins bungles it, I must say, it detracted from the possible effect of the music.

The choices of scenes which were portrayed by the company were a bit away from the best-known scenes. One scene in particular, the company's version of a geriatric Romeo and Juliet, lived up to its introduction as being in "incredibly bad taste".

By the end of the evening, the audience had grown in number to not more than seventy-five people. Perhaps word had already gotten out about this production.

An Irish Porter in Kilkoa

A MAN'S A MAN
reviewed by Kevin Turcotte

Four of the characters "urinate" on stage, the set could have been poured from the bottom of the Ganges River and the costumes of some of the characters look like they were dragged through a sewer full of vomit. A MAN'S A MAN, by Bertolt Brecht, directed by Mark Smith is playing at Smith College's Hallie Flanigan Studio Theatre, from Dec. 8-11.

It is a strong play.

Strong, in the sense that while it may be visually repelling,there is a fine script backed by an equally fine performance by nearly all of the players.

Galy Gay, an Irish porter in the black hole of Kilkoa, India, is a simple, easy going and affable man until three members of a four man British machine-gun unit convince him to temporarily replace their fourth member.

The story proceeds from there like a McHALES NAVY episode, written by Kipling and directed by Fellini.

The Machine gunner's fourth man, the drunken Jeraiah Jip, has been forced to hide out in a Chinese pagoda, after losing an incriminating quarter pound of hair while robbing the pagoda.

The soldiers need Gay to save themselves from the wrath and evening inspection of "Bloody Five," a cross between John Wayne and a gorilla, who earned his name by testing his revolver on five hindus.

Once Gay is in the hands of the soldiers he is lost, and the basic theme of the play becomes evident -- transformation, and how easy it is to rearrange the human mind.

As one of the soldiers comments about Gay, "Throw him into a puddle; he can grow webs between his fingers in two days."

Another of the soldiers says, "You can do with a human being as you will -- take him apart like an automobile." Brecht's India is one of alienation, bleakness and men as dogtags. Truly, in this environment, "One man's as good as another -- a man's a man."

Gay himself completes his own transformation from meek and mild Galy to a "Human Fighting Machine," capable of single-handedly (and with only five shots) taking a Tibetan cliffside stronghold. During the course of his transformation he denies his wife, his past and performs a funeral oration, as Jip, over the coffin of Galy Gay

Gay is not the only character transformed in the play. "Bloody Five" is transformed from a fierce soldier to a ludicrous slavering gentleman, and finally to a "no-man" after he castrates himself. Jeraiah Jip is first transformed, to a god back at the temple and later to Galy Gay, as Gay's identity papers are the only ones available to him.

Unlike Brecht's Threepenny Opera, there are no memorable songs in this play, and actually they were its weakest factor. While both "The Song of The Scum," describing the life of a soldier, and "A Man's a Man" were good songs, "Widow Begbick's Traveling Bar Song" and "The Ganges River Song" were a bit hard to understand due to the acoustics.

Special notice should be given to the highly effective three level set, and the novel use of slides to establish the location of the action and help clarify the character transformations.

Even with the seriousness of subject matter, A MAN'S A MAN is a successful comedy and is highly entertaining. If you've ever signed a student number onto a check, had an ID picture taken, or had to fill in the place of your birth in a quarter inch space on an application form, A MAN'S A MAN should interest you.

The Madrigal Dinners being held this Christmas season are a traditional treat put on by the Campus Center Food Services and University Madrigal Singers. The idea was brought to UMass as an adaptation of the hugely successful Madrigal Dinners which are held nightly for one month at the University of Indiana at Bloomington. In 1970, the first dinner was put on here as a small event, mainly for the benefit of the children who attended. The next year it was expanded to include the singers, and has been a large scale, sell-out event in the Campus Center since.

When guests present their pre-paid tickets at the door, they are greeted by name and personally escorted to reserved seats. They pass a guard who is dressed in the traditional costume of a Beefeater.

Crackers and cheese await diners and a costumed wench peddles bottled wines. Next, the richly costumed Madrigal Singers enter with much flourish and fanfare, and take seats at the table of honor on the stage. Then, the "March of the Comestibles" proceeds. An entertaining dialogue ensues between "King" Dennis O'Brien and "Lord High Steward" Francis Garahan, as the foods are presented and tested for their fitness for human consumption! A decorated boar's head, 15-foot long loaf of bread, and "The Flaming Figgy Pudding" are among the visual delights presented for the king's and audience's approval. Later, during the dinner the singers circulate in small groups to serenade the diners.

The dinner itself features roast prime rib of beef, parsley boiled potatoes, butternut squash, Yorkshire pudding, and for dessert, of course, the flaming pudding with hard sauce.

To appropriately close the meal in the cheerful Christmas Spirit, carols are sung around the Wassail Bowl, and the audience is encouraged to participate.

Preparations for the Madrigal Dinner begin practically during the long days of summer. The Campus Center Food service starts making preparations in late September. The Singers are all members of a course directed by E. Wayne Abercrombie, and the eight dinner performances are the culmination of rehearsals which start the first week of school. The elaborate costumes are rented from the Costume Bazaar in Connecticut. Frank Baron, chef at the Campus Center, is responsible for overseeing the meal itself, and personally assembles the food displays such as the decorated boar's head, flaming pudding, and the two cornucopia made of baked dough which grace the singers' table. The long loaf of bread is supplied outside by Magaziner's Bakery.

Annette Trapasso and Roberta Potter who work in the Campus Center helping to arrange the dinner estimate that about 30 per cent of the diners are students (who pay $8.50), 40 per cent are University faculty and staff (their cost is $9.50) and many of the remainder are people who have participated in dinners in past years.

Why is this great amount of energy expended for an event not primarily a profit maker? Potter says, "Everybody works hard, an enormous amount of hours, but we all have fun, and we enjoy doing it."

Remaining dinners this Friday, Saturday, And Sunday evening are already sold out, and tonight's is bound to do the same, but reservations for next year will be taken after November 1, 1977. Hurry! Only 327 days left 'til then!

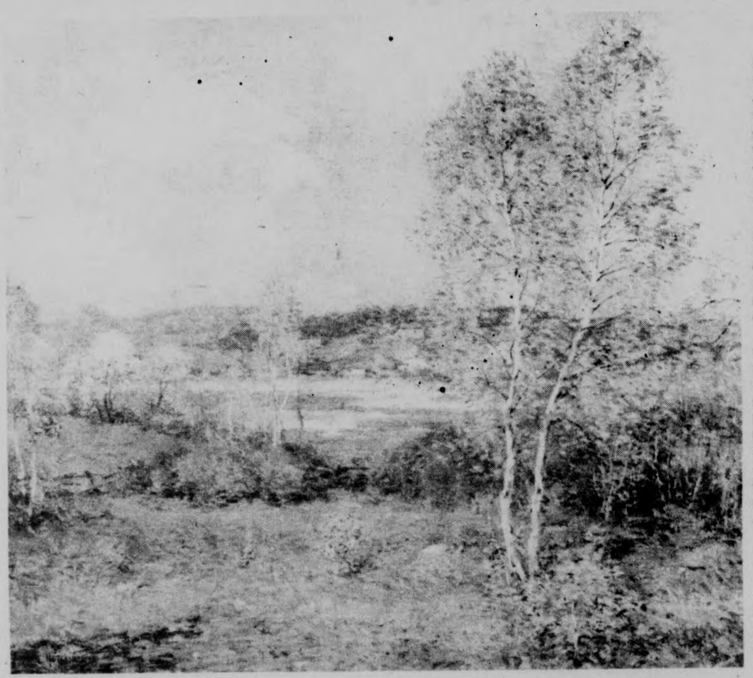
WILLARD LEROY METCALF: AMERICAN IMPRESSIONIST

by Hana Harris



An exhibit of the paintings of Willard Leroy Metcalf is presently being featured at the Museum of Fine Arts in Springfield. His name has not been prominent in the history of American painting, but in the sensitive and elegant landscapes of his later works one recognizes him as an American impressionist painter of fine quality.

Born in Lowell Mass. in 1858, Metcalf pursued his artistic career since the age of 18. He traveled extensively and his art evolved along with his personal growth through his experiences. From Massachusetts he first moved to the west and then in search of new influences he traveled to Europe in 1883 and eventually to Morocco and Algiers. Each of these periods is represented in his work in the exhibit. In Europe he was stimulated by the impressionists; and, his resolution of problems of light and color in his later paintings of New England landscapes reflects impressionist influences.

A gallery talk, conducted by Robert Henning the curator of the museum will be held on December 12 at 2:00, open to the public free of charge. The talk will trace Metcalf's evolution as a painter, dealing with the question of what is impressionistic about his work.

The show is the first retrospective exhibition of the artist's work. This extensive viewing of his work is being featured for the first time since the 1926 Carnegie Institute Memorial Exhibition following his death in 1925. The exhibit will be on view until December 26.

By Stacy Belkind

Are living artists concerned with the public's reaction to their work? Reviews and articles are written about the artist's work. However, they rarely, if ever, mention outside opinion. The artist cannot be in the studio and gallery at the same time and so, confrontation with the public is virtually impossible. Openings are not enough.

Should artists a care about the public's reaction to their work? This indeed remains the right of the individual artist. It is my contention that the viewer can reach a firmer understanding of the work through discussion with the artist.

Non-representational art is a personal expression transformed to a two or three dimensional surface. It is interpreted by the viewer in a personal manner, too, unless prior knowledge of the artist's intention is known. A still-life of flowers or fruit may have a symbolic meaning unknown to the viewer, but the flower and fruit are recognizable symbols and can therefore be discerned independent of the artist.

I went to the Student Union Gallery last week to see the works of the Aart Barn artists, where the "paint-ins" of Lorenze Pezzatini caught my eye. Pezzatini took the time to discuss his art and ideas with curious students visiting the gallery. The artist is very interested in student's reactions to his work, and so spent quite a bit of time discussing his "paint-ins" and ideas on non-traditional art. He extended the rare gesture of "please touch" to his works. Pezzatini wants people to explore and become intimate with his art, rather than admire it from a distance of ten feet. He emphasizes the need for discussion between artists and the public, a tradition that has prevailed in Europe and not in this country.

If Lorenze Pezzatini hadn't been available for discussion, the energy and creativity that is certainly evident in his art would have remained less expressive.

Pezzatini has painted for three years and is no longer interested in representing three dimensional objects on canvas. He finds the flat surface of a canvas too confining to express himself. Instead of the traditional application of paint on a two dimensional surface which is in turn hung on a wall, Pezzatini chooses to paint on paint. The idea of paint independent of a supporting medium is both exciting and workable. By letting his acrylic works dry on wax paper, Peaa Pezzatini is able to remove them from their boundaries and manipulates them as he pleases. His works have a spirit of their own, and it is the combination of the artist's ideas and subsequent translations that I find interesting and stimulating.

The UMass Inferiority Complex

Money may be a scarce commodity but self-esteem is even harder to find at the University of Massachusetts, where an inferiority complex has been festering for years.

Few are immune to it. Students, faculty, and staff alike have all experienced the symptoms of low morale and resignation. So have visitors to the campus.

'We have the materials of excellence assembled-- quality faculty, fine students-- but we're lacking real academic leadership'

- Professor Robert Paul Wolff

"When people come up here they're really shocked," said Paul Leahy a member of the ARCON student guide service at UMass. "They expect to find 25,000 kids crammed into a zoo, and then can't believe it's really so big and beautiful."

Why is it that so many come here expecting to find the worst?

The legislature, the private universities, the media, and even the UMass administration have all helped, sometimes inadvertantly, to perpetuate the image of UMass as a second-rate institution.

Though originally a school of agriculture, the University of Massachusetts of 1976 has expanded tremendously since its cow-college days, and does not deserve the inferiority complex it has been writhing under. But it has not been able to slough it off.

For three hundred years, the private university has been the traditional school of higher education in New England. There are ninety of them in Massachusetts alone. UMass is treading on foreign ground, and its rapid and recent growth is viewed as a threat to the private schools.

"There's no question that the private institutions want a share of state funds," said former speaker of the house David Bartley, who is now the president of Holyoke Community College.

Several private schools have lobbyists in the state legislature to funnel state funds into private scholarships. Inevitably, the lobbying serves to drain vital allocations from the UMass budget.

In 1974 UMass President Robert C. Wood fought to prevent Dukakis' planned cut of 30 per cent from the UMass budget. Dukakis had recommended $90 million for UMass; the University asked for $103 million and eventually received $101 million from the legislature.

More recently, Dukakis called the 1978 UMass budget request "ridiculous and irresponsible," and has been supported by the legislature in his attempts to cut it down. Wood said that 92 per centof the request would maintain programs and enrollment at their current level. The other 8 per cent, according to Wood, would merely allow for inflationary and cost-of-living increases. For the past three years, the salaries of the UMass faculty have not increased along with the soaring cost-of-living.

The origianl intent of the Massachusetts legislature was to build a first-class university to take care of those students who couldn't get into or afford the more prestigious institutions.

Half of the 8,000 or so high school students accepted for admission at UMass do go elsewhere. UMass is indeed considered a "safe" school by many who apply here.

Many of the most qualified students at UMass maintain the attitude that they're here because they aren't good enough for other schools.

"Harvard students think that they're extraordinarily intelligent and act that way, while students at UMass think they're not extraordinarily intelligent and so act that way." That is the only difference that UMass legal studies professor Steve Arons has found between the UMass student body and Harvard's. Arons is a graduate of Harvard Law School and also taught there for a brief spell.

"It becomes a self fulfilling prophecy," Arons suggested, "but I've yet to find any substantial difference in intelligence. It's all a matter of attitude."

Fifty per cent of a typical entering class at UMass comes from the top 20 per cent of its high school class, and 84 per cent from the top 40 per cent. This leaves only a small percentage entering with lower adademic records.

UMass Chancellor Randolph Bromery accounts for the 16 per cent by explaining, "We take in students that more prestigious institutions might not even consider. We're willing to take that risk because experience has shown that group to hold a tremendous reservoir of bright students."

UMass also holds an impressive crop of internationally famous scholars.

"We've got scholars excelling in every field from parasitology to economics here," Bromery said, referring to Dr. Bronislaw Honigberg of the zoology department, and to Profs. Sam Bowles, Richard Wolff, and Sam Resnick, all former Harvard professors of "radical" economics.

Robert Paul Wolff, another Harvard scholar who is now part of the UMass philosophy department, says when he was an undergraduate at Harvard, UMass "was a figure of fun." It was kept on short rations by the state legislature and was only a school of agriculture. It had none of the tradition of the midwest universities like Michigan, Wisconsin, and Indiana, where the state school is regarded as the most prestigious university in the territory.

UMass as it now stands only began building itself fifteen years ago, and in the 60's was expanding at the rate of 1500 students and 100 faculty members a year. UMass was a "buyer in a buyer's market," according to Wolff, and hired a "hell of a lot of very good people."

One immediate result was that the faculty got to be better than the student body. Teachers came to the classroom with expectations out-of-line with reality. They were disappointed and let the students know it, suggesting that "if they were anybody, they'd be at a private institution."

"Before, we had people from all professions and parts of the state," said UMass public affairs director Dan Melley. "Now they're mostly from Boston and private schools."

The media apparently agrees with that philosophy. The Boston Globe aggravates the problems of the UMass student by sporadically printing satires about the UMass campus. In 1974 student protest of budget cuts was made the object of scorn and ridicule in a Globe column by David Wilson. Wilson compared the protestors in the Boston Common in front of the State House to flower children wandering among the weeds. He said that they sat around listening to a folk singer-- and even in dentified the singer as Arlo Guthrie, "Arlo, son of Woody"-- who, had Wilson bothered to collect accurate facts, was really a UMass freshman from Brooklyn.

It seems to me that most of the state's media members, lawmakers, and office-holders are graduates of private schools. Governor Michael S. Dukakis is a graduate of Swarthmore College and Harvard Law School. It is Dukakis who selects the administrative board of trustees who make the major decisions affecting UMass.

UMass of 1976 no longer has the cohesive group of trustees it had in the 60s when it was growing, according to an employee of the UMass administration. Dukakis has appointed graduates of private universities to nearly all the positions on the board of trustees, and it is apparent that the board no longer represents a cross section of the state.

The 1,200 acre campus sits relatively isolated in western Massachusetts, separated from most of the state's ninety private universities. This according to Melley, has been an obstacle in UMass' attempt to achieve status in the state's higher education system, at least in the eyes of the taxpayers.

'We're isolated," Melley explained. "Our citizens in Boston and Worcester still believe there are Indians west of route 128."

Taxpayers then, most of who are clustered on the state's coast, rely on hearsay about the UMass campus, a good deal of which Melley say is false. They also have the media's inaccurate pictures of UMass to rely on.

Many faculty members suggest that an anti-intellectual administration is equally to blame for perpetuating the low self-esteem. Professor Arons believes that the administration has fostered the attitude that time -- particular ly the students' and the faculty's -- isn't very important. A good deal of survival at UMass is wasted on bureaucratic red tape and, as Arons notes, "You either fill out forms on what you're doing, or you do it. There's no time to do both."

'They expect to find 25,000 kids crammed into a zoo, and then can't believe it's really so big and beautiful.'

Michael Ford of the political science department suggests that the concern with paperwork might be the product of having administrators who excell in management, rather than academics.

And Philosophy Professor Wolff, who doubts that administrative management is a major cause of the university's low self-esteem, agrees that it is one of the causes.

"We have the materials of excellence assembled-- quality faculty, fine students--but we're lacking real academic leadership," Wolff said.

Since the resignation of Chancellor Scholar Oswald Tippo in 1971, and more recently since the budget crunch in 1974, there has been little encouragement of faculty scholarship and no merit rewards for it. Salary increases for UMass faculty have been prohibited for three years now, a situation that the presidents of the state's public universities had originally blamed on the legislature. Yet Senator Kevin Harrington announced recently, and the presidents admitted, that the prohibition against merit and salary increases at the state schools originated with the presidents of those institutions. And not with the legislature.

The faculty at UMass interprets the prohibition to mean that the 1976 administration either has no concept of academic excellence, or takes little pride in it presence. The faculty feels the administration has failed to maintain and atmosphere where scholarship is prized and valued, and resignation--figuratively and literally--has been the result.

Its most recent Alumni Fund Drive received contributions from 24 per cent of its alumni, a figure that makes UMass "one of the best in the country, as far as the proportion of alumni givers is concerned," according to John F. O'Connell, Jr., '69', director of the alumni annual fund.

Despite the administration's alleged lack of encouragement, however, and despite the media, the legislature, the private schools and a discouraging history, UMass must be doing something right.

"It's a rare school, public or private, that can come close to 25 per cent in alumni donations," O'Connell said, citing it as testimony to the high regard with which UMass alumni leave their alma mater.

Whether or not future UMass alumni will leave UMass with equally high regard may well depend upon the strangling hold the inferiority complex maintains on the UMass campus.

Jimmy Cliff
In Concert the Best of (Warner Brothers)

Inner Circle
Reggae Thing
(Capitol)

In case you haven't heard, Reggae Music is making its way across the U.S.A. These two albums represent the two different styles of reggae, 1. commercialism and 2. religious-political activism, and are both worth your attention.

Jimmy Cliff has moved a ways from pure reggae. On this album, the chord progressions and basic rhythm retains the reggae feel; however, the instrumentation and arrangements ring of rock and soul. As was mentioned in a review of Cliff's Northampton concert last month, he spent several years in England, and that he was somewhat Anglicized is clear. Of interest is the fact that this record is produced by Andrew Loog Oldham, formerly the producer for the Rolling Stones. The reggae-rock mixture that Cliff has created is powerful and enjoyable.

In Concert the Best of is a unique album in that it presents the artist's greatest hits along with the live feel which is usually, and certainly here, superior to the sometimes too-perfect studio productions. The album is made for dancing, partying, singing along...good times in general. The cuts are all tight, without any of the superfluous jamming which often mars live albums.

Cliff gives us a range of his hits from the early Under the Sun, Moon, and Stars, through Many Rivers to Cross and Vietnam from the Wonderful World, Beautiful People album to the hits from his movie The Harder They Come, and finally the most recent on this album, Struggling Man. Also included is Cat Stevens' Wild World. Yes, it's done reggae style, and is at least as good as the Cat's original version.

So if you missed his concert last month, or if you've been wondering if all this furor about reggae is worth your attention, this album is a good one to initiate yourself into a new musical vogue and a fine artist.

Paul McCartney and Peter Townshend of the Who.

The difference between the Inner Circle album, Reggae Thing, and Jimmy Cliff's album is at least as great as the difference between the two artists above. The Inner Circle is a Jamaican band. Period. The Jamaican roots are the sole force behind this album. The songs are about Jamaica: its people, religion, and problems. The band members are Rastafarians, the religious cult arising out of the poverty and suffering of Black Jamaica. And the songs on their album are meant to lift their brothers up, instill in them some hope and perhaps some anger. There are many allusions to revolution and religion: following Jah (God) back to Babylon, the promised land. There's even one for UMass students, about how the Rastas are tired of having to smoke their weed in the bushes.

Where In Concert the Best of is pervaded with feelings of good times and commercial acceptance, Reggae Thing was made for a much more defined audience and with a deeper purpose than easy listening music. Thus its 'commercial potential' is decreased. However, it is an important and interesting musical and cultural statement.

Funkadelic
Hardcore Jollies
(Warners)

While last month's Tales of Kidd Funkadelic (Westbound) deservedly languishes in the zone of zero funkativity, Hardcare Jollies does not. As part of the PARLIFUNKADELIC THING, Hardcore Jollies is their first for Warners and the companion (Alter-ego as mentor maggot brain George Clinton puts it) lp to the Parliment's hot and cold The Clones of Dr. Funkenstein. As it stands now, Jollies has succeeded in gettin' the funk (or P. Funk) where the Parliments didn't. This is the Funkadelic's strongest lp since the classic America Eats Its Young and Standing on the Verge of Getting It On albums.

"Dedicated to the Guitar Players of the Word", Hardcore Jollies fulfills to the letter the promise of the Funkadelic's crazed heavy metal funk. Critics kid you not when they call George Clinton and his maggot breath variations (Parlifunkadelic; the Zappas of soul. Would you ever have dreamed of a black funk band playing hard rock, sporting wacked out concepts about bringing true funk to mother earth? For Hardcore Jollies, Clinton & the Funkadelics have written some of their hardest riffs ever. The twin guitars of Mike Hampton and Gary Shidder are at their manic best. The title track is their showcase, not to mention the burned-out live version (recorded in true Funkadelia style — in an airport hanger!!) of "Cosmic Slop". True there are a couple of weak spots on Jollies, but it does succeed in tearing the roof of that sucker more than once. Who knows, maybe next time out the Funkadelics will have their own Mothership Connection to bestow upon us. And remember — give up the funk! (A-)

THIN LIZZY
Johnny The Fox
[Mercury]

One minor hit ("Whiskey In A Jar") and a couple of dismissable albums found Thin Lizzy hitting the panic button. Well that was until last year. Thin Lizzy finally broke big in the States with one grand hit single called "The Boys Are Back In Town" - a combination of Springsteen fever and Allman-like twin lead guitar work. The fusion of these two elements created havoc on the airwaves - the hit of the summer. Jailbreak, the album it was culled from, was a charmer too.

Johnny The Fox is the followup and is consistently better than its predecessor. While there's no "The Boys Are Back In Town", there is plenty of equally worthy material. Again the Springsteen touch (no way a rip- Lizzy had the image before Brucie did) and spiffy guitar slinging make an exciting rock and roll album. "Johnny", the lead track, moves with speed - the guitars really whine, as does the new single "Rocky". Personally, "Borderline" does it for me, one of their best ballads. "Fool's Gold" is a surprise, a very ambitious tune for them. Guitarists Scott Gorham and Brian Robertson are a real team throughout Fox.

By no means are Thin Lizzy England's version of Bruce Springsteen. They are simply a good rock and roll band that after struggling for years, finally hit the big time. Jailbreak, and now Johnny The Fox, shows why. (B)

SEALS & CROFTS
Sundan Village
[Warner Brothers]

As far as your basic live album goes, Sudan Village is difficult to get enthusiastic about. To begin with, while most artists opt for recording live versions of their better known efforts, Seals & Crofts present here an album worth little to fans wishing to hear their hits. Instead, we get material from some of the dynamic duo's early albums mixed along with songs previously unrecorded. There are no "Hummingbird"s or Summer Breeze"s to be found anywhere. The songs performed here seem aimless, as Jim and Dash are continously floating around totally directionless. For the most part, these guys exhibit as much emotional intensity as does a quart of prune juice. The lone exception to this condition occurs during the disc's final three minutes of "audience participation," when Jim Seals' fiddle playing evokes the true spirit of a genuine down home hoedown (Jim was the state fiddle champion of Texas way back when he was merely a teenager, so he is certainly adept when the time comes for fiddlin' around). The lone other "highlight" of this album is a nine minute instrumental compostion, the jazzy "Thunderfoot." It features fine synthesizer courtesy of Bill Cuomo, then gives way to the tasty electric guitar of Marty Walsh. All in all, this cut brings Loggins & Messina to mind; it sounds exactly like something they would have been at home with.

Among the lowlights, the lowest occurs at the end of side one, "Baby I'll Give It To You." It sounds just like a rehashed version of the twosome's earlier hit from this year, "Get Closer." Throughout, this album's weak moments definitely outnumber the strong ones. I give Sudan Village a "another step backwards for two guys who can scarcely afford many more" C-.

Sincerely
(Shelter)

Heard many really good records lately? Me neither, but here are two that have been a big help in making this year slightly more bearable. Both are throwbacks to the mid-60's, when albums had 12 or more songs and music was melodic and memorable. For those fortunate enough to not live around here last year, the Dwight Twilley Band are already familiar, having made the national top ten with one of the very best 45's of 1975, "I'm On Fire." For some unfathomable and certainly unjustifiable reason, singles stations in Boston (and New York) ignored it completely, the follow-up, the equally sublime "You Were So Warm" went nowhere, and to top things off, Twilley's record company, Shelter, became inactive for half a year. Finally, the album came out, and it was well worth the wait.

There are more should-be hits on Sincerely than on any other record since Eric Carmen, and what better indication of listenability is there than that? (Unfortunately, the current single, "Could Be Love," while very good, isn't the best, and appears to be bombing while Peter Frampton mediocrities and disco garbage get the air play). The songs are incredibly varied: hard, soft and in-between, and the only thing they take from 10 years ago is their tunefulness; they don't sound dated at all. A must

THE ALLMAN BROTHERS BAND
Wipe The Windows/
Check The Oil/Dollar Gas
[Capricorn]

Well, here it is folks. The Allman's epitaph on vinyl. The Allman Brothers Band, as we know it, has passed away. It has moved on to that big Fillmore in the sky. Some of the boys are still around, but the band is irreversibly gone. Whether it died with the group's recent breakup, or following Duane's death is a matter for debate.

Wipe The Windows/Check The Oil/Dollar Gas would be, under most circumstances, a fine live album. Yet one cannot help but compare it tothe band's previous live double - Live at Fillmore East, the album that is to many the definitive live rock LP. Not an altogether fair comparison, but an inevitable one nonetheless. For there is one major difference between the two. Duane Allman's gut-wrenching slide guitar is present on Fillmore. On Wipe The Windows it is not. Not to take anything away from Dickie Betts, who is as skilled a rock guitarist as any in the business, but obviously two superior guitar players are better than one, and in this case it shows. Wipe The Windows just doesn't have the sheer energy and drive that Fillmorehad. Bett's classic instrumental, 'In Memory of Elizabeth Reed' takes up all of side two and through its entire 17 minutes never seems to gel. 'Wasted Words', which opens the album, is a mediocre version of an awful song. 'Southbound' and 'Ramblin' Man' are showcases for Betts' picking, but sound no better nor worse than the originals on the Brothers and Sisters LP. Side three is more Betts guitar with some nice piano work by Chuck Leavell.

Side four is superior Allmans. It begins with the best, and shortest cut on the album - 'Don't Want You No More', and old Spencer Davis instrumental featuring piano-guitar interplay. The boys heat up on 'It's Not My Cross To Bear', and then really cook on 'Jessica', the set's only improved on song. On this side the energy and force seem to have returned and the band sounds as it did at the Music Hall only a month after Duane's death in '72, after which the Boston Globe's Ernie Santosuosso called them the best rock aggregation in the country. The side raises the calibre of the entire album and leaves us with one last admirable performance by the now deceased Allman Brothers Band. May they Rest in Peace.

WISHBONE ASH
New England
[Atlantic]

After the departure of guitarist Ted Turner from the ranks of Wishbone Ash, the band settled down to a series of uninspiring albums culminating with last year's thoroughly dull Locked In. So atuarally I had no high hopes for their latest releases, New England (So named because the band has forsaken England for the States, specifically Connecticut).

But Jesus Christ! - New England is a sparkling turnabout for Wishbone Ash. They've finally delivered an album worthy of past classic's, namely Live Dates and Argus. For the first time in a long time, the guitar duo of Andy Powell and Laurie Wisefield click like the old Powell-Ted Turner years.

New England's compositions straddle the line of Allman Brothers rock and shallow heavy metal. Wishbone is a lot more economical too- instead of long pointless jams we have concise instrumental statements. "Mother of Pearl" and "Runaway" will become instant concert highlights- both guitarists set sparks flying. "Lonely Island" could be ash's best ballad yet, with some nice cold blue guitar flights.

New England's gem is "Lorelei", a neat mix of ballad and sonic guitar slinging. Old Wishbone fans will cry tears of joy when this comes over the speakers- Andy Powell's careening axe playing trades off quite well with Wisefield's more understated playing.

The overall effect of New England sees a band that was spiritually dead come back with a new outlook. It may have taken two albums and three years to do it, but New England shows that Wishbone Ash is still a viable, if sorely needed band. [B‡]
